'60-'61 TV SEASON—RATINGS

Chi's Nomadic Beard-and-Sandal Set Moves Again, May Cue New Cafe Belt

By LES BROWN

Chicago, Nov. 1.

The Beats—bohemians by another name—are in transition again in Chicago, and canny cabaret operators are studying carefully the areas where the colony is likeliest to reassemble. Three seedy sectors on the finge of the Near North Side seem at this point the promising prospects, and anyone who has followed the movements of the beard-and-sandal set in the last 15 years knows that one of these streets probably is going to be, eventually, the Windy City's newest cabaret belt.

Where the Beats go, there's night life; and where there's life, there's opportunity. That's been the pattern in the Windy City since the end of World War II, starting with the flowering of the Near North Side (whose Rush Street is now Chi's main nitery-eatery artery) and following with the up-Beating of the section called Old Town. Both are still thought of as bohemian areas, but the only bohemians left are the moneyed ones. The others have moved elsewhere.

Unlike the racial minorities who have a way of bringing down land values, the Beat element is nearly always a boom to real estate. They attract curiosity seekers, and many find it stimulating to live in their Left-Bankish midst. That's why the Beats are so nomadic here. Sooner or later the influx of swells drives the rents up and the Beats out.

Their latest contribution to area redevelopment in Chi is North

Eichmann Trial Stirs Beaucoup Pix-TV Interest

Tel Aviv, Nov. 1.

Adolf Eichmann, the Nazi held responsible for extermination of millions of Jews in Europe, now awaiting trial here as a criminal, is now also the cause of a small-scale war in the film industry.

Several companies announced intention to make a picture about Eichmann's life, his horrible crimes, his capture, and the forthcoming trial. The Israeli government approached by several producers to cooperate with secret documents, to give more information about the way Eichmann was tracked down and to tell the true story of how he was caught.

Israeli governmental reply to such requests has been—help the way help is given . foreign producer on any subject, but no secrets, no documents, and no exclusivity. So everybody is on his ow That is why they are all in a h

England's Queen in 1st Fiction Feature Film

London, Nov. 1.

The Queen is to make her first appearance in a fiction feature film, Michael Powell's "The Queen's Guards," which he is shooting here for 20th-Fox. But it will not mean that she will have to get up early to go to Shepperton Studios.

With permission and approval from Buckingham Palace, Powell will be using shots of her taken at this year's Trooping of the Color ceremony. For probably the first time in show biz, the Guards will be taken seriously. The pic stars Raymond Massey, his son Daniel; Peter Myers and Robert Stephens. Lord Patrick Beresford, a former escort of Princess Margaret, has been signed up as one of technical advisers.

SPONSORS' ONLY WORRY: NUMBERS

By GEORGE ROSEN

On the basis of what was expected, it's not at all surprising that the new tv season has turned out to be a dog, with practically everything "new" a carbon copy of what has gone before—be it situation comedy, suspense, adventure, crime, or you name it. Only the four debates between the two Presidential aspirants saved the new semester from being a total flop. Otherwise, in terms of making any impression on the U.S. populace (with the exception of the sponsors and the agencies concerned) it wouldn't have mattered whether there had been a premiere this season or not.

With the best of luck, two, three or maybe four of the new season's entries may develop into rating clicks. What and where they are is still to be determined, and won't probably be known until mid-November, after a couple of National Nielsen rosters have been posted. They could conceivably be an "Andy Griffith Show" (CBS) or a Fred MacMurray in "My Three Sons" (ABC) or "Candid Camera" (CBS), which, when you get right down to it, is a decade-old format. You can go even further back for the genesis of the other two.

Sponsors and their agencies are rightfully worried, but those riding on 13-week cycles have until Dec. 1 or thereabouts to make up their minds about a renewal. What happens between now and then will determine the fate of many a show. (Some aren't even waiting that long, "Dan Raven" on NBC-TV, for

Payola Jockeys Back in Action

Payola is said to be as rampant as ever, more so in certain key cities than others, and reportedly also more directly from the disk manufacturers than from the distributors.

Aggravating the situation have been any numbers of deejays who, conditioned by the publicity anent payola, wanted to know "where have I been all my life?" and have gotten ideas about largesse—and getting it.

Understood that the distributors, fearful of the consent decrees, have been leaving all of it to the diskeries, and the latter, eager for that platter-chatterer's plug, have been "getting it up." One west coast key city, because of its historic reputation as a source from where a "record take off" (meaning nationally), is said to be the most flagrant payola capital.

Kirk Douglas Talks of Politicking, Susskind and U.S.-Brand Diplomacy

Detroit, Nov. 1.

Kirk Douglas, in an interview with WJR's Dan Price to be broadcast on "Composite" Friday (4), said he is against actors taking an active role in political activities. He also had some tart comments to make about David Susskind. Douglas thinks, in addition, that the State Department should brief actors working abroad and use them as ambassadors of good will.

A transcript of the taped interview shows this answer to Price's question: "How do you feel about actors' involvements in political affairs? What is your opinion of Frank Sinatra and Robert Montgomery, to mention a few?"

Douglas, who was plugging his movie "Spartacus" which opened this week at the Madison here, answered: "I feel that people in our business should stand back as much as possible from taking part in active political activities. In general, I personally feel very strongly about the political campaign going on now, but as an actor I do not think it is right for me to utilize my position, right now talking to you for other people to listen, to say which candidate I prefer. I think that would be an unfair use of my position."

In commenting on Price's question relating to some "rather unpleasant things" David Susskind said about Tony Curtis, a member of the "Spartacus" cast, Douglas states: "I know David Susskind very well and I understand how badly he feels about the fact about not ever making a picture in Hollywood. He is now doing a picture so we will see how well he does. It is an old trick and such a trite one.

There's apparently a sort of numbers game in the titles of Jewish themes. Last week's addition to the list was "The 49th Cousin," by Florence Lowe and the late Caroline Francke, at the Ambassador Theatre, N.Y. A holdover from last season is "The Tenth Man," by Paddy Chayefsky, at the Booth Theatre, N.Y.

Currently touring after a successful Broadway run is "A Majority of One," by Leonard Spigelgass. A Broadway hit of several seasons ago was "The "Fifth Season," by Sylvia Regan.

Playwrights seem to have a sixth sense about it.

GOP Asks Time, WMCA Editorial Backs Kennedy

Washington, Nov. 1.

New York's WMCA became the 1960 Presidential campaign's first major test case of the "equal time" section's application to editorials.

Republican National Chairman Thruston B. Morton rushed a telegram to Federal Communications Commission Chairman Frederick W. Ford, also a Republican, demanding that WMCA be required to give a GOP spokesman a like time period to answer the station's editorial endorsing John F. Kennedy, the Democratic Presidential nominee. Morton also wanted spots calling attention to the GOP answer similar to those which built up interest in the editorial in advance.

The Morton wire read:

"We hereby protest the activities

N.Y. Times Recognizes Night Life As News

Night clubs, long overlooked by the N.Y. Times, are again being recognized by the paper. Although a firm policy on the coverage of the bistros hasn't been set, the management is currently going on the assumption that the after-dark spots have news value. Stories and reviews will be run on the spots caught, but the paper is not starting a special column for the purpose.

The renewed interest in the cafe belt (the Times had covered the field several years ago) stems from the feeling that the paper, in not covering the clubs, had been passing up certain newsworthy events.

Actors 'Way Over Their Heads' When Engaged In Politics: Heston

Madrid, Nov. 1.

"A screen star pontificating on politics is about the equivalent of a high school boy describing the charms of Sophia Loren; he's just in way over his head." This is Charlton Heston's reaction to the parade of boxoffice luminaries trekking the vote-getting trails on behalf of their favorite presidential candidates. His reference to Sophia Loren just happens to coincide with her recent selection as his costar in Samuel Bronston's upcoming production of "El Cid."

Lambasting the siren call of glamor talent in the White House, Heston pointed out: "There are a few in our trade who know their way around outside a sound stage, but they didn't get where they are because of any profound knowledge of fiscal policy, the logistics

If Ever Out of Fashion, Naughty Heroines Now Very Forefronted

Loose women have become an apparently favorite topic of discussion in show business. They've always had a place in the entertainment world, of course, but now it seems they're all over. And, as ever, they're more or less simpatico individuals.

Film industry particularly is taking note of the midnight madonnas and, significantly, in such good-taste fashion that screams from the puritans have yet to be heard. It all goes hand in hand with the "adult" trend.

The booking by Radio City Music Hall of a picture about a brothel was unheard of a few years ago. It simply wasn't in keeping with the atmosphere at the famed Manhattan "institution." Next film at the Hall, following "Midnight Lace," is "World of Suzie Wong" which focuses on the girls, Nancy Kwan in particular, of a Hong Kong red light district.

Without going into any kind of basic critical appraisal of "Suzie

39 YEARS A FILM CRITIC, LONDON'S HARMAN EXITS

London, Nov. 1.

Arthur Jympson Harman, 69, film critic of the London Evening News for 39 years, during which time he reviewed nearly 10,000 films, retired on Saturday (29). He joined the paper as an office boy 53 years ago but within six years was acting as second string critic.

Though he never went to Hollywood his criticisms and weekly news column made him as familiar a figure with Hollywood personalities as in Britain.

He is succeeded by Felix Barker, legit critic and feature writer of the Evening News. Barker wrote an appreciation of Harman to tie up with his last film criticisms. The first film Harman reviewed was "Ivanhoe," with Keith Baggot and Evelyn Hope, the last was the John Wayne epic, "The Alamo."

Tokyo, Nov. 1.

An 11-member Nikkatsu production unit, including young star Yujiro Ishihara, actress Mie Kitahara and director Toshio Masuda left for Madrid to loaction with "Man at the Bullfight."

The shooting schedule lists Granada, Toledo, Lisbon and Copenhagen in addition to Madrid. Ishihara plays a Japanese businessman sent to Madrid to contract for the import of bullfighting to Japan.

LIZ TAYLOR TO STAY AS 'CLEOPATRA' STAR

London, Nov. 1.

Spyros P. Skouras put an end to reports that have been circulating in London during the past fortnight concerning the production of "Cleopotra" when, in exclusive statement to VARIETY he declared: "We are proceeding as if we were not insured." The 20th-Fox prez denied any changes were contemplated in the cast because shooting had been delayed by the illness of Elizabeth Taylor, though he conceded that production activities had been held up by her illness.

"Meanwhile," added Skouras, "Walter Wanger and Rouben Mamoulian, producer and director respectively, have been shooting around Miss Taylor and I encouraged them to continue to salvage whatever they can while waiting for her return. We are all hoping for her restoration to health soon."

Before Skouras arrived here, in company with studio topper Robert L. Goldstein, there were unconfirmed reports that the production might be switched to Spain, in view of the continuous wet weather which has delayed filming of exteriors.

Cost the Most, Make the Most?

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

The theatre-going public will determine how long Hollywood producers will continue to grind out the multi-million-dollar film product. Specs actually have proven themselves to be the only real competition of television since the advent of the commercial tube cut into boxoffice grosses. This candid observation was handed down by Edward Lewis, producer of the $12,000,000 Bryna production "Spartacus" which Universal financed.

Lewis contends that "the films that cost the most—make the most," from a boxoffice standpoint. He refers to "Gone With the Wind," "The Robe," "Giant," "Ten Commandments" and most recently "Ben-Hur" as production giants during the past years that cost from $5,000,000 to $15,000,000 and recouped their original investments plus a hefty profit.

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

Sammy Davis Jr.'s first two nights of his one-man stand at the Huntington Hartford Theatre were marred by not-in-the-script incidents. Three male pickets wearing swastikas and carrying anti-racial placards paraded in front of the theatre opening night (25), with the usual hate themes: "Purity for All Nations" and "We Will Protect the Purity of the Nordic Race."

Davis wound the first of his three weeks engagement with a hefty $28,000. House is scaled at a $6.50 top.

Pickets wore suntan uniforms without insignias. They were

Louella Takes Stand

Boston, Nov. 1.

Hearst columnist Louella O. Parsons here vacationing and to visit daughter, Harriet, coproducer of pre-Broadway tryout comedy "Rape of the Belt" at the Wilbur Theatre here, blasted perversion in films and said "there is too much of the unhealthy in films."

"I don't have anything against sex, but perversion is something else again," she declared. "I want to see films made that will get families back into the theatre," she continued. "To me some of the films made now are shocking. We all have enough trouble and when we go to the theatre we want to be entertained."

The columnist suggested that films need more comedy and should show the pleasant side of life.

$20-Mil Piles Up in Pension Plan, Film Retirement Now $95 Monthly

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

Film workers' retirement pay will be upped from $75 to $95 per month effective Dec. 1. The $20 increase will apply to those already receiving checks as well as to those who retire on and after Dec. 1, according to George J. Flaherty, board chairman of the Motion Picture Industry Pension Plan.

It's estimated that by Dec. 1 there will be approximately 800 retirees under the plan.

Excess of $20,000,000 has accumulated in the Plan's treasury, since it was in augurated on Oct. 26, 1953, through investment of producers and employees' contributions at an eight-to-five ratio. More than $550,000 has been paid out to retirees since payments started first of this year.

A central demand which the IATSE, of which Flaherty is Coast , is that the amount of producers' contribution be increased from eight to 16 cents per manhour in order to make retirement benefits of $125 per month fiscally feasible.

Flaherty pointed out that Johnson & Higgins, actuary firm for the employer-employee plan, has adjudged the $95 per month to be actuarily sound. Under the new benefit level, it's noted, a retiree and his wife, both also qualified under Social Security, can receiv a combined monthly retirement income of up to $275.

London, Nov. 1.

The State opening of Parliament today (Tues.) by the Queen is to be filmed for the first time from inside the House of Lords in Technicolor. The ceremony is being covered by the two newsreels, Pathe and Movietone, which will make a black-and-white print available to tv.

The televersion is expected on the air the same night, but the color topicals won't go out to film theatres in next day or two.

MERVYN LEROY IN HAWAIIAN POLITICS

Honolulu, Nov. 1.

Producer-director Mervyn LeRoy ran a halfpage ad in th latest issue of the Maui News endorsing election of Eddi Tam as Maui County Chairman, the island's top political plum.

LeRoy, who filmed exteriors for "Devil at 4 O'Clock" on Maui, is a Republican. Tam is a Democrat.

Unprecedented ad said "it was your friendly County Chairman Eddie Tam who persuaded us to use Lahaina as the location of the movie."

"As far as selling Maui goes, I doubt if you will ever find a better 'salesman' and booster for Maui and its people than Eddie Tam," LeRoy's ad asserted.

Tam's Republican rival managed to get the last word.

"I think LeRoy is absolutely correct; Eddie IS a good salesman. I think he should be in the Hawaii Visitors Bureau or Chamber of Commerce on a full-time basis. This is the kind of work he does best. Let ME be the Chairman of the County Government and actually Maui would benefit both " his statement suggested.

Mex Bureau Denies Permit to U.S. Circus

Mexico City, Oct. 25.

This city's Office of Public Entertainments, without any explanation, has denied a permit for the presentation of the Clyde Brothers circus here. The circus is currently on Lati American tour. The thumbs-down for the American circus follows a similar nixing of a Mexican run of the Ringling Bros., Barnum and Bailey circus, with the turndown in this case issued some time ago.

However, the office announced that the Imperial and Atayde circuses (both national) have been granted permits. The first is skedded to open at the end of this month.

GREAT MEDAL OF CITY OF PARIS TO VOGEL

Paris, Nov. 1.

Joseph R. Vogel was given the Great Medal of the City of Paris and a Diploma of Honor when he came in for the opening of "Ben-Hur" (M-G). The Metro prexy was handed the accolades by Jean Tardieu, head of the Municipal Council of Paris who underlined the close ties between the French Metro company here and the Council for more than 35 years. Tardieu also lauded "Ben-Hur" and talked about the new Metro pic, "Four Horsemen of Apocalypse" which had its exteriors done here.

Among those present at the ceremony were Michel Fourre-Cormery, head of the Centre Du Cinema; Charlton Heston, Glenn Ford, Olivia De Havilland, Maurice Chevalier, Dave Lewis, Metro Continental manager; and Jean Le Duc, head of Gaumont here.

LEGIT INVESTORS EYE FILMS

Negative-Investment-Braggadocio: Does It 'Impress'—And How Much?

Does the public care what a picture costs? Apparently some film companies and producers believe it does because it has been the policy recently of producers and distributors to boast about a picture's cost. This has been especially the case with the hardticket entries, where such sums as $10,000,000 and $15,000,000 are tossed around with as much ease as the industry once employed the word "colossol."

Utilizing the cost, real or alleged, as a selling plus to impress the public, the press and the trade, "Ben-Hur," at $15,000,000, was hailed as the most expensive picture ever made, "Spartacus," at $11,000,000, as the most expensive picture ever made in Hollywood, and "The Alamo," at $12,000,000, as the most expensive picture ever made in the United States.

However, industryites, wise to the techniques of the trade, are aware that these costs have been exaggerated, two slightly; one by as much as double its actual cost.

In cases where what is shown on the screen cannot be translated to astronomical numbers, the film company merely terms it "a multimillion" production, as in the case of Columbia's "Pepe." Some producers, notably Samuel Goldwyn and Otto Preminger, refuse to discuss the cost of productions on the ground that the public doesn't care what a picture costs so long as it receives its value in entertainment.

Most everybody is aware that an expensive picture is not always a good picture. Nor is it necessarily a money-maker. Some of the current hardticket entries, despite their alleged over $10,000,000 costs, will find it tough to recoup their dreamed-up costs, but they stand a chance of equalling or even topping their actual costs. But despite the realistic considerations, there's no doubt that the industry will continue to inflate production costs.

It's done to impress other producers, to get better terms from exhibitors, and to make the public believe that it is being offered something it cannot miss.

Perhaps the most glaring example of the industry's predilliction with costs was producer Sam Spiegel's disclosure that "The Bridge of the River Kwai" only cost $2,700,000 and grossed $30,000,000 world-wide. The production cost, he said, had been withheld up to now because of the fear that its disclosure might detract from the aura of bigness.

Sez The Boss' Son—

Having made "Murder Inc." for 20th-Fox, and now directing "Mad Dog Coll" for producer Edward Schreiber and Columbia, Burt Balaban was asked why he wasn't doing anything at Paramount, whose president is his father, Barney Balaban.

Young Balaban replied that he had been with Par a couple of years, working on the television end with Paul Raibourn and George Shupert. It went along fine, except that less than full credit was given him when things went well and the errors seemed to magnify themselves many times over. That's what comes of being the boss' son—and it's not a preferred role for Burt Balaban.

Leo Hochstetter Shifting to Rome

Leo D. Hochstetter, head of the Motion Picture Export Assn.'s office in Frankfurt, is expected to move to Rome as MPEA director for the Mediterranean area, succeeding Frank Gervasi, who resigned in September to become a veepee of Fairbanks-Morse.

Who would replace Hochstetter in Frankfurt is not known at the moment, and there may be some question on whether he will be replaced by a fulltime rep. Though the Frankfurt office has been a one-man-plus-secretary operation, MPEA regards it as an important one, since the Frankfurt exec, in addition to Germany, also covers Austria and the Scandinavian countries.

Though there are some important MPEA member company execs, who feel that "liberalized" film trade, particularly in Germany, makes a man in Frankfurt unnessary, MPEA toppers hold to their idea that one of the important functions of the MPEA is to guard against anti-film trade moves before they happen.

Since Gervasi's resignation, MPEA's Rome office has been run by Gervasi's former assistant, Henry Borghese.

WB Eludes 'Condemnation'; Legion Not Pleased By (Call) 'Girl In Night'

Warners has escaped a "C" (condemned) rating by the National Legion of Decency for the company's "Girl in the Night." Catholic reviewing group is far from high on the Max Rosenberg production, indeed considers it "questionable entertainment for the motion picture medium." Legion this week gave it a "separate classification."

Directed by Joseph Cates, and with Kay Medford and Lloyd Nolan among the principal players, "Night" concerns itself with a call girl. Cates said the approach is devoid of any lurid, graphic details; instead, the pictures is intended, and is, a study along psychiatric lines. He said he has had virtually complete assurance from WB that the ad campaign will be marked by an absence of any kind of "low exploitation" sell.

Legion noted the film is done in serious quasi-documentary fashion but because of the basic nature of the subject matter it is fit only for "a specialized and mature audience and its exhibition should therefore be restricted." WB's reported intent to market "Night" in good taste apparently was a factor in the Legion's "separate classification" determination.

All this, of course, leads to speculation about exhibitor attitude.

GABE SUMNER NAMED PUB MANAGER AT UA

Gabe Sumner has been appointed publicity manager of United Artists by pub-ad v.p. Roger H. Lewis. He joins the company on Nov. 14. Sumner replaces Burt Sloane, who has received an indefinite leave of absence because of an undefined illness.

Formerly with Paramount and the Schine Theatre Circuit, Sumner has since 1956 been a partner in the indie publicity firm of Sumner & Friedkin. John Friedkin will continue to operate the firm under his own name.

'BUCKS COUNTY' FOR WB

Not Set If James Woolf Goes To Burbank Studio

"Devil in Bucks County" is set to roll at Warners within the next few months. Script, director and top cast already are signed. But there seems some uncertainty as to who will be the producer.

Property is owned by London's James Woolf. It's up in the air as to whether he'll want to journey to Burbank to make the picture and, if not, who'll substitute for him.

'THE CONNECTION' A CASE IN POINT

The film version of Jack Gelber's off-Broadway hit, "The Connection," is being privately financed under a limited partnership arrangement similar to the method employed in raising funds for legit shows. The picture is financed at $177,000, which includes a reserve for contingencies and extra week of shooting.

The film, which started shooting Monday (31) at Hi Brown's Production Center in New York, is being coproduced by Shirley Clarke and Lewis Allen. Miss Clarke, who will direct, is a documentary filmmaker. Allen is general manager for legit producer Robert Whitehead. The picture is being produced under the banner of Allen-Hodgdon Inc., a company organized for indie film production by Allen and a Washington stockbroker. Involved in the production are Arthur Ornitz as cinematographer and Jimmy DeGangi as associate producer.

Per Allen, the bulk of the financing came from the "hard core of legit investors." He indicated that usual Broadway angels became disenchanted with investing in legit shows following the Equity strike, and that they are more inclined presently to invest in motion pictures. The investors, he added, have become convinced that they have as good and perhaps a better chance to realize a return from their investment in films. Allen echoes the opinion of indie producer George Justin, reported in VARIETY last week, that there is less risk involved investing in films than in the theatre.

"The Connection," Allen believes, will establish a pattern placing independent films on the same basis as plays, but with a better chance of coin recovery.

According to Allen, theatrical producer Roger Stevens and Whitehead are planning a similar financial arrangement for a picture to be produced next year. In addition, he said that Allen-Hodgdon had six properties which it plans to place into production utilizing the same money-raising system.

Allen said no attempt will be made to obtain a distribution deal until the picture is completed. It's conceivable, he added, that efforts would be made to organize a distribution setup that would handle films that are produced under similar circumstances.

Allen served as the sparkplug that brought together a group of young, N.Y.-based filmmakers for the purpose of establishing a system of raising coin on the limited partnership basis for independent film productions.

Lab Financing Mexicans; Arlington Asserts Its 'Bolivar' Officially Blessed and Certain

A major unidentified film laboratory (not Pathe) is said to be the prime source of a $5,000,000 loan that is being arranged for the government-supervised Mexican film financing bank for use in coproduction ventures between Mexican and American producers. Although Del Banco Nacional Cinematografico of Mexico has financed local production, this is said to be the first time that it will have a specific revolving fund available for Mexican-Yank coproductions.

Albert E. Marten, counsel and producer's representative for the recently-organized Arlington Productions, said last week that he was in the process of negotiating the loan for the Mexican film bank and that Arlington would be among the first to benefit from the joint financing venture. Arlington, headed by William D. Coates, has joined forces with a Mexican firm to organize a new coproduction company in Mexico, it was disclosed. The new firm is known as Arlington-Bueno Productions S.A. The alliance represents a combination of Arlington and Producciones Bueno of Mexico, headed by Don Jose Luis Bueno, described as a ploneer Mexican filmmaker.

According to Marten, the new coin will be expressly earmarked for coproduction deals between Yank and Mexican producers. Profits accruing to the bank from these ventures, he added, will be reinvested for similar coproduction arrangements.

The first Arlington-Bueno coproduction, with the Mexican partner providing the below-the-line costs, will be "Let Me Breathe Thunder," based on the novel by William Attaway. This is scheduled for a January start.

The most ambitious undertaking of the new partnership will be an "$8,000,000 to $10,000,000" Todd-AO production of "Simon Bolivar." The film will be based on an original screenplay by Herbert Kline. The project dealing with the George Washington of South America has intrigued filmmakers for a number of years, including Lester Cowan and Dino DeLaurentiis, both of whom disclosed plans to make but never did films about the Latin American liberator.

Marten and Coates claim they have the only script that has the "official" approval of the Latin American countries and that they have been assured of the cooperation of South American countries. Marten stated that in reality it would be a Pan-American production, with location shooting being done in Ecuador and Peru as well as Mexico. Each of the countries, he said, would make their armies available for the king-sized produc-

'Too Far'—Both Ways?

Paris, Nov. 1.

Is the Algerian war manifesto of the 121 entertainers and "intellectuals" and the recoil of the French government a standoff?

There is evidence that while the public feels those advocates refusal to serve in the French army "went too far" there is also a feeling that the authorities, in a tall rage, also "went too far" in punishing the signatories by denying them Film Aid or continued employment where they worked for the dramatic, radio or television arms of the state.

Simone Signoret, who has suffered before for getting into sticky politics, is again a chief focus. Novelist Francoise Sagan is perhaps second under the spotlight.

Toei Absorbing Shintoho Studio

Tokyo, Oct. 25.

Toei Motion Picture Co., the most prosperous Nippon film company these days, is expected to absorb the troubled Shintoho Motion Picture Co. by early next month.

Shintoho, deep in debt, is one of Japan's six majors. In April this year, adding to its woes, one of the largest buildings at its Kinuta studio was reduced to ashes. Moreover, the company has been embroiled in a series of labor disputes which unfavorably dragged around the name of prez Mitsugu Okura.

It is believed that the top execs of Shintoho and Toei have reached informal accord on ways and means of the aosorption.

Vet of 25 Orient Prods., Rolf Bayer Extending Filmmaking to America

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

With 25 features—all made in and for the Oriental market—under his belt, producer Rolf Bayer has revealed here he is expanding his operation to encompass the United States, both in terms of coproductions and release.

Bayer, who writes and directs as well as produces, has been headquartered in the Philippines for the past 11 years, having moved there after some 15 years in New York theatre and radio as an actor and writer. In additoin to the 25 features, he has filmed more than 200 short subjects and, in all, has received more than a dozen international awards for his pix.

First of his Banaue Films projects to be released in this country will be "Bagjao," which Parallel Films will distribute as art-house product in January. The story of the Moros and told via an "equality" theme, the film will be subtitled for U. S. showing. Second Banaue film for U. S. release will be "Cry Freedom," a story of the Guerrilla warfare in the Philippines during World War II. Pic goes out in February through Barjul International.

Bayer additionally is putting together a U. S.-Philippine co-production on "Be My Sins Remembered," English-language film rolling in the Philippines Feb. 15. American participant, now being negotiated, will provide the above-the-line costs, supplying a lead American actor, an associate producer and the raw stock.

ZIMBALIST-ROBERTS: UNITED AND READYING

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

Newly-formed ZRB Productions, set up last week by indie producers Al Zimbalist and Byron Roberts, is already underway on four features and one tv series, latter tabbed "Taffy." Zimbalist, who recently left Metro producer berth, will be exec producer, and Roberts, with a Columbia Pictures deal behind him, will produce.

Initial feature will be Jules Verne's "Career of a Comet," color pic to be lensed in U.S., Japan and England. Radcliffe Hall's "Well of Loneliness," Lesbian-themed novel in which the overt lesbianism will be deleted, according to Zimbalist, is set as second.

Third and fourth features, respectively, will be "The Skirts of Sgt. McHugh, war comedy authored by Zimbalist, and "The Willie Sutton Story," property owned by Roberts. Negotiations are on for Tony Randall to essay title role of latter.

'Runaway': What They Say and Do

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

After some months in Europe during 1960, a number of American film producers have lately returned to Hollywood proclaiming, in effect, "There's no place like home." Which may well be true, and welcome back. Almost on their heels, but going in the opposite direction, a number of other American producers head overseas to make sundry pictures. Fine, and good luck to them. But must both groups shout that they have not and/or are not "running away?"

The trouble with this kind of double-talk, cramming the facts into the theory, like a woman vain of her shoe size, is that it threatens rapidly to become preposterous. It asks trade papers and lay press to accept straight-faced a kind of self-conscious apologia which does not meet the ancient, and sound, maxim that actions speak louder than words.

The craft unions of Hollywood invented the term "runaway production" as a propaganda term. That's natural. A way of life that was very comfortable is apparently threatened out there, though the boom in television films surely offsets the theatrical film slump which has prevailed since the strikes of the actors and the writers broke the rhythm. But if the constant sloganizing against "runaway" producers is having some effect, it may fairly be hinted that many of the appeasement interviews, lately become fashionable, are hardly more than counter-propaganda.

Bluntly, is there a producer who would decline to make a picture anywhere at all, if circumstances favored his creation of a valuable property? It is simply inconsistent with human nature to ask showmen not to be showmen, but coast guards.

The Devilish Overhead

More practically, not much is heard of constructive, tangible efforts to make the Hollywood lots more attractive. True, Columbia Pictures has reduced fixed studio overhead fro 25% to 22%. The point which cannot be overlooked is that the major studios nowadays are not ideally situated to "force" independent producers to remain in Hollywood if they are disposed to wander.

There are many other related factors, of course. Tax advantage is frequently mentioned. Equally potent, if seldom mentioned, in discussions of the "runaway" problem is the human element, the fact that producers themselves, their wives and children enjoy living and working in exotic foreign lands.

Some of the purely technical considerations may or may not be crucial. Take the many stories published in these columns during the past several seasons as to the relative merits and skills of studio crews in Hollywood, Britain, France, Italy, Spain, Germany, Mexico and Japan. But will anybody truly decide for or against Britain on the basis of the studio shop stewards being temperamental petty tyrants and the grips tea-break happy? France's technicians won't get up early, but willingly work into the wee hours. What price the difference? Madrid stagehands are wonderfully cooperative, but sometimes green. And so on. These are important, but not telltale.

More significant is the trend in European studios for American productions to exceed budget. That's too much like home, perhaps. There , also, the question of how long the novelty of European scenery can be touted as a unique plus?

'Protesting Too Much'

Meanwhile, producers come and go, in both senses. If they feel a compulsion to apology they must at least recognize that there is the danger of "protesting too much" their love of Hollywood. Certainly there is no obligation to apologize for pursuing their careers as and where they best may in a trying and challenging transitional period. Moreover, it is sufficiently clear that certai productions, of which "King of Kings" nd "El Cid" in Spain may be cited as examples, which could not possibly get produced in Hollywood. Not financially, nor pictorially.

The long-perspective of theatrical history, as recorded in the files of this 55-year old publication, amounts to this: trends rise and fall and the film medium grows constantly more "international." Hollywood must adjust to the new set of circumstances and survive in a new context. There is a good deal of evidence, despite all wailing, that it is doing precisely that. In any event, there is no turning back the calendar to the old, easy days.

Meanwhile, producers i transit ought perhaps to get hold of their poise. They'll never win a popularity contest with the IATSE by mimeograph handout alone.

Skouras on 'Francis of Assisi' Location; Superstition Menaces Earlier Start

Assisi, Italy, Nov. 1.

Spyros P. Skouras, president of 20th-Fox, paid a whirlwind visit to the location of his son, Plato Skouras' film, "Francis of Assisi," here last week. The elder Skouras arrived in the afternoon of the first day of production (28), accompanied by Mrs. Skouras, briefly visited the set, conferred with his son, hosted the company at dinner and headed back to Rome which is three hours' distant.

Skouras had intended to arrive on the very first day of production, but local superstition spoiled his plans. It was, incidentally, one of Skouras' very rare visits to a location away from a major studio in Hollywood or London.

The original schedule called for "Francis" to go before the color and CinemaScope camera on Oct. 28, a Friday. At a production confab on Wednesday eve, Pierro Portalupi, the Italian director of photography, suddenly said he would not start a film on a Friday. He explained patiently to the skeptical Americans that this would bring the picture bad luck.

The eventual compromise saw Portalupi and director Michael Curtiz lensing general shots of Assisi sans the actors. This made it perfectly all right for work to proceed in earnest on Friday morning.

"Francis" stars Bradford Dillman in the title role, Dolores Hart as Clare (also later Sainted) and Stuart Whitman in the role of Paolo, the young nobleman who cannot accept Francis' outlook on life which calls for the renunciation of property, the practice of humility and the seeking of peace among men even at a time when the Crusaders were on the march.

The picture will be shot on location around mountainous Umbria where medieval villages are almost flawlessly preserved. Later, "Francis" will move to Rome and to Spain for interiors and the big outdoor action scenes including the battles between the Crusaders and the Saracens. Producer Plato Skouras, who's been working on the "Francis" script for some two years, expects to wind up around Christmas time.

Production of the film 200 miles north of Rome presents plenty of headaches. Some 3,000 costumes are being created locally for the picture which carries a $2,800,000 budget. System is unique Parts of the costumes are farmed out to individuals who in turn contract for certain villages to turn them out. Thus a whole village might work on the shoes, another on the breast-plates, still another on embroidered blouses, etc. Procedure is much cheaper than renting from Western Costume, but it also takes a lot longer.

Squabble almost immediately arose over the type of robe Saint Francis should wear. The Franciscans are split into two groups dating back to the times of their foun-

U.S. Dividend Pace

Washington, Nov. 1.

Dividends by motion picture companies rose from $3,617,000 in September—a jump of $198,000 from September a year ago, according to the Commerce Dept. Seven firms reported melons, the same as last year.

The cumulative total amounted to $18,992,000—well ahead of the 1959 year-to-date figure of $17,929,000. Lion's share of the September total was accounted for by Universal.

Commerce Dept. by policy does not make public the firm-by-firm breakdown.

Converting Real Estate Continues; AB-PT Fiscal Story Remains Boomish

The financial success story at American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres continues. Leonard H. Goldenson, president, this week revealed an operating profit for the first nine months of 1960 estimated at $7,522,000, or $1.80 per share, representing an increase of 44% over the $5,226,000, or $1.22 a share, for the corresponding period of last year.

Profit for the first three quarters of the current year was the highest in AB-PT history, said Goldenson. With capital gains included, the earnings for the period amounted to $8,873,000, or $2.12 a share, compared with $5,407,000 or $1.26 a share for last year.

Third quarter of 1960 brought a net of $1,869,000, or 45c a share, representing an increase of 40% over the $1,340,000, or 32c a share for the like period of 1959.

Goldenson related that theatre business in the third quarter was about equal to last year. July, he said, was slow but August was the best since 1955 and September was ahead of last year.

AB-PT is continuing its policy of divesting or converting marginal theatre properties. For example, a 12-story office building is replacing a theatre in Atlanta. AB-PT has a longterm lease on the property and a 50% equity in the building. Total of 22 film houses have been disposed of so far this year.

Third quarter results for the ABC division reflect a continuation of the improvement shown earlier in the year. Despite losses sustained in carrying the political conventions in July, gross television time billings ran 43% over the same three months last year, Goldenson reported, adding that this was the largest percentage and dollar increase of all three webs.

Experts We're Getting, Sez Pix Producers Guild On Pension-Welfare

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

Screen Producers Guild has laid the groundwork for participation in a pension, health and welfare plan—perhaps similar to the programs newly won by directors, actors and writers—by giving the green light to an ambitious survey of all pertinent data in the field. Guild is about to hire a private actuarial firm to conduct the survey, prexy Walter Mirisch confirmed last week.

Out of the survey will come a proposed plan and recommendations to the Assn. of Motion Picture Producers, industry body repping most of the major companies through which Directors Guild of America, Writers Guild of America and Screen Actors Guild closed recent negotiations and won pension-health-welfare plans.

It's clear that SPG presents peculiar problems not duplicated in DGA, WGA or SAG, and these problems will be incorporated in any pension-health-welfare plan proposed by the Guild. In some cases, of course, SPG members actually are employers. In other cases, however, they are considered employees.

SPG, in December of last year, staked a claim to residuals from tv sale of post-'48 films. It's not likely that this issue will play a highly important role in any SPG proposal to AMPP, at least not beyond the "past-service credit" payment made to other Guilds. Body of the proposal should revolve around consideration on future films.

SPG is not a collective bargaining unit, and thus no collective bargaining agreement exists between the Guild and AMPP. However, major studios are signatories to a 1954 "Code of Practices Relating to Screen Producers," a document which provides for such discussions.

Producers' org additionally is working with AMPP's parent body, the Motion Picture Assn. of America, in developing a formula for SPG representation on the MPAA board. Mirisch and MPAA prexy Eric Johnston are about to work out proposed plan which, it's understood, involves three spots for SPG on the MPAA executive body.

Conflicts in Wording, Not Content

'Young Doctors' Okay for UA Despite Columbia's 'Internes'—U Wins 'Talk' Fight

Motion Picture Assn. of America board, meeting in New York Thursday (27) to hear appeals on tw title conflicts, turned down Wallis-Hazen Productions' "Sweet Talk" title and upheld a United Artists' appeal on "The Young Doctors."

Universal, which in April registered "Small Talk," "Easy Talk" and "Soft Talk," contested the Wallis title which was registered in July. Board Thursday upheld decision by the Title Registration's arbitration committee, which favored U's prior claim.

Columbia, which i February purchased the novel, "The Internes," contested UA's "Young Doctors," registered April and based on a novel of another name. Arbitration committee originally upheld Col, but board reversed ruling, saying that Title Bureau i concerned about conflicts in wording, not in subject matter.

Pledged Popcorn

Los Angeles, Nov. 1.

All Southern California film exhibs are being asked to pledge their popcorn sales Nov. 4 to the Will Rogers Hospital as a birthday salute to late humorist, in whose memory the 30-year-old show biz hospital was founded.

Al Lapidus and National Theatre Supply, two of the West's largest popcorn suppliers, have agreed to replace all popcorn sold at theatres pledged for the drive.

Ludwig Lawrence Wins An Examination of Decca, Universal & Rackmil

The right to examine Decca Records, Universal Pictures, and Milton R. Rackmil, president of both companies, in a suit alleging "waste and mismanagement" was granted last week to a plaintiff, Ludwig (Laudy) Lawrence, by N.Y. Supreme Court Justice Samuel Gold.

In granting the motion for the examination, the Court stated that the affidavits "show sufficient special circumstances and tend to show that the allegation has some basis in fact." The Court added that the specific items of examination requested "are pertinent to the issues involved." The Court ordered the examination for Friday (4) and ordered the presentation of relevant books and records.

Lawrence, a large holder of Universal's preferred stock, is a former theatreowner, distributor, and investor in pictures. He was longtime head of Metro in Europe, based in Paris.

TRANS-LUX PAYS 30c AND 5% STOCK DIV.

Board of directors of Trans-Lux Corp. has declared an annual dividend of 30c a share on the company's capital stock, plus an extra 5% stock dividend. Cash dividend, the same as last year, is payable Dec. 16 to stock of record Nov. 21.

Stock dividend is payable Jan. 17, 1961, to stock of record Dec. 16.

Theory: Arty Showmen Better Bets to Handle USSR Product in U.S.

Kingsley International, under an arrangement with Jay Frankel's M.J.P. Enterprises, will handle U. S. distribution of the Russian-made "Ballad of A Soldier," a prize-winner at this year's Cannes film fest. Deal marks the first time a Russian entry has been independently distributed under the Soviet-American cultural exchange program.

Distrib Ed Kingsley feels that indie handling of the Soviet import more closely meets the requirements for realizing full potential of quality Russian films than that offered by the majors. Latter have not yet had any particular success with the seven original cultural exchange pix in this market.

"Soldier," an entry at the recent San Francisco fest, will be premiered in New York in titled version. A dubbed version already has been completed and will be used for general release.

EXHIBS TRULY 'FAMILY' MEN?

National Boxoffice Survey

Trade Offish in Most Keys; 'Hur' Again 1st, 'Lace' Second, 'Spartacus' 3d; 'Seven,' 'Alamo' Next

Current session at first-runs over the country looms nearly as dreary as last week, although there are a few scattered exceptions to the downbeat along the Atlantic seaboard. Reports from VARIETY correspondents in representative key cities blame interest in the election and some routine product for the mild b.o. tone.

Although being threatened by some strong upcoming product as it nears termination of runs in some key cities, "Ben-Hur" (M-G) again is hanging on to No. 1 spot but by a much narrower margin than in recent weeks. "Hur" actually has concluded its dates in a few keys.

"Midnight Lace" (U) is winding up a great second currently although playing in only five key cities. It is lagging only about $46,000 behind "Ben-Hur." "Spartacus," another from Universal, is managing to cop third money although out in only four keys so far.

"Magnificent Seven" (UA) is finishing fourth, same as a week ago. "The Alamo" (UA) is showing enough the initial week on release to hardticket to take fifth place. "Girl of Night," also from Warners, is winding sixth.

"Song Without End" (Col), long high on the list, is taking seventh position. It was second last round. "Let No Man Write My Epitaph" (Col) is capturing eighth spot.

"Dark At Top of Stairs" (WB), which was third last stanza, is finishing ninth. "Surprise Package" (Col), fifth a week ago, will land in 10th place. "Sunrise at Campobello" (WB) again is finishing 11th, same as a week ago. "Can-Can" (20th), now playing in some keys on regular release, rounds out the Top 12.

"Jungle Cat" (BV) and "I Aim At Stars" (Col) are the runner-up pic in current session.

"10 Who Dared" (BV) shapes uneven among the newies, being fair in Omaha and lofty in Denver, where in second session. Also new, "Village of Damned" (M-G) shapes good in Cincy and Indianapolis, but only mild in Louisville.

"Expresso Bongo" (Cont) looms okay in Chi. "I'm All Right, Jack" (Col) still ise oke to big in some three or four keys.

"September Storm" (20th) looks to be in for some stormy going, based on very disappointing showing in some six keys currently. It is good only Detroit. "School For Scoundrels" (Cont), good in Washington, looms wow in Minneapolis and big in L.A.

"Under 10 Flags" (Par), fair in Toronto, shapes slow in Balto. "Desire in Dust" (20th) looks dull to dim in four keys but is good in Philly.

"Let's Make Love" (20th), neat in Boston, shapes nice in N. Y. "Carry Nurse" (Gov), good in Denver and Cincy, is hefty L.A. and N.Y.

Her Press Agent Partisan to Ava; Book Slams Metro's 'Slave' Deals

By GENE ARNEEL

As her global pressagent and then personal manager for a big-deal Hollywood over a period of fiv years, David Hanna came upon enough of the "inside" to warrant a book. His subject is Ava Gardner and his chronicle, billed as an "unauthorized biography," "Ava: Portrait of a Star," put out by Putnam's ($3.95).

Hanna has interesting but not scandal-like diary material. Miss Gardner is moody to the point of eccentricity, distributes herself among a trio of husbands (Mickey Rooney, Artie Shaw and Frank Sinatra, with nothing sensational as to details herei , and works hard at being the actress she admittedly is not, despite the one Academy Award nomination.

Although there is th "unauthorized" suggestion, the author clearly is partisan, with Miss Gardner ing out all the way. She's a gorgeous creature victimized by a Metro which has given her only poor properties in which to work, not boxoffice in herself but nonetheless cause for celebration whenever this superbly-poised ideal confirmation hits a foreign port—or ven an opening on Broadway.

Actually, Hanna's portrait of Ava is like a day-to-day reportial job, being a closeup on her globe trots on picture-making and picture-plugging assignments. There are the broad sketches of an internationally-known personality who, despite manifestation of adulation among citizens from here to Madrid, Paris, Rome, South America and Australia, is a lonely gal.

Hanna writes as a friendly, sympathetic participant in the happenings of these five years—from "Barefoot Contessa" to "On the Beach." He's not sympathetic toward M-G, for this studio's casting at Culver City or its exorbitant loan-out terms involving the star; towards Dino de Laurentiis, for his stinginess in publicity expenditures anent the production-costly "War and Peace"; United Artists, because of the deal whereby Ava had to be housed in a second rate Rio hotel in turn for the hotel's paying for a couple of press receptions; Humphrey Bogart, a gossip-monger who made snide remarks about Ava on th "Contessa" set.

The sympathy is all for Ava, from standpoint of hostile and or blackmailing press to un-understanding film company brass and individuals who are part of the closeup.

Hanna's book is well-organized, clearly written and makes for engaging reading for those looking in from the outside and those on the inside.

But at least one reader has come way with the thought that lots more should be said about the noble, yet lackey, functionary of Hollywood on the worldwide scene, the baliy specialist.

The copy "Ava" subordinates the pressagent's role to that of the star in terms of line-o-type attention, and this doubtless is as it should be in a biography of this kind. But pressagentry can be chronicled, too, and perhaps should b a little more.

French Exhibs To French Govt: 'We're Neglected'

Paris, Nov. 1.

National Federation of French Film Exhibitors has handed the government Centre Du Cinema, which is under the Ministry of Culture, an ultimatum stating that it would stage a series of one night closings of all the film houses in France and eventually close down altogether if (a) excessive taxation were not cut and (b) Film Aid restored to exhibs. First shut down is slated for Nov. 20, a Sunday. Sundays are France's top filmgoing days.

Exhibs feel that the French film industry is taxed more than any other in the world with one-third of the gross going to state coffers. Exhibs were also cut off from Aid last year which also added to their burden heightened by falling filmgoing. For a while they decided to hike percentage rates but that would only make things worse for

TRADE SEES LOT OF LIP SERVICE

By VINCENT CANBY

Just how sincere are exhibitors in their highly-publicized demands for more family pix and fewer of the so-called adult-themed dramas? This question is being kicked around in the private offices of producers and distribs with increasing frequency and skepticism as the industry prepares to meet upcoming legislative battles on film classification.

Skepticism arises not only from fact that some of the year's biggest moneymakers have been pix definitely slanted for the adult market (and understanding)— "The Apartment," "Psycho," "From The Terrace," "Suddenly Last Summer," "Elmer Gantry," etc—but also from the apparent difficulty in getting suitable playdates, enough playdates, and general exhib enthusiasm for the family pix which are offered by the majors. It's known, for example, that two fine "family" films—Disney's "Pollyanna" and Paramount's "Conspiracy of Hearts"—have been disappointing in the current ket.

Situation was spotlighted Friday (28) by Glenn Norris, 20th-Fox's general sales manager, who suggested that exhibitors who are making the most noise about th censorship threat might back up their words by offering family pix "the same preferential and sympathetic treatment" which they accord a "Psycho" or "From The Terrace."

Hard-Selling 'Family'

Exec, in effect, was calling attention to the irony of the situation where a distrib, who has a family film, has to go out and (often) knock his head against a stone wall in order to persuade an exhibitor that by booking and promoting a family film he may well be able to take some good money as well as perform a tremendously important public relations job for the entire industry.

"And," said the exc, "make no mistake about it. These films (recent 20th 'family' releases) are profitable," but his idea is that they would have been even better with greater exhib cooperation.

Following the policy spelled out by 20th prexy Spyros P. Skouras late last year, company's release schedule has included a large number of family-slanted pix in all budget categories. Among them: "Dog of Flanders," "The Rookie," "Masters of The Congo Jungle," "For The Love of Mike," "Bobbikins," "Story of Ruth," "When Comedy Was King," "The Lost World," "Freckles," and, upcoming, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," "Tess of The Storm Country" and "The Wizard of Bagdad," among others.

According to Norris, all of these pix which have gone into release have been profitable in relation to their costs, though in some cases it's been an uphill battle. He described "Dog of Flanders" as one of the most successful films ever released by 20th, having returned ($1,000,000) four it negative cost ($250,000).

Other Aspects

In discussing some of the general problems that must be solved in handling family pix, Norris noted that though they play off much more slowly than those of more adult appeal, many (especially the ones with special appeal to the juve trade) can become timeless attractions "always in release somewhere, sometime"). "Flanders," for example, which already played off in the New Orleans territory early this year, will be brought back there as this year's Christmas attraction in a number of neighborhood and outlying theatres, all of which will join in with 20th in a new cooperative ad campaign to promote the dates.

Company has also found, Norris said, that with the more modestly budgeted family films, the area saturation playoff is the most successful. Such will be the approach

Believe Pre-Opening Campaign For 'Alamo' Ran Around $1,000,000

The cost of the pre-opening campaign for "The Alamo" may have been $1,000,000. This includes a reported $150,000 fee for publicist Russell Birdwell who took over the bally when producer-director-star John Wayne had a falling out with Jim Hennagan. However, Wayne had indicated that Hennagan will still participate in the proceeds, to the extent of 2½% up to $100,000.

Although Birdwell's free-wheeling and expensive campaign made an impact, there was considerable friction between United Artists' pub-ad staff and the indie publicist throughout the production. UA's idea on how the picture should be sold and Birdwell's were frequently at odds, but Birdwell had the confidence of Wayne and his ideas prevailed. UA's was upset, to say the least, by Birdwell's spending spree. In addition, the publicist's book-length memorandums and releases were the subject of a great deal of inter-office comment that cou'd hardly be called complimentary.

Audience Board Gloms Presley As 'An Adult'

At the request of Paramount, the National Audience Board recently gathered its New York associates to take a critical look at post-Army Elvis Presley in "GI Blues." Most of the grownup reviewers (who are officials of civic and national organizations), agreed that the teen r&r fave "seemed more mature" and did a good acting and singing job, but 28% said the picture did not meet their "standards of good taste."

Board, which recently expanded to review of feature films as well as tv, saw the picture Oct. 26 at the Paramount screening room in New York.

Response of ⅔ of the reviewers was that Presley in his first post-Army picture "projects a matured personality; turns in a good performance; retains his popularity as a singer."

While the panel basically figured Presley as teen entertainment, with 71% agreeing the film would be "entertaining for teenagers," more than 50% said they would recommend the picture to their adult friends.

Regarding the query on taste, 13% said they "strongly agreed" that the picture met their own standards of good taste, and another 50% "agreed" with the standards. But close to 11% took strong issue with th standards, and another 17.5% at least took issue. A slight percentage had no opinion.

NBA plans in the future to award a seal of approval to films and tv shows requesting review. Details of the plan re now being worked out.

Value Line Survey On The Fine Example For Others of Metro and U

There's a way for Hollywood filmmakers to prosper—just take the cue from Metro and Decca-owned Universal. Both these companies, via their individual fiscal stories of late, have done a great deal in chasing the gloom. So states Arnold Bernhard & Co., most persistent among Wall Street outfits to analyze film corporations.

The opinions of Bernhard, as publisher of the Value Line investment survey, frequently mirror a financial district thinking, and for this alone are significant.

Value Line this week notes that in the past three months the value of Decca stock has gone up 21% and M-G 23%.

The M-G upheat is due to "Ben-Hur," not only because of the company's having achieved a successful production but also because of the marketing approach. Bernhard says that the distribution operation, cut from the "Ten Commandments" and "Around the World in 80 Days" pattern, is slow roadshow but eventually will bring in the maximum boxoffice receipts.

Exhibitors won't like this, but the fact remains that this kind of modus operandi further keys a more successful policy of lesser pictures in number, but with a

Soviets Dominate Frisco's Festival

By WILLIAM STEIF

San Francisco, Nov. 1.

San Francisco's fourth annual film festival looks like a triumph for the Russians.

U.S.S.R. was only nation which sent a "delegation" and Soviets seem fairly certain to cop one of the top Golden Gate Awards with "Ballad of a Soldier," and possibly all four (best picture, best actor, best actress, best director).

Last couple days of screening may change this, but even so the Russians, with an attractive young actress (Zhanna Prokhorenko) and young actor (Vladimir Ivashev) out of "Ballad," the "Ballad" director (Grigori Tchukhrai) and an English-speaking Moscow critic (Alexander Karaganov), have deeply impressed those they've come in contact with in Frisco area.

More important, possibly, they've rated the lion's share of space and time in all three media, have acted like "perfect gents" throughout and have been readily available to anyone who's wanted to talk to them.

So far, only one untoward "incident" has taken place. Last Friday (28) night the Russians tossed a black-tie party for upwards of 100 persons in a White Russian neighborhood of Frisco.

The party was on the second floor in a big room, which had an adjacent bar (vodka consumption was particularly high that night). At ground-floor entrance two teenagers in scout uniforms and two men in scout uniforms passed out a newspaper-sized pamphlet with the heading, "Wanted, for Murder . . Khruschev." On this were two photos of the party chairman.

At top of the stairs stood Russian hosts waiting to receive guests, all of whom felt It incumbent to ditch pamphlets they were handed by the time they reached their hosts. Pamphlets were printed by White Russian organization which calls itself United Russian-American Anti-Communist Organization.

Whole thing was very orderly—cops were on hand—and if the Red Russian hosts noticed the White

Warner Bros. release is a wonderfully warm, rich and compelling picture about truly flesh-and-blood people. And yet, the commercial success of "The Sundowners" appears to be another, and very delicate, matter. The problem is to convey to the public a marketable "image" that is also faithful to the film's high standards. That won't be easy, for this is a picture that won't "classify" easily in the public's imagination.

It is set in the Australia of the 1920s and, although its appeal is intrinsically universal and its characters identifiably human, it defies the advertising urge to pinpoint and sensationalize or clarify in terms of imminence or excitement. As such, its success hinges on the reputation of its producer Fred Zinnemann (in more discriminating circles, of course), the existing popularity of its stars and, most important of all, the extent of favorable word-of-mouth. On the hopeful assumption that a fine product normally finds a receptive market, "The Sundowners" should be a boxoffice success.

Jon Cleary's novel is the basi source from which Zinnemann's inspiration springs. Between Cleary and Zinnemann lies Isobel Lennart's perceptive, virile screenplay, loaded with bright, telling lines of dialog and gentle philosophical comment. But, fine as the scenario is, it is Zinnemann's poetic glances into the souls of his characters, little hints of deep longings, hidden despairs, indomitable spirit that make the picture the achievement it is. He has also managed a stimulating visuo-cultural expedience, particularly early in the film in nature scenes that seem to have popped to life right out of the pages of National Geographic magazine. In lesser hands these passages might have grossly lacked relevance and delayed the pace of the human story. Not so, under Zinnemann's aesthetic guidance.

On paper, the story sounds something short of fascinating. It tells of an Irish-Australian sheepdrover (Robert Mitchum) whose fondness for the freedom of an itinerant existence clashes with the fervent hope of settling-down shared by his wife (Deborah Kerr) and his son (Michael Anderson Jr.). The wife, in an effort to raise funds for a down-payment on a farm, persuades her husband to accept stationary employment as a shearer. Then, in a petulant fit, he gambles away the entire family savings. His attempt to make amends backfires, but it provides the irony for a desirably natural ending.

Mitchum's rugged masculinity is right for the part. His thespic range seems narrow, but that can be deceptive, for there are moments when he projects a great deal of feeling with what appears to be a minimum of effort. This may be the finest work he has done in films. Miss Kerr gives a luminous and penetrating portrayal of the faithful wife, rugged pioneer stock on the outside, wistful and feminine within. There is one fleetingly eloquent scene at a train station, in which her eyes meet those of an elegant lady traveller, that ranks as one of the most memorable moments ever to cross a screen.

Peter Ustinov, as a whimsical, learned bachelor who joins the family and slowly evolves into its "household pet," gives a robust, rollicking performance. Glynis Johns is a vivacious delight as a hotelkeeper who sets her sights on matrimonially-evasive Ustinov. Young Anderson does a convincing job as the son, likewise Dina Merrill as a lonely wife befriended by Miss Kerr. The picture contains some wonderful supporting performances, one of the best of which is John Meillon's as an expectant father. Meillon accomplishes one of the best cockeyed drunk bits seen in years.

Art, photographic and technical skills are extremely well represented by the craftsmen assembled in the bush country of Australi and at Elstree Studios in London. There is evidence of painstaking camera work by Jack Hildyard. Editing by Jack Harris is tidy and sensible. Art director Michael Stringer's efforts are authentic and appropriate, and the same goes for wardrobe designer Elizabeth Haffenden and set dressers Frants Folmer and Terrence Morgan. Dimitri Tiomkin's music, heavy on the melancholy harmonica, backs up most of the action with listenably melodic tenderness, but flares up into mor violent tempos and punctuations where necessary.

Zinnemann has resisted all petty tendencies to be theatrical at the expense of being real. Tube.

Nothing dramatically novel or emotionally stimulating happens in "The Secret of the Purple Reef." But, as strictly Grade B mystery melodrama, it ought to please the tastes of those who will settle for several flurries of explosive combat in the foreground and screenful of tropical sea water the background. Since the views are embellished by some handsome CinemaScope-De Luxe Color photography, and the action is set against Caribbean locales, the Gene Corman production for 20th-Fox is suitable for programming as a companion piece, and might even make a small splash as a minor chief attraction in isolated rural areas where the natives don't grow restless if the drama is little m re than an excuse for waterlogged travelog.

Corman's "Reef"er springs from the SatEvePosted novel by Dorothy Cottrell, as efficiently screenplayed by Harold Yablonsky. It has to do with a young man's efforts to discover why a fishing vessel commanded by his late brother went to the bottom on a supposedly calm sea. The mystery is unearthed, or in this case dehydrated, in routine melodramatic fashion. The title hints ther will be some underwater activity, but the action all takes place on the surface.

In addition to Kay Norton's scenic-minded camerawork, th film's chief asset is Buddy Breg an's music, alive with semi-atonalistic young ideas and appropriate tropical percussion rhythms. A good dead of footage could have been trimmed down or out by Corman and director William N. Witney. There are several unnecessary or strained passages, particularly a long pre-titles burial sequence. Mechanically, Peter C. Johnson's editing is adept.

Acting tends to be wooden among the younger principals, livelier among the character players. Jeff Richards plays the young man out to solve the mystery, Rich rd Chamberlain his brother and co-sleuth, Margia Dean a doomed casino proprietress. Slickest work is turned in by Peter Falk as the heavy and Terence de Marney as an alcoholic old salt, and there's a sympathetic portrayal of an elderly native islander by Robert Earl. Tube.

Essentially a stunning travelog on the treasures of Rome and, particularly, the Vatican. Framed by an aggressively innocuous American-girl-meets-Italian-boy story. Nice for the arties.

JB Film Enterprises release of a Dominick Franco-Fulvio Lucisano production. Features Barbara Florian, Charles Fawcett, Gabriele Tinti. Arnoldo Foa. Directed and written by Robert Spafford. Despite woefully amateurish script that passes for a story, this Italian-U.S. coproduction venture should hold a good deal of interest for special U.S. situations and patrons who like to travel sitting down. At least 80% of the footage is pure travelog through Rome and the Vatican, featuring the classic ruins of the former and the magnificent art treasures of the latter. These scenes, photographed in often breathtaking color, are fine and informative.

All this, however, has been framed with some silly, artlessly acted and badly post-synched (English) fiction that has to do with a pretty American girl's visit to Rome with her ex-G.I. father. Her guide through the city is the Italian son of an old friend of her father's. It's boy meets girl, boy shows girl, boy gets girl. That's okay until, sandwiched in between a visit to the Sistine Chapel and the Vatican Museum, is a sidewalk cafe scene in which the heroine semi-rocks a little ballad called "At Seventeen" ("I'm seventeen and searching for love"). An audience, which moments before had been thrilled by the Sistine Chapel Choir and Lydia Aldini's singing of the "Ave Maria," is inclined to be struck totally dumb.

While Carol Danell gets program credit for singing "At Seventeen," nobody is cited as film editor, which may be just as well since the continuity is ragged i the extreme. Rino Filippini's camerawork is particularly good in the hard-to-photograph interiors, including the Sistine Chapel, the Catacombs of St. Sebastian, the Basilica of St. John The Lateran and St. Peter's.

As the youngsters, Barbara Florian and Gabriele Tinti are handsome enough to rate chances in another flim which might show whether or not they have screen personalities. Robert Spafford's direction is uncertain, but he does rate a nod if he was responsible for getting permission to film inside the Vatican. Alberico Vitalini composed and conducted the score, played by the Roi Symphony Orchestra. Anby.

Film tells of the sudden infatuation of middle-aged father for a young teen-ager. He fights it for while. Just as he's about to give in, he's shocked to his senses by the discovery that his own young daughter has run off with a friend of his.

This picture might also and more accurately be titled, "Hard Times Among Souther Japan's Coal Miners 1953-54." This would be a way of saying that what might be a blockbuster in Japan is a total bust outside Japan, for the theme simply has little to interest any western audience.

Deep-rooted family ties, and all they imply, seem to have more significance to the Japanese than to westerners, and therefore this picture may seem more poignant to Japanese eyes than to western onee.

The picture depicts how four orphaned children of a mining family are forced to go their separate ways and manage to reunite during a local depression. This is supposed to be told through the eyes of a 10-year-old girl, nicely played by Akiko Maeda.

Well, life is difficult, but everyone survives and sub-plots abound —none of them too clear, ven with English subtitles.

The script cliches are wholly predictable: the cheapskate storekeeper with heart of gold, the upper-class social worker, the mine disaster, etc., etc. Along with th script cliches are the camera cliches, all looking as if they came out of a Hollywood program picture of 25 years ago. Another "western" touch is the zither musical background—more cliche. And on top of all this, the picture meanders for an hour and 40 minutes.

She	Birgitte Federspiel
He	Preben Lerdorff Rye
Man From Village	Victor Montell

This brooding, explosive and superbly fabricated Danish film has only one obvious flaw: it is simply too explicit for exhibition in the U.S.

The picture starts in a very low key, with a hunted man (Preben Lerdorff Rye) seeking shelter in a cottage on a lonely stretch of land along the North Sea in 1947. A seemingly cold, expressionless woman (Birgitte Federspiel) lets him in, feeds him and allows him to sleep by her hearth.

Gradually, her story comes out: she is the widow of a Resistance hero. She has lived in this cottage, alone, for three years, mourning her husband, who was murdered by brutish collaborators.

The hunted man sees the setup is wonderful for him. He determines to hide out and, further, to make love to the woman. He does and she opens up, like a flower meeting th sun. But slowly details of her husband's murder seep out—the telltale detail is that the murderer was supposed to have had a scar "like an animal's mouth" on his right arm.

In an utterly shocking climactic scene, the woman is at the height of erotic passion when she espies the scar on her lover's arm. In the film's last 25 minutes she plays with the man, wrings a coward's confession from him and finally shoots him as he tries to escape.

This is a conscious updating of the Cain and Abel story, with this quote from Genesis thrown on the screen at the film's start: "And the Lord set his mark upon Cain lest any finding him should kill him. Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken from him sevenfold."

There can be no doubt that the woman, having erased the stain of the man by killing him, bears within herself the greater guilt of murder.

Johan Jacobsen's direction lends this Gothic theme great validity, and the Jacobsen-Ake Borglund black-and-white camera work is inpeccable, while Eric Fiehn's incidental music is just right.

Miss Federspiel etches an unforgettable character and Rye offer a finely balanced portrayal of maleness, cowardice and cunning.

Indeed, this is a highly moral film—but the candor of its tw seduction scenes makes France's "The Lovers" seem like a Disney family special. Unfortunately, these two scenes—especially the latter one—are indispensable to the film's dramatic integrity, and therefore it appears unlikely that many, if any, U.S. art houses would want to take a chance on "A Stranger Knocks." Stef.

"Flight" never gets off th ground. Though the John Steinbeck story, fro which the film was made, is simple enough—a Mexican-American youth kills drunk in a Monterey, Cal., bar, circa 1900, flees to the hills and eventually is caught and shot by a lynching party—the picture fails to build much tension and fails to evoke much sympathy for the youth (Efrain Ramirez).

Among reasons for this failure are:

(1) Barnaby Conrad's remarkably childish scripting;

(2) Unclear motivation of the lynch party—they may be "bad men" but why are they bad?

(3) Insufficient odds in favor of the youth—he's badly wounded right at the start of the chase, and it's mostly a case of waiting till he's finished off;

(4) Over-realism—th is, the youth appeared to be living such grinding poverty at the film's start that perhaps he's better off dead.

Relatively minor flaws include over-acting, which may be director Louis Bispo's fault or may result from the fact that most of th players either came straight from legit or had no acting experience whatever, and some of the most over-emphasized makeup seen on the screen since the early 1930s.

On the credit side is a good score by Laurindo Almeida and some superb photography of the Big Sur area south of Monterey by Verne Carlson. These credits ren't enough to pull this "" picture through. Stef.

The Shaw Brothers' Hongkong studio has come up with an interesting and, at times, exciting Eastmancolor picture in this old Chinese legend.

Story revolves around a haunted temple, where a young scholar (Chao Lei) beds down one night. An exquisite maiden (Betty Loh Tih) appears and tries to seduce him, but because he is a highly moral fellow, he rejects her advances. Gradually, he understands that she is a ghost and is trying to set him up to be killed by her ghostly aunt. Only so long as he is morally upright will he be able to save his life. Rest of the film carries out this theme, with temptations spread along the path of the young scholar—in final frames the murderous ghost is done in.

As a fairy tale, this is delightful, with director Li Han-hsiang keeping things moving at a nice, scary clip, the cast giving good performances and Ho Lu-Ying's color camera work pleasing the eye immensely.

It is a question whether this

BRITON: TEENERS MUCH TOO LURID

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

Problems caused in Britain by "excessive violence and brutality" in American films can be solved easily if steps are taken early in production, according to John Trevelyan, secretary and chief executive officer of the British Board of Film Censors. In Hollywood to compar notes and learn, Trevelyan said last week the level of violence and brutality in Yank pix generally is ore than British audiences will stand for.

What Trevelyan advocates is a policy whereby the producer includes unreasonable violence in such a way that the portion of film can be lifted out for British viewing. Censor exec noted that the trend toward long takes makes this concept difficult, and suggested that certain scenes be lens d in three or more portions so the questionable action can be deleted without marring the storyline.

Trevelyan indicated he and h's colleagues are far less concerned with sex in motion pictures, explaining the British classification system allows minors to see only those films deemed suitable. While not urging the U.S. industry adopt a similar "adults only," etc., policy, Trevelyan made it clear the British system works well and has distinct advantages. "irst of all," he pointed out, "the X rating (admitting one under 16) enables a producer to make adult films. The X rating and the A rating (children admitted if accompanied by responsible adult) also give us a defense, for when someone criticizes a picture on the basis of sex or violence, we are able to answer, 'You were warned'."

In expl iuing that Telemeter's pay television system is about to invade England, Trevelyan declared the Censor Board's work will become ineffective if pix are to be shown on tollvision without going through me authority which governs pix in theatres. He explained the classification system could not work on pay or free television except in th area of viewing time, putting adult pix n the air only in the late evening hours.

Massepequa, L.I. Latest Antitruster

Bar Harbor Theatre, Massapequa, L. I., has filed suit in U. S. District Court of New York against 21 distributors and exhibitors, charging conspiracy in violation of antitrust laws involving distribution of art house films in Nassau County.

The plaintiff, Sam Baker's Bar Harbor Amusement Corp., says that the Cinema, Manhassett; a Rugoff & Becker house, and the Malvern, Malver a B. S. Moss operation both about 20 miles away from the Bar Harbor, get first run art product which the Bar Harbor just then play second run. Plaintiff seeks "right to compete on an equal basis" for the product. Baker is seeking $100,000 in treble damages.

D. H. Isacson, Baker's attorney, alleges that the defendants control 95% of the art type films available. Defendants include the above named circuits, Zenith International, Continental Distributing, Donald S. Rugoff, Charles H. Moss, and others.

'Can-Can' to Chi Nabes

Chicago, Nov. 1.

20th-Fox has set "Can-Can," which played nearly 27 weeks in the Loop, for its first outlying run here in six theatres starting Nov. 18. It'll be the pic's only day-dater for the balance of the year.

Two-week bookings call for two performances day at upped prices.

'Vulgar, Pointless, In Bad Taste' But 'Mr. Teas' Not Pornography

Philadelphia, Nov. 1.

Nudity doesn't necessarily make a film obscene, nor even interesting, Judge David L. Ullman declared in Common Pleas Court here after a jury trial of Edward Seretsky, owner of the Aabbe Art Cinema, West Philadelphia nabe art house.

Seretsky had been arrested for showing "The Immoral Mr. Teas" and a jury of five men and seven women, along with Judge Ullman, went to Aabbe Art to view the picture. The jury returned a verdict of not guilty after deliberating five hours.

[Film was produced in Hollywood by Pad-Ram Enterprises. VARIETY review, Jan. 27, 1960, called it a "nude comedy with art touches."]

The jurist said he concurred in the decision. "If I were sitting without a jury I would have reached the same verdict. However, we are not putting a gold star on Mr. Seretsky. If I had paid $1.50 to see the movie, I would have sued for a refund."

Judge Ullman called the film "vulgar, pointless and in bad taste" and warned that any defendant in his court found guilty of showing an obscene film "will serve time." "Fines," he added, "only act as a license for them to go out and commit the same offense."

Dist. Atty. Victor H. Blanc, whose county detectives arrested Seretsky, said he was not disturbed by the acquittal. "I am going to drive obscene films out of Philadelphia," the D.A. said. "And I am going to do it with every means at my disposal. We really have only a half dozen places to worry about."

Periodic visits will be made to offending film houses by Assistant district attorneys and detectives, Blanc said. The new policy marks a departure from previous methods, when the D.A's office waited for specific complaints before taking action.

Cycle of Daring?

Irving Rubine, v.p. of Highroad Productions, in discussing the overall film promotion fraternity, says "it's not without significance that Joseph Levine looks like a great innovator. He's not, really, but he's doing things which haven't been done for a long time."

Point, of course, is that Levine has been creating excitement of the kind that used to be (repeat, used to be).

'Runaway?'—Nay! Frank & Panama Just Pilgrims

Mel Frank and Norman Panama, the writer-producer-director team, are temporarily shifting their headquarters to London where they will establish Quadrangle Productions as the canopy under which they will make several pictures abroad. Pair, who have worked in Hollywood for the past 20 years, insist that their new venture cannot in any way be construed as "runaway" production.

At present they have two pictures, with a third as a possibility, which they plan to make abroad. They stressed that they were in no sense abandoning Hollwood and that they would return to the Coast with their first project that is best suited for production there. They indicated that they did not agree with those who maintain that Hollywood is the best place to make all pictures, but they conceded that Hollywood is tops for certain pictures.

Their move to London, they said New York yesterday (Tues.), was merely devised to give them wider latitude and to establish a program of international picture-making that would permit them to produce pictures "where they sh uld be made." Having worked in Hollywood for 20 years, they feel the change of scenery will provide more creativity and greater stimulation.

With "The Facts of Life," Lucille Ball-Bob Hope starrer, delivered to United Artists, the team has extended its arrangement with UA. The new deal involves the first two films which they will make abroad—"Road to Hong Kong," reuniting Hope and Bing Crosby, and "Five Pieces of Maria," for which they hope to get Dean Martin and Jack Lemmon. "Road," which will also star Sophia Loren, will get under way at the end of June, with locations being done in

20th Privately Settles With Authors Before Trial

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

Out of court settlement has been reached in the $100,000 copyright infringement-breach of contract suit against 20th-Fox instituted 17 months ago by writer Julius Epstein, the estate of Philip Epstein and author Rosemary Taylor. Claim was to have gone to court last week, according to Mel Nimmer, attorney repping trio.

Suit was filed in connection with rights to "Chicken Every Sunday," Rosemary Taylor novel which the Epstein brothers translated into a play. Warner Bros. had purchased screen rights to both and subsequently sold them to 20th which filmed property as a theatrical feature in 1948. Defendants' action followed production of the property by 20th as a tv film for its "Twentieth Century-Fox Hour."

The Epsteins and Miss Taylor contended studio did not have tv rights.

BILL PERLBERG'S BACK AND LOVES HOLLYWOOD

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

Producer William Perlberg, who just completed a four-month shooting schedule in Europe, returned here last week and declared himself 100% in support of Hollywood labor's battle against foreign production. Filmaker, having put most of "The Counterfeit Traitor" into the can, now resumes "The Pleasure Of His Company" which was suspended seven months ago by the actors strike.

Said Perlberg: "I don't think a producer should take just any picture abroad and deprive Hollywood technicians of work." He explained, however, that certain films —"Counterfeit Traitor" is one of them—must be done abroad because their locations demand it. "We used authentic backgrounds that couldn't have been simulated here," he pointed out.

To prove his stated view, Perlberg told newsmen at Paramount that he could have scored "Traitor" in Europe for one-fourth the cost of scoring it here. "But we signed Alfred Newman, and we'll do it here."

Perlberg and his partner, George Seaton, have three properties definitely scheduled on their Paramount slate—"The Hook," being scripted by John Michael Hayes; "Night Without End," being written by Eric Ambler; and "Carnet de Bal." All three, he said, will be filmed here.

Producer noted that actors and technicians cost less in Europe than they do in Hollywood. "But Hollywood," he confirmed, "is the best place to make films. The finest craftsmen and equipment in the world are here. And Hollywood is a center for actors. In Europe you have to bring them in from all surrounding areas and pay transportation, food and lodging."

Perlberg admitted that "Traitor" erupted in countless headaches,

L.A. Turns Spotty Albeit 'Alamo' Bangup 22G, 'Spartacus' Boff 30G, 2; 'Package' Light 16G, 'Desire' 12G

Los Angeles, Nov. 1.

Local first-runs continue to topple this week, with only a few money pix in the running. "Alamo" is shaping to get a bangup $22,000 at Carthay, but balance of incomers are failing to make much of an impression on over-all outlook.

"Surprise Package" is after thin $16,000 in four theatres while "Desire in Dust" is only dull $12,000 or close, also in four.

"Can-Can" on first general release should do good $7,000 at the Vogue. "School For Scoundrels" is hot $5,000 in second Music Hall.

Among hard-ticket pix, "Spartacus" should close second week at Pantages with boff $30,000. "Ben-Hur" looks fancy $22,500 in 49th round at Egyptian.

Estimates for This Week

Carthay (FWC) (1,138; $1.75-$3.50)—"Alamo" (UA). Bangup $22,000.

Fine Arts (FWC) (631; 90-$1.50)—"Man in a Cocked Hat" (Indie). Slick $5,000. Last week, "Sons and Lovers" (20th) (6th wk-5 days), $3,400.

Fox Wilshire, Los Angeles, Iris, Loyola (FWC) (1,990; 2,019; 825; 1,298; 99-$1.50)—"Desire in Dust" (20th) and "Kiss Them for Me" (20th). Dull $12,000 or near. Last week, "Fox Wilshire, Los Angeles with Vogue, "Come Dance With Me" (Col), "Oscar Wilde" (Crest) (1st general release), $8,600. 'Lace' Great 14G Pacing Toronto

Toronto, Nov. 1.

Newcomers currently are topped by "Midnight Lace," smash at Uptown. "Under 10 Flags" is only fair at Imperial. "Strangers When We Meet," in second stanza, still leads holdovers with wow take. "Magnificent Seven," in second frame, is so-so. "Song Without End" shapes solid in fourth stanza at Carlton.

Estimates for This Week

Carlton (Rank) (2,318; $1-$1.50)—"Song Without End" (Col) (4th wk). Fine $12,000. Last week, $15,000.

Eglington (FP) (1,080; $1-$1.40)—"Jungle Cat" (BV) (5th wk). Neat 3,500. Last week, $4,000.

Hollywood (FP) (1,080; $1-$1.25)—"Strangers When We Meet" (Col) (2d wk). Wham $15,000. Last week, $16,000.

Hyland (Rank) (1,057; $1-$1.50)—"From Terrace" (20th) (14th wk). Nice $4,000. Last week, $4,500.

Imperial (FP) (3,343; $1-$1.25)—"Under 10 Flags" (Par). Fair $11,000. Last week, "High Ti " (20th), $11,000 in 8 days.

Uptown (Loew) (2,745; $1-$1.25)—"Midnight Lace" (U). Smash $14,000 or near. Last week, "Subterraneans" (M-G) (2d wk), poor $4,500.

Mpls. Mild; 'Song' NSH $8,000, 'Epitaph' Modest 5½G, 'Time' Big 8G, 2d

Minneapolis, Nov. 1.

Trade is spotty again this session. Strongest newcomer is a nabe first-run, "School for Scoundrels," off to a mighty start at Suburban World. On the mainstem, two fresh entries are having tough sledding. "Let No Man Write My Epitaph" shapes so-so at Gopher while "Song Without End" looks off-key at Orpheum.

Holdovers prevail elsewhere. "High Time" looms big in second round at State as does "All Young Men" on m.o. at the Pan. "Dark at Top of Stairs" is good at Lyric in third week. "Come Dance With Me" at World, also in third chapter, continues lively. It's the 10th week for "This Is Cinerama" at Century where it's rousing.

Estimates for This Week

Academy (Mann) (947; $1.75-$2.65)—"Ben-Hur" (M-G) (36th wk). Steady $8,000. Last week, $9,000.

Century (Cinerama, Inc.) (1,150; $1.75-$2.65)—"This Is Cinemara" (Cinerama) (reissue) (10th wk). Rousing $10,500. Last week, $9,500.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; $1-$1.25)—"Let No Man Write My Epitaph" (Col). Fair $5,500. Last week, "Jungle Cat" (BV) (4th wk), $2,000.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; $1-$1.50)—"Top of Stairs" (WB) (3d wk). Good

'Can-Can' Lively $10,000, L'ville; 'Desire' Dud 5G

Louisville, Nov. 1.

"Can-Can," Brown's replacement for "Ben-Hur," started out nicely on hard-ticket policy, with sizable take for opening week. "Village of Damned" at United Artists is mild while Rialto's "Desire In Dust" shapes drab. "Girl of Night" in second at the Mary Anderson is off to fair take after sock opener.

Estimates for This Week

Brown (Fourth Avenue) (1,200; $1.25-$2)—"Can-Can" (20th). Here after "Ben-Hur" (M-G) great 23-week run. Reviews were full of praise. Looks like nice $10,000, and may build. Last week, "Ben-Hur" (23d wk), $8,000.

Kentucky (Switow) (900; 75-$1)—"Started in Naples" (Par) (2d wk). Mild $3,000, after first week's $5,000.

Mary Anderson (People's) (900; 75-$1)—"Girl of Night" (WB) (2d wk). Off to fair $6,000 after first week's $8,500.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (3,000; 60-$1)—"Desire in Dust" (20th). Poor $5,000. Last week, "Jungle Cat" (BV) $7,000.

United Artists (UA) (3,000; 75-$1)—"Village of Damned" (M-G) and "Gunmen From Laredo" (Col). Livened up some by plenty of kids filling house at low admish. But only mild $7,000 looms. Last week, "Surprise Package" (Col), $7,200.

'Mike' Fine $6,000, Omaha; 'Dared' 4G

Omaha, Nov. 1.

Biz is perking a bit at downtown first-runs this session, thanks to teachers' conventions. Aided sharply was hard-ticket "Ben-Hur" at Cooper, fancy in 37th round. "For Love of Mike" is rated fine at the Omaha in first but "Song Without End" is only fair at Orpheum. "10 Who Dared" looks fairish at State for opener.

Estimates for This Week

Cooper (Cooper) (693; $1.55-$2.20) — "Ben-Hur" (M-G) (37th wk). Fast $7,000. Last week, $5,400.

Omaha (Tristates) (2,066; 75-$1)—"For Love of Mike" (20th) and "Young Jesse James" (20th). Fine $6,000. Last week, "Aim at Stars" (Col) and "Boy Who Stole Million" (Par), $3,500.

Orpheum (Tristates) (2,877; 75-$1—"Song Without End" (Col). Fair $6,500. Last week, "Surprise Package" (Col), $5,500.

State (Cooper) (743; $1)—"10 Who Dared" (BV). Fairish $4,000. Last week, "Subterraneans" (M-G), $3,800.

Buff Light But 'Stairs' Firm 8G; 'Seven' Fair 10G

Buffalo, Nov. 1.

First-run trade is quite dull at most spots currently despite two newcomers. "Dark at Top of Stairs," good in second round at the Center, looms standout. "Girl of Night" is okay in first holdover session at Paramount. Neither "Magnificent Seven" nor "Desire in Dust" are getting any place of new entrants.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loew) (3,500; 70-$1)—"Magnificent Seven" (UA) and "Walking Target" (Indie). Mild $10,000 or less. Last week, "Studs Lonigan" (UA) and "Five Bold Women" (Indie), $5,200.

Center (AB-PT) (3,000; 70-$1.25)—"Top of Stairs" (WB) (2d wk). Good $8,000. Last week, $12,000.

Century (UATC) (2,700; 70-$1)—"Desire in Dust" (20th) and "Squad Car" (20th). Dim $5,000 in 6 days. Last week, "12 to Moon" (Col) and "Battle in Outer Space" (Col), $7,500.

Lafayette (Basil) (3,000; 70-$1)—"On Waterfront" (Col) and "Wild Ones" (Col) (reissues). Dismal $14,500. Last week, "Caltiki" (AA) and "Tormented" (AA), $5,000.

Paramount (AB-PT) (3,000; 70-$1)—"Girl of Night" (WB) and "Notorious Mr. Monks" (WB) (2d wk). Okay $8,000. Last week, $13,000.

Teck (Loew) (1,200; $1.75-$2.75)—"Ben-Hur" (M-G) (33d wk). Good $4,500 or over. Last week, $4,600.

Cinema (Martina) (450; 70-$1)—"Jungle Cat" (BV) (4th wk). Slow $1,500. Last week, $2,000.

'Lace' Rousing $18,000, Philly; 'Alamo' Good 12G, 'Night' 11G; 'Stairs' 10G, 4

Philadelphia, Nov. 1.

Lively weekend trade is making whole b.o. picture shape brighter here currently, with some newcomers credited with helping biz. "Midnight Lace" pacing the field with a sockeroo round at the Arcadia. "The Alamo" is fairly good at Midtown although not as loud as expected. "Girl of Night" is lofty on initial week out at Stanton.

"Sunrise at Campobello" looms okay in second Stanley round. "Hiroshima Mon Amour" shapes solid on opener at Trans-Lux.

"Dark at Top of Stairs" still is bright in fourth Fox stanza. "Surprise Package" loonis so-so opener at Randolph.

Estimates for This Week

Arcadia (S&S) (536; 99-$1.80)—"Midnight Lace" (U). Sockeroo $18,000 or near. Last week, "All Young Cannibals" (M-G) (2d wk), $6,000.

Boyd (SW) (1,562; $1.40-$2.75)—"Ben-Hur" (M-G) (49th wk). Slick $11,500. Last week, $14,000.

Fox (Milgram) (2,000; 99-$1.80)—"Top of Stairs" (WB) (4th wk). Bright $10,000. Last week, $12,000.

Goldman (Goldman) (1,200; 99-$1.80)—"Jungle Cat" (BV) (3d wk). Nice $7,000 in 5 days. Last week, $9,000.

Midtown (Goldman) (1,000; $2-$2.75)—"Alamo" (UA). Shapes good $12,000, but rated not up to hopes. Last week, "Can-Can" (20th) (26th wk), $6,500.

Randolph (Goldman) (2,500; 99-$1.80)—"Surprise Packag " (Col). So-so $10,500. Last week, "Song Without End" (Col) (3d wk), $10,000.

Stanley (SW) (2,500; 99-$1.80)—"Sunrise at Campobello" (WB) (2d wk). Okay $12,000. Last week, $16,500.

Stanton (SW) (1,483; 99-$1.80)—"Girl of Night" (WB). Lofty $11,000. Last week, "All Young Men" (Col) (4th wk) $7,800.

Studio (Goldberg) (483; 99-$1.80)—"Tosca" (Indie) and "Aida" (Indie). Good $4,000 or near. Last week, "Morals Squad" (Indie) and "Sin and Desire" (Indie) (2d wk) $5,000.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (500; 99-$1.80)—"Hiroshima Mon Amour" (Zenith). Solid $7,000. Last week, "Sons and Lovers" (20th) (4th wk), $3,200.

Viking (Sley) (1,000; 99-$1.80)—"Desire in Dust" (20th) (2d wk). Good $7,000. Last week, $8,000.

World (R&B-Pathe) (449; 99-$1.80)—"End of Innocence" (20th). Oke $3,200. Last week, "Royal Ballet" (Indie) (3d wk), $2,200.

'Song' Sockeroo $11,000, Denver; 'Night' Hot 15G

Denver, Nov. 1.

It's either feast or famine in the Denver area this week. There are a lot of new entries, with some of them promising; others are fair to slow. "Song Without End" looks sock at Centre while "Girl of Night" shapes big. "All Fine Young Cannibals" looms slow. "Ben-Hur" is going strong again in 29th week at Denham.

New Product Perks Chi; 'Alamo' Fair $16,000, 'Lace' Smash 28G, 'Package' Smooth 25G, 'Spartacus' Hep 21G, 3d

Chicago, Nov. 1.

Stack of new pix is giving the Chi first-run front a much-needed hypo this round, albeit the totals are still under hopes. Mildish weather hasn't helped, and election campaigning is also hampering biz. Hard-ticketed "Alamo," up against some negative reviews, is gunning for mild $16,000 Palace initialer. "Midnight Lace" preem shapes smash $28,000 total at United Artists. Oriental's "Surprise Package" is taking a very good $25,000 firster.

"Hiroshima Mon Amour" at the arty World expects a robust take in first week. Surf's "Battle of Sexes" looks for fine preem stanza.

"All Fine Young Cannibals" shapes mild in Woods second round while "Let No Man Write My Epitaph" is fast in State-Lake third. "Magnificent Seven" in ditto Roosevelt stanza should bag a robust take.

The Chicago's "Dark at Top of Stairs" is nice in fifth session. Second week of "Come Dance With Me" is rated good at the Loop.

On hardticket, "Spartacus" posted a hep third canto at the McVickers. "Ben-Hur" continued fine stride within 45th Todd Theatre week.

'Seven' Snappy $15,000, Pitt; 'Night' Fair $8,000, 2d; 'Ben-Hur' Fat 12G

Pittsburgh, Nov. 1.

Strong new entry, "Magnificent Seven" at Penn and two hefty holdovers, "Ben-Hur," in 41st round at Warner, and "Jungle Cat" in third at Squirrel Hill, are the lone bright spots in Pitt's current session. "I Aim At Stars" at Harris is lean for opener. "Girl of Night" shapes only fair in second at Stanley. One day Hallowe'en showing of "Midnight Lace" on Saturday was boff.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,365; $1-$1.50)—"Miracle of Fatima" (WB) (reissue). Very soft $3,000. Single showing of "Midnight Lace" (U) on Saturday night hit excellent $2,000. Last week, "Secret of Purple Reef" (20th), $1,900.

Harris (Associated) (2,100; $1-$1.50)—"Aim At Stars" (Col). Slim $3,000 with doubtful help of "Fast and Sexy" (Col) last Saturday ight. Last week, "Surprise Package" (Col), $5,400 in 5 days.

Warner (SW) (1,513; $1.50-$2.75)—"Ben-Hur" (M-G) (41st wk). Excellent $12,000 via two extra morning student shows. Last week, $8,500.

'Seven' Modest $10,500, St. L.; 'Song' Big 10G, 3

St. Louis, Nov. 1.

New product is not proving much help to biz here currently, "Magnificent Seven" being fairish and "Freckles," also new, shaping modest. "Song Without End" is big in third Esquire stanza. Two reissues, "Gigi" and "Around World in 80 Days" at Ambassador are okay.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (Arthur) (2,970; 60-90)—"Gigi" (M-G) and "Around World in 80 Days" (UA) (reissues). Nice $9,000. Last week, "Desire in Dust" (20th), $7,500.

'Damned' Good 9G, Cincy; 'Cat' 8G

Cincinnati, Nov. 1.

Cincy first-runs bid for improvement this canto. Biz-bracer comes partly from four new bills in face of election spotlighting, college and high school football and pro basketball. "Dark at Top of Stairs" shapes modest at Albee in first. "Village of Damned" at Palace looms good. "Jungle Cat" rates fast on opener at Keith's.

"Girl of Night" at Grand and "Song Without End" at the Valley are firm holdovers. Long-run "Ben-Hur" continues sturdy 33d round.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; 90-$1.25)—"Top of Stairs" (WB). Modest $9,000. Last week, "Magnificent Seven" (UA), $8,500.

Capitol (SW-Cinerama) (1,400; $1.25-$2.75) — "Ben-Hur" (M-G) (33d wk). Firm $13,500. Extra a.m. show gives lift over last week's $12,500.

Esquire Art (Shor) (500; $1.25)—"Royal Ballet" (UA). So-so $1,600. Last week, "Cousins" (Indie), $1,400.

Grand (RKO) (1,400; 90-$1.25)—"Girl of Night" (WB) (m.o.) (2d wk). Good $6,000. Last week, $7,500.

Guild (Vance) (300; $1.25)—"I'm All Right, Jack" (Col) (7th wk). Mild $1,300. Last week, $1,400.

Hyde Park Art (Shor) (500; $1.25)—"Carry On Nurse" (Gov) (m.o.) (2d wk). Good $1,800. Last week, same. Had 10-week run at Esquire Art.

Keith's (Shor) (1,500; 90-$1.25)—"Jungle Cat" (BV). Fast $8,000. Last week, "Surprise Package" (Col) (2d wk), $6,500.

Palace (RKO) (2,600; 90-$1.25)—"Village of Damned" (M-G). Good $9,000. Keying area saturation and exploitation spread by Crosley's WLW and WLW-T with mentalist Dunninger personaling for a day at houses in larger cities. Last week, "One Foot in Hell" (20th), $6,500.

Twin Drive-In (Shor) (1,200 cars each side; 90c)—West side: "Rose Mary" (Indie) and "Virgin Island" (Indie). Oke $6,000. Last week, "Caltiki" (Indie) and "Tormented" (Indie), $5,000. East side: "Wild One" (M-G) and "On Waterfront" (M-G) (reissues). Good $6,000. Last week, "Love Specialist" (Indie) and "Three Blondes In His Life" (Indie) $3,800.

Valley (Wiethe) (1,200; $1-$1.50)—"Song Without End" (Col) (2d wk). So-so $6,000. Last week, $6,200.

B'way Uneven; 'Alamo' Smash $33,000, 'Storm' Mild 28G; 'Spartacus' Giant 32G, 4th, 'Lace'-Stage Lofty 140G, 3d

With only two newcomers this session and the hot race between Kennedy and Nixon for the Presidency drawing attention, there is not much excitment at Broadway first-run theatres currently. Cool, rainy weather is proving a bit helpful but some forced holdovers of not so strong product is quite a handicap.

Chief interest is centered on "The Alamo," playing on hard-ticket at the Rivoli. John Wayne opus hit close to capacity $33,000 in first full week for nine regular shows plus two kiddie matinees. "September Storm" is not getting far on initial session at the Paramount with only mild $28,000 likely, and due to be replaced Nov. 10 by "North To Alaska."

Still taking top coin is "Midnight Lace" with stageshow, with a big $140,000 probable for current (3d) round at the Music Hall. It stays. "Spartacus" still is holding great, around $32,000 in fourth stanza at the DeMille.

"Never On Sunday" hit an amazing $27,2000 in second week at the arty Plaza or ahead of first round's record take. "Inherit the Wind" landed a good $29,000 in third round, day-dating the Astor and arty Trans-Lux 85th Street. Pic is doing solid trade at the latter house.

"Surprise Package" is heading for an okay $18,000 in third round at the Criterion, where "Girl of Night" moves in Nov. 11. "Hell To Eternity" dipped to lean $17,000 in third session at the Capitol, with "Butterfield 8" due on Nov. 16.

"Sunrise at Campobello," helped by two extra kiddie shows, looks to move up to a good $20,000 in current (5th) round at the Palace. "Ben-Hur" is heading for great $32,000 or close in 49th week at the State, with boost from an extra performance.

"I Aim at Stars" is down to lean $6,500 or less in second round at the Forum, with "Let No Man Write My Epitaph" set to open Nov. 10.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,094; 75-$2)—"Inherit the Wind" (UA) (4th wk). Third round finished last night (Tues.) was okay $19,000 or near after $23,000 for second.

Capitol (Loew) (4,820; $1-$2.50) — "Hell To Eternity" (AA) (4th wk). Third stanza ended last night (Tues.) was lean $17,000 or close after $23,000 for second. Stays until Nov. 15, with "Butterfield 8" due to open Nov. 16.

Criterion (Moss) (1,671; 90-$2.40) — "Surprise Package" (Col) (3d wk). This week winding tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for okay $18,000 after $22,000 for second round. "Girl of Night" (WB) opens Nov. 11.

DeMille (Reade) (1,463; $1.50-$3.50)—"Spartacus" (U) (4th wk). This week ending today (Wed.) looks like socko $32,000 after $33,500 for third. Holding on even keel with weekends capacity, with weekdays not selling front rows. Theatre parties are cutting into overall take, too. Advance still is holding big.

Palace (RKO) (1,642; $1.25-$2.50)—"Sunrise at Campobello" (WB) (5th wk). This frame winding up today (Wed.) looks to hit good $20,000. Fourth was $19,000. Finishes run here on Nov. 17; then moves over to Murray Hill on continuous-run, popscale basis. Current week is being helped by two morning student shows.

Forum (Moss) (813; 90-$1.80)—"I Aim At Stars" (Col) (3d wk). First holdover session ended last night (Tues.) was mild $6,500 or less after $11,000 for opener. Goes a few days past third week in order to open "Let No Man Write My Epitaph" (Col) on Nov. 10, day-dating with T-L 52d Street.

Paramount (AB-PT) (3,665; $1-$2) — "September Storm" (20th). First week ending tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for mild $28,000 or near. Holding. In ahead, "Desire in Dust" (20th) (2d wk-10 days), $19,000. Theatre already is advertising "North To Alaska" (20th) to open on Nov. 10.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (6,200; 90-$2.75) — "Midnight Lace" (U) and stageshow (3d wk). Current session ending today (Wed.) is heading for big $140,000 or close. Second was $151,000. Holds again for fourth-final week. "World of Suzie Wong" (Par) opens Nov. 10 prior to Christmas show.

Rivoli (UAT) (1,545; $1.50-$3.50)—"The Alamo" (UA) (2d wk). Initial session ended last night (Tues.) for nine regular performances was near-capacity $33,000 on hard-ticket basis, plus two morning kid shows. Advance seat sale on opening day had climbed to $60,000.

State (Loew) (1,900; $1.50-$3.50)—"Ben-Hur" (M-G) (49th wk). This round finishing today (Wed.) looks like great $32,000 for 11 shows. Last week, $30,500 for 10 performances. Stays.

First-Run Arties

Baronet (Reade) (430; $1.25-$2)—"It Happened in Broad Daylight" (Cont) (5th wk). This stanza winding tomorrow (Thurs.) looks to reach oke $5,500 after $6,500 in fourth.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; 90-$1.80)—"Hiroshima Mon Amour" (Zenith) (25th wk). The 24th frame finished Sunday (30) was smash $7,000 after $7,600 for 23d week. Continues.

Beekman (R&B) (590; $1.20-$1.75)—"Confess Dr. Corda" (Indie) (2d wk). Initial round ended Saturday (29) was modest $4,000, and won't be around long.

55th St. Playhouse (Moss) (253; $1.25-$1.80) — "Heaven on Earth" (Miske) (4th wk). Third frame finished Sunday (30) was fancy $4,100 after $5,200 for second.

Fifth Ave. Cinema (R&B) (250; $1.25-$1.80—"World of Apu" (Harrison) (5th wk). Fourth week finished Monday (31) was great $5,200 after $6,000 in third round.

D.C. Still Down; 'Storm' Light 10G, 'Seven' Okay $9,000, 'Sexy' Lean 9½G

Washington, Nov. 1.

Downtown continues this session as holdovers wane and new entries fail to stir up much excitement. "September Story" at the Capitol shapes mild in opening round, while "Surprise Package" at Playhouse is only passable. "Fast and Sexy" looks barely fair at two Stanley Warner houses.

Top holdover looks like "Song Without End," sturdy in seventh at Trans-Lux.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador-Metropolitan (SW) (1,490; 1,000; 90-$1.49)—"Fast and Sexy" (Col). Mild $9,500 or close. Last week, "Top of Stairs" (WB) (3d wk), $9,800.

SPAIN: PEP PILLS FOR INDUSTRY

Serious Censor Row Over Italo Film

Milan City Officials Order Trims, Re-Editing Of 'Rocco' After National Cuts

Rome, Oct. 25.

A serious censorship situation is brewing in Milan, Italian city, where the Titanus production, "Rocco and his Brothers," has been ordered cut and re-edited by city authorities in an unprecedented (for Italy) example of local censorship. Film, which won an award at the Venice Festival, previously had been passed (after a few cuts) by the national censor authorities, which placed it in a "forbidden for minors under 16" category.

Apart from immediately adding a substantial daily gross to the pic's take, the fracas has raised a headline-making do in Italo dailies and weeklies. This comes only a few weeks after the same pic was involved in another space-grabbing hassle when it failed to come up with what most thought was a walkaway Venice Grand Prix.

Most local pundits pointed out the extreme danger that any adverse decision by the local Milan powers-that-be if enforced, would create a paralyzing precedent for others to follow. Also that it also would deprive official government censorship (about which gripes are numerous anyway) of authority as well as causing confusion and fear in industry ranks.

Titanus topper Goffredo Lombardo winged to Milan to sit in on a session which was to decide fate of pic, emerging with a diplomatic statement that the entire matter (of revising the print) was being discussed, and that the pic meanwhile would continue its run (an extra show added) a Milan first-run.

It's not known if a re-editing job would apply nationally, or if only the Milan area would be affected. In a separate statement, "Rocco" director Luchino Visconti meanwhile angrily announced he would not allow a foot of the pic to be cut from its general release print.

DANES' MINIATURE WORK

The Bestest, Thinks Pink—Plots New Vikings Spec

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

A $4,000,000 spectacle on the Vikings is being mapped for production next summer i three Scandinavian countries by producer Sidney Pink as the apex of a deal just consummated whereby American International Pictures will handle world-wide distribution of six pix made by his Cinemagic Inc. production outfit. Three of the features, all lensed abroad, have been completed by Pink, who has just returned to Hollywood singing the praises of Danish craftsmen.

Danish miniature work has surpassed that of Japan, up to now generally acknowledged to be the finest in the world, Pink declared. Facilities in Denmark, by Hollywood standards, are notably lacking, but the craftsmen, who "put everything together by hand are not concerned with the time it takes," are excellent, he stated. Pink also noted that the Scandinavian countries have never truly been exploited by Hollywood filmmakers, so that the settings have remained unusually fresh ground for motion pictures.

Pink recently completed "Reptilicos" at Saga Studios in Copenhagen "at a cost of $380,000, about a third of what it probably would have cost if made in the U. S.," he maintained. Also finished and ready for AIP distribution are "The Green-Eyed Elephant" and "Gateway Gaza," latter shot in Cairo. Upcoming, in addition to the tentatively titled "Blood Brothers" (the Viking venture), are "Journey to the Seventh Planet" and "Invisible City," all to be shot in Scandinavian countries. Among other matters, Pink is here to sign thesps for leading roles in these pix.

More Location Filming In France With Only 4 Shooting in Studios

Paris, Oct. 25.

Of th 24 French pix in the works currently, only four are actually using studios with the others relying mainly on real decors. This is a hangover from the "new wave" realistic, economy shooting. However, it is felt that this can only apply to certain types of pix while others may eventually suffer and get more costly via on-the-spot shooting. Meanwhile, Yank pix are coming into studios here and are being welcomed.

There are nine French pix shooting in Paris streets or in the surrounding area, four around France, two in Munich, three in Yugoslavia, one in Spain and one in Portugal. Hence, French producers are also branching out for new and real locales as wel las making many coproductions. Large scale pix invariably head for Yugoslavia where it is cheaper and easier.

However, it is felt here this is not runaway production but that it's just a coincidence that these pix calling for foreign and real settings are all in work now. Yet there has been a greater tendency to get away from studio-made exteriors here. Some rate Paris as just one big film set and should be utilized.

Anatole Litvak is doing "Do You Like Brahms?" (UA) at studios here. Also "Paris Blues" (UA), "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" (M-G) and "Lady L" (M-G) are due to be made in studios here.

Irish Give 'Peeping Tom' Objectionable Rating

Dublin, Oct. 25.

"Peeping Tom" (Anglo-Amalgamated) and "The Entertainer" (British Lion) have both drawn "objectionable" ratings from Reviewing Board of Irish National Film Institute despite the fact that both were cleared for showing by the film censorship Appeals Board after scissoring.

"Sands of the Desert" (Warner-Pathe) has given an "objectionable-in-part" rating.

National Film Institute, a Catholic body, has been swinging hard at pictures lately, but last week placed Maurice Cloche's "The Missionary" in the "recommended" classification.

Mann Winds Casting For Spain Pic, 'El Cid'

London, Nov. 1.

During his visit to London last week, Anthony Mann completed principal casting for "El Cid," which he is directing in Spain for Samuel Bronston. The principal roles in this $6,000,000 production will be filled by Charlton Heston and Sophia Loren. Among the British artists signed by Mann are Garry Raymond, John Fraser, Ralph Truman, Andrew Cruickshank, Michael Hordern, Christopher Rhodes and Frank Thring.

"El Cid," which is to be made in Super-Technirama-70, starts this month on four months exterior locations in Spain, with a final month of interiors to be filmed at the Cinecitta Studios in Rome.

NEW CREDITS TO PROMOTE GROWTH

Madrid, Nov. 1.

Agreement was finally reached between the Ministry of Finance and the Ministry of Information on the application of a motion picture industry medium-term credit plan for producers, film studios and dubbing companies—slightly over two years after film aid credit became a law decreed by the Spanish government.

As now implemented, producers submitting a production program of not less than three films a year, will be accorded advances of 60% of the total program budgets and 65% to producer-distributors. A maximum of 70% will go to a handful of producer-distributor-film studio combines. Owners of film and dubbing studios will be granted credit covering 70% of budgets submitted for modernization and rehabilitation of existing facilities.

The government is also prepared to promote Spanish companies distributing local product in foreign markets and to this end will advance 70% of the capital required to give the Spanish film industry a firmer footing abroad.

While the Ministry of Finance will establish the total credit available each year, believed to be in excess of 150,000,000 pesetas, the National Film Institute within the Ministry of Information will apply credit machinery in each particular case.

Overall effect of film aid credit will result in elimination of many small speculative producers and encourage the majors here to budget for international product.

British Lion Fiscal Rhythm Seen Altering

London, Nov. 1.

The impending formation of a new production company which is to be concerned solely in big-budget projects, and which will use the British Lion distribution service in the United Kingdom, may eventually affect the volume of direct film financing undertaken by BL.

The new company, title of which is now being cleared, will represent a joining of forces of personalities in Bryanston and Britannia Films. Both these outfits are concerned with production and distribution, but their output has physical release in Britain through British Lion. Lion International, the overseas arm of BL, handles most of the foreign sales for Bryanston, though Britannia mainly negotiates its own foreign deals.

The new company which is being formed will continue the production-distribution pattern, and will presumably be operated jointly by Maxwell Setton, the Bryanston topper, and Steven Pallos, head of Britannia. It will concentrate on productions which hiterto had been considered too big for either.

With the new setup, there will be the three production-distribution groups releasing through British Lion, plus BL's own producing teams of the Boulting Brothers and Launder and Gilliat. BL will, of course, continue to finance both these producers and, as a normal business undertaking, to back any attractive outside propositions though industry insiders do not consider there will be much scope for many outsiders.

As the trade sees it, British Lion, like any other distributing outfit, is geared to handle only an agreed number of films, and it's felt that the resources of the thre groups combined with its own producers, plus the European films in which it's actively participating, will more than meet the company's needs.

More to American Prod. Move For O'Seas Locales Than Cost Savings

Tokyo, Oct. 25.

There is more to the movement of American film production to overseas locales than saving on costs, according to Hal Wallis, who will make "Tamiko" here next spring with Laurence Harvey for Paramount release. Here doing spadework on the picture, Wallis estimated that "Tamiko" will be budgeted at around $2,000,000.

"I'm not making the picture here to save money," Wallis told VARIETY. "I don't think I will. It's expensive to transport at least the nucleus of a company and to maintain it for a month."

Acknowledging that some film producers shoot overseas, especially in Europe, to benefit from government support or mobs of extras at reduced fees, Wallis said: "If you don't care to go that route, making pictures abroad is not cheap. And it's not a matter of choosing between overseas or Hollywood," he added, "but of using a foreign locale to get scenes that couldn't be produced in Hollywood."

Although he has some 300 pictures to his credit, Wallis has done comparatively little shooting outside the U. S. "Tamiko," to be made in color and widescreen, deals with a triangle of a stateless Chinese-Russian (Harvey) in Japan who is engaged to a Nipponese girl, but who almost casts her aside in favor of an American girl working temporarily in the American Embassy. He desperately wants to go to the U. S. and tries to use the American girl as his ticket.

Wallis said that a big star would play the American girl. For her Japanese rival, he interviewed some local actresses, but made no selection. The problem as usual is to find one with looks, talent and ability to speak English. In addition, players here are heavily scheduled in domestic productions and their availability for months ahead cannot be forecast. As a result, Wallis said he may have to take another look at the Oriental actresses now working in Hollywood.

One of Hollywood's foremost latter-day starmakers — his screen introductions include Burt Lancaster, Kirk Douglas, Carolyn Jones, Dean Martin, Jerry Lewis, Elvis Presley and Shirley MacLaine—Wallis is a non-believer in today's star system where about a dozen players are in a position to demand astronomical fees and percentage deals. He prefers to cultivate his own talent.

"We've got to replace the stars," Wallis said. "The big stars are making their own pictures and are no longer in circulation, unless you meet their demands. I can't exist like that. It's economically unsound. "I don't want to make a picture if I know I'm going to lose money. I'm not a philanthropist to that extent. I at least want a shot at it."

Reuters With BCINA

London, Nov. 1.

With the entry last week of Reuters news agency into the British Commonwealth International Newsfilm Agency, the world resources of latter will be expanded and Reuters will be linked with the rapid developments of visual news reporting.

BCINA, which was established in 1957, has a constitution modelled on that of Reuters, guaranteeing its integrity, freedom from bias and complete independence.

Other shareholders are the British Broadcasting Corp., the Rank Organization, the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. and the Australian Broadcasting Commission. The agency's filmed news service is sent round the world, and in Europe is transmitted via the Eurovision link.

New Formula Agreed On For Selecting Pix To Royal Command Gala

London, Nov. 1.

A new formula for the selection of pix for the Royal Command film gala has now been agreed by all sections of the industry. It is being put into immediate effect for next year's event at the Odeon, Leicester Square, on Feb. 20.

Under the new procedure, every producer and distributor is being invited to submit immediately the title of any film considered suitable, the only proviso being that the running time does not exceed three hours. The selection committee, under Lord Radcliffe, will continue viewing until the right film has been found.

Once the choice has been made, the producer and distributor will be asked to give an undertaking that the pic will be held for the royal gala. The final choice is expected to be made by mid-December.

The Cinematograph Trade Benevolent Fund, which organizes the event, and relies on the proceeds to provide about one-quarter of its annual income, is hopeful that the new formula will end past criticisms on the choice of films named. The February gala will be attended by the Queen Mother, Princess Margart and Anthony Armstrong-Jones.

Steve Pallos Due in N.Y. On Co-Production Deals

London, Nov. 1.

Steven Pallos, head of Britannia Films, planed out for N. Y. last Sunday (30) to negotiate new co-production deals, and also to arrange distribution for his latest British pic, "Foxhole in Cairo," which just completed a prerelease run at the Odeon, Leicester Square.

In the last few weeks, Pallos has completed filming two Anglo-U. S. coproductions. One, "Hands of Orlac," was made in partnership with Continental, and the other, "City of the Dead," was in association with Max Rosenberg.

Large Talent Lineup Set for Aussie ABC

Sydney, Oct. 25.

Australian Broadcasting Commission has signatured top overseas talent for the 1961 concert season.

Lineup includes Isaac Stern, violinist; Larry Adler; comedienne Anne Russell; British pianist Moura Lympany; Karel Ancerl, chief conductor of Czech Philharmonic; Russian pianist Tatyana Nikolayeva; Finnish bass Kim Borg; American pianist Abbey Simon; Austrian soprano Rita Stretch; French conductor Lorin Maazel and Hungarian violinist Jo[illegible] Martzey.

Now Japanese Prods. Film Eastern Westerns

Tokyo, Oct. 25.

The term "Eastern Westerns," often tongue-in-cheeked when linking Nippon outdoor samurai actioners to U.S. horse operas, has become a reality.

Nikkatsu Studios already has released a second oater (or ricer) and has a third slated. Second in the series titled, "Gambler on the Prairie," is in the classic formula somewhat reflective of "Shane." Akira Kobayashi does the Audie Murphy bit in complete Western regalia riding the wide open spaces of Japan's airy northern island of Hokkaido. He's a card sharp, a fist-fighter and a gun slinger. Indians are on the scene too, Hokkaido's blue-eyed Ainu tribe filling the bill.

First in this category, bowing last year, was "Gambler With a Guitar." Low budget and strong returns on this encouraged future made-in-Japan Westerns. Next up is "Covered Wagons."

d'Art. Picture would be made in Geva studio, near Tel Aviv, the leading roles played by French actors. They plan to start shooting in a few days, to finish the picture in January and release it immediately.

Eichmann's trial will start in March. Therefore, the Geva-French coproduction will not include the trial. It will tell about Eichmann's deeds during the war, and about the Jew, who barely escaped death in a concentration camp, who dedicated his life to ferret out Eichmann's whereabouts. This story would end when Eichmann is brought to trial in Israel.

Meantime British producer Michael Green (said to have had MGM financing) had contacted author Meyer Lavin, who resides in Israel, is well acquainted with the subject, and asked him to prepare a script. But when Green found out how complicated the whole matter is, backed out.

Lester Cowan's Pitch

The third one to enter the picture was Hollywood producer Lester Cowan. He got in touch with Tuvia Friedmann, when the latter was in New York recently.

Friedmann, the best known "Nazi-hunter" in Israel. He has during the past 15 years collected a huge dossier on Nazi war criminals and helped to capture many of them in various part of the world by tipping off the right people. Friedmann never had believed Eichmann was dead, as his family claimed, and for his relentless pursuit of a seemingly nonexisting Eichmann he was considered by many to be a "Jewish Don Quixote" —until the day Eichmann was caught alive.

However, Friedmann had no direct connection with the actual secret action that brought Eichmann here from the Argentine. Israeli authorities didn't favor the way Friedmann was played up in New York. Cowan — so Friedmann claims—was prepared to make a picture about Friedmann and Eichmann, but Israeli officials supposedly discouraged him, and he gave up the idea.

Artur Brauner's Prod.

The most impressive producer to enter the Eichmann race is Artur Brauner, the Jewish head of the huge C.C.C. studios in Berlin. As the Israeli government would never agree that, of all people, the Germans make the Eichmann picture in Israel, Brauner is using a subsidiary, Boston Film, of Vaduz, Lichtenstein. He has Israeli, French and reportedly American partners in this venture. Robert Siodmak and Cyril Frankel are mentioned as directors and German actor Hannes Messemer would play the role of Eichmann.

Brauner's version would concentrate on Eichmann's war-crimes in Hungary. Through the Jewish Survival Committee in Budapest, Eichmann had made in 1944 an offer to the Allies to exchange "his" Jews for American trucks. Joel Brand, a member of the Committee, was permitted to leave Hungary for neutral Turkey to negotiate. The deal never worked out and 600,000 Hungarian Jews were killed. Brand wrote a book about the case. This book and the story of Dr. Rudolf Kastner, the head of the Survival Committee, will be used for Brauner's picture. Meyer Levin is writing the script. He is now in Paris.

Chi's Cafe Belt

State St. — now known as the French Village—running parallel to Rush. For many years, although it's only a short block away from Rush, that stretch of State was Nowheresville so far as the snow biz entrepeneurs were concerned. The rule was: if you weren't on Rush or one of the interesecting streets you didn't have a spot for a club.

The College of Complexes, a long-time hangout for oddballs and egg-heads with beards, was the first to break bohemian ground on North State, moving there from Old Town when that sector became fashionable. Two years ago a Beat bookshop named Maury's pulled up alongside with its highbrow paperbacks and chessboards and night-long collection of bearded philosophers. The same Maury (supposedly that's his last name, his first is unknown) then opened a Beatnik coffee shop, the Roue, with sidewalk tables—and the boom was on.

The club that benefited initially was Le Bistro, at the bottom of Chestnut Street; but in the past year around a dozen others have sprouted, turning the area into a glittery, chic nitery vein. The Beats are gone, of course.

A ramshackle frame building that has been a real estate white elephant for more than a decade is now the smart Absinthe House, with wandering minstrels. Maury's erstwhile bookstore has become Cafe Milano. The College of Complexes has moved, and its North State St. site now promises Jazz at the Fat Belly, with the Yellow Unicorn neighboring. The Roue is shuttered, and the remodeling now going on seems to augur another smart cabaret. Across the street is the new, intime Coq de la Rue.

An alley that separated Maury's Books from Le Bistro, previously just a dark cut-through to Dearborn St., is now lighted, dressed up with elegant facades in French Quarter fashion, and dubbed Tooker Place. There, among some quaint shops, hang the marquees for Kismet and La Femme, with entertainment ranging from jazz singers to belly dancers.

As for the Beats, they've dispersed in three directions. The College of Complexes, sort of geiger-counter for upcoming fashionable neighborhoods, has relocated on North Clark Street, a skid row strip just out of the Loop. Other bohemians have defected to Chicago and State, where a new bistro, Montmarte (with folk singers), is shaping as headquarters.

But the most promising Beatnik sector is a slummy stretch of North Ave., at the base of Old Town, which has been gathering artists over the past few years. An arty Mexican restaurant, the Azteca, was the advance guard, and then came the Old Town Ale House and two espresso joints, Oxford House and Talk. (The latter, incidentally, has been taken over by that same Maury fellow.) Entertainment at the three spots varies with the night of the week, the principal fare being folk music, flamenco guitar, poetry readings and FM radio.

The strip has already been discovered by the coat-and-tie crowd, and on any night the clientele is an even-steven mixture of Beats and rounders. Parking has become a problem, which is probably the best indication that North Ave. is about to be up-Beated.

The Yuogslav film industry is rather tired of the idea being given international circulation that Yugoslavia is no more than a place where you go when you want to shoot inexpensive spectacle scenes with horses. To correct this impression, to facilitate U. S.-Yugoslav coproduction ventures, and to promote the import of Yugoslav films in the U. S., Jovan Petrovic, representing Yugoslavia Films (export-import agency), has just opened up an office at 501 Fifth Ave. in New York.

Exec is taking over duties which heretofore have been handled as part of the Yugoslav Information Service by Karla Duhar, who is now prepping her own Yugoslav-U. S. coproduction venture. Principal purpose of his office, Petrovic explained Friday (28), will be one of liaison. In the past, he said, U. S. producers who have worked in Yugoslavia have all gone through a "third party," perhaps an Italian or German or French partner, many of whom have unnecessarily added to the U. S. company's costs by charging an agent's fee for "arranging" Yugoslav participation.

Now, said Petrovic, interested U. S. producers can deal directly with Yugoslav industry through his office which is in a position to offer specific information as to costs, facilities, potential production partners and government requirements. At same time he'll be acting as producer's rep for a number of Yugoslav films which he thinks have a U. S. market potential. Petrovic's office will do no film buying, which function will continue to be done in Paris.

Learned A Lot

According to the exec, Yugoslav industry has appreciated and greatly benefited through various coproduction ventures which in the past resulted in such films as "Tempest" and "Austerlitz," but he thinks it's now time that U. S. film people realized that his country has somewhat more to offer than armies of extras and suitable terrain for filming battle scenes.

He would like to see "true" U.S.-Yugoslav coproductions, that is ventures in which the Yugoslavs can participate even in subject matter. One such project is that being planned by Miss Duhar, a contemporary romantic drama called "Dalmatian Summer," tentatively set to be directed by Rouben Mamoulian utilizing the Dubrovnik art and music festival as an integral part of the story. Aim is to start shooting next spring, with a major U. S. distrib as partner though most of the financing would come from a Yugoslav company and private U. S. backers.

Cool To Spookies

Yugoslav industry, said Petrovic, is particularly interested in historical and contemporary properties, but is not out to corral cheapie U. S. producers who might want to come over to make horror or science fiction quickies, simply to take advantage of lower production costs. According to the exec, Yugoslavs have turned down any number of such deals in last several years.

There is a definite cost advantage in filming in his country, he admitted, but the industry isn't out to offer cutrate service, rather to benefit and learn production "know-how" which reputable U.S. producers can bring to Yugoslavia. Several such ventures reportedly are now in the talking stage.

How to promote Yugoslav films in this market? Exec said he realized it was a difficult question that had stumped far bigger film industries than Yugoslavia's. One way, he suggested, was to see that one's best films were properly handled and promoted in this market. He expressed concern that Yugoslavia's 1958 Academy Award entry, "The Road A Mile Long," never did get a theatrical release here, though it is now being offered by a U. S. syndicator in a package of films for tv.

He also pointed to Yugoslavia's participation in the recent San Francisco film fest as another way to go about promotion. Country was represented in fest by the feature, "Black Pearls," plus two cartoons. Another feature, "The Ninth Circle," is being submitted for consideration for this year's foreign language Oscar.

Within next several weeks, exec also expects to conclude a deal with one of the more important U. S. indie distribs for release here of three "top quality" Yugoslav imports. In addition to the features he's out to sell, Petrovic will also be promoting a number of documentaries and cartoon shorts for the theatrical market.

Joe Levine's 'Bagdad,' 'Pirate,' 'Aladdin' Set For Release Via Metro

Metro has closed a deal with Joseph E. Levine's Embassy Pictures to handle the world-wide distribution of three spectacle films on Levine's slate. This is the first time Levine has had a multi-picture releasing deal with a single company. Previously he has made separate arrangements for each of his pictures, having been associated with Warner Bros., Paramount, and M-G.

The Embassy topper is said to have received an advance of $2,500,000 for the three pictures. The deal, signed yesterday (Tues.) involves "Thief of Bagdad," an Embassy coproduction with Titanus of Italy; "Morgan, the Pirate," which Levine acquired from Lux Films of Italy, and "Wonders of Aladdin," an Embassy-Lux coproduction.

The three films will hit the world market starting with the middle of 1961 and extending to early 1962. "Morgan" has been completed, "Thief" is currently in production, and "Wonders" starts on Dec. 1. The latter two will be filmed i Tunisia and Italy.

Metro is currently handling the world-wide release of Levine's Italian-made "Where the Hot Wind Blows," but this deal is separate from the new arrangement.

As has been his policy, Levine will continue to supervise the promotion and advertising campaign, employing the razzle dazzle technique for which he has become known.

'Family'-Minded

in handling "Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," which stars Jimmy Rogers. Pic will be launched in key cities in the southern territory during Christmas holidays, with over 200 bookings set in period of several weeks, all of course, promoted by an ad-pub campaign that covers entire territory. Following this playoff, same treatment will be given in another geographic area. "For The Love of Mike" was launched this way in Denver territory with particularly fine results, exec said.

In asking that exhibs give more preferential playing time to the family pic schedule, Norris also allowed as how "we have to rely on our customers' judgment" in matter of what is played with the family type of film. A West Coast circuit last week was playing "Freckles," the Gene Stratton-Porter classic, in tandem with a reissue of 20th's 1957 servicemen's comedy, "Kiss Them for Me." Latter stars Jayne Mansfield, who is a far cry from the Girl of The Limberlost.

Norris said that in his opinion the most effective dual programs consist of two features that will appeal to the same "approximate" audience, that he feared that two films of totally different appeal might often cancel each other out, audience-wise. However, he added, this is for the exhib to decide, and quite often he is right.

In making his pitch for better exhib treatment and interest in family product, Norris was also careful to point out that 20th has no intention of abandoning strictly mature audiences. "We will continue to release good, tasteful, adult product, filmed with as much honesty as is required, and we will also make family films if exhibitors back us up at their end."

'Intricacies of Sex' Not for USSR; Karaganov Bespeaks Red Puritanism

San Francisco, Nov. 1.

Russia is producing "115 to 120" feature films a year, "an increase of 10 times in the last six years," according to Moscow film critic Alexander Karaganov.

He is a judge at the fourth annual Frisco Film Festival, says it's USSR policy "to take part in all famous festivals"—he specifically named Cannes, Venice and Karlovy Vary, omitted Berlin.

The 115-120 features, he said, are "produced in almost all the 15 Soviet republics . . . in different languages and different national forms." Among production centers, beside Moscow, are Leningrad, Kiev, Minsk, Riga and Tashkent.

He's pleased that "Ballad of a Soldier," screened in Frisco, is getting U. S. commercial distribution through Jay Frankel.

As for Hollywood's current "sex" kick, Karaganov voted:

"Human love, yes — sex, no. Russians do not like to see the intricacies of sex on the screen. It is degrading. When I see such things, I do not feel comfortable with my loved ones."

Main difference between Russian and U. S. films, said Karaganov, is that "not so many Russian ones are made just to entertain . . . our directors prefer more serious, deeper films, while the majority of U. S. films lean to lightness and entertainment."

Karaganov, who is director of a Moscow publishing house as well as a prolific writer for Izvestia, Novy Mir, Art of Cinema, Literary Gazette, Oktober and Soviet Culture, noted this difference between U. S. and Russian techniques.

"We have no producers. Our studios are operated by a committee of directors, writers, actors, etc. A writer submits a script to the committee. If it is accepted, the committee appoints a director to make the film. The director selects his actors, prepares the script and makes the picture."

Most screen stories, he added, are originals. If a novel's adapted, the author can supervise what he wants done and if he doesn't like the results, he can have the whole thing tossed away.

Despite his generalities about U. S. films, Karaganov said "Marty" was "a great success" in Russia because "it's so human—it's very important to cultivate feelings, not make enemies but friends."

He couldn't say the same for another cultural exchange picture, "Roman Holiday," shrugging and calling it "light." But he confessed admiration for many U. S. films, "especially from the war years and just after." Among his favorites: all Chaplin pictures, Deanna Durbin films, "Bambi" and "Casablanca." His critical credo:

"I like mostly films which not only entertain but rouse thoughts and deep feelings."

tion, which will take at least two years to make. It was said location and terrain shots were already being made.

Marten termed the project as "a propagandistic weapon" in that it will attempt to show that the heritage of South America is similar to that of the United States. He added that the subject, which has the approval of U.S. officials, will help to solidify relations between the U.S. and Latin America.

In addition to its coproduction ventures, Arlington has mapped a domestic program, first of which will be "Cause of Death," starring George Raft. This is set to begin in New York on Nov. 28 with Joe Kane directing.

Arlington has no specific distribution arrangements, but will make deals on a picture by picture basis, according to Coates.

Mrs. James Gray, San Antonio dentist's wife, signed for a part in the Columbia Pictures, "Two Rode Together," now being filmed at Brackettville, Tex.

HANDICAPPED BENEFIT TIED TO 'CAMPOBELLO'

Dore Schary will be guest of honor at a testimonial dinner on Dec. 12 at the Hotel Plaza in an event marking the 25th anni of the Federation of the Handicapped.

Schary's "Sunrise at Campobello," first a play and now a Warner Bros. film, portrays the period in which Franklin D. Roosevelt was first incapacited by poliomyelitis. Ralph Bellamy, who portrays Roosevelt in the film, is campaign chairman for the Federation of the Handicapped. James H. Scheuer is serving as dinner chairman.

'NOT BEST EFFORTS' SUIT

Gibralter of Britain's Charge Vs. RKO Teleradio

Gibralter Pictures Ltd., a British production company, has filed a $500,000 suit in N. Y. Federal Court against RKO Teleradio Pictures. The suit, involving the picture "No Road Back," stems from RKO's dissolution of its foreign distribution setup.

Gibralter charges that RKO failed to use its best efforts to launch "No Road Back" and that the company failed to notify Gibralter that it was closing down its distribution organization. It was further alleged that RKO breached a five-year agreement giving it exclusive rights to distribute the Gibralter picture abroad. Under the agreement, according to Gibralter's complaint, the distribution deal was granted to RKO alone and RKO had no permission to license the picture to another company.

not the least of which was weather. With only a week of second unit work still to be lensed, budget on the William Holden starrer will reach $3,400,000, Perlberg revealed. Had it been possible to make the film in Hollywood, he explained, the budget would have decreased by $500,000.

On another subject, the producer reiterated his position on foreign film festivals: "The American picture industry has poor representation at European film festivals. In the long run, it hurts us, for lack of cooperation works against us even in the area of picture quotas." Perlberg proposes a program whereby the Academy would pick best 10 pix of year, on a semi-annual basis, with Yank entries in foreign fest being selected from these pix. If something isn't done, he emphasized, "in time it could have a disastrous effect."

Asked about film festivals in the United States, filmaker declared he's opposed. "Nothing here should detract from the Academy Awards," he said. "The Academy is still the biggest single thing, motion picture-wise, in the world."

Additional observations:

"Countries of Western Europe are prosperous. People are spending money and they're going to see movies."

"European film audiences are more enthusiastic than American audiences."

"Anything can be done at European studios, but you can do it better and easier here."

"Pleasure of His Company" goes back into production early this month, with San Francisco locationing first up. Pic is about 60% completed, and 4½ weeks of shooting remain.

Dexter as Lippert's Aide

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

Maury Dexter, who produced "Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" for Associated Producers, Inc., releasing through 20th-Fox, replaces Bill Magginetti as assistant to Robert L. Lippert, API chief, and production manager of API.

Magginetti ankled company two weeks ago, after 14-years with Lippert, following a split with exec.

Prune Violence

how are ages checked at the box-office? "Well," answered Trevelyan, "it's typically British. In theory, it couldn't work at all. In generally practices, it works quite well."

The British film censor made it evident his office does not fight for the "clean, beautiful, pure" film but further explained that the impressions of children must be guarded. The British Film Censor Board, he said, is in the position of standing between potential pressure groups and the British motion picture industry in an effort to keep the pressures down to a reasonable level. "There are many danger points, and it's no good providing ammunition for them."

Specifically, Trevelyan pointed out that brutality and violence involving teenagers is the kind found most contemptible in England. "We have our own delinquency problem," he stated. "As I understand it, it's not as bad as yours, but we don't want to make ours any worse." He feels that teenage violence shown on film, despite a moral lesson for an ending, gives teenage audiences the "glamor" of delinquency. "They're not interested in the moral," he said, "just the violence."

Trevelyan praised MPAA's production code office, its administrator, Geoffrey Shurlock, and his predecessors. He also explained that in Britain there is no production code, no set of rules for judging pix. "The advantage is that we're able to judge each picture on its own merits and look at the integrity behind each film. It also enables us to change our policies in line with what we believe to be changing public opinion. That, after all, is our job—to reflect the opinion of reasonable, intellingent people."

He reported that these sentiments had received favorable reaction from those to who he had expressed himself. "Hollywood producers seem to feel my comments were helpful," he declared, "and they agree it's a point that must be watched."

Trevelyan also noted that during the past week during his visits to film studios he has spent considerable time outlining current policies of the British Board of Film Censors. He explained such discussions are helpful to the American producer since there is no written production code in England.

Asked specifically on Hollywood's two recent epics—"Spartacus" and "The Alamo"—Trevelyan explained "Alamo" already has been given a U rating in England, meaning it can be exhibited without restrictions. He said "Spartacus" has not yet been seen by his office but that his view of it here indicates that pic's violence might cause some concern.

Trevelyan observed that "Ben-Hur," for the same reason, was given an A rating, meaning children under 16 must be accompanied by an adult. He further explained the A rating, while effective, doesn't have the same economic effect on a hardticket attraction as it does on a mass-booked pic.

Francis of Assisi

der-Saint who believed in absolute poverty but whose successor, Brother Elias believed in modifying that rule. Today, still, Assisi has two types of Franciscan monks —the contemplative order following Francis and wearing brown robes and the order, devoted to Elias' more worldly approach, wearing black robes. The two groups are not on too friendly terms, and the question of Francis' garment in the picture loomed large.

It was decided by sticking to realism. In a local church, a garment worn by the Saint is preserved. It is grey, and Francis' costume in the film will stick to that in-between color.

"Francis" company got some publicity dividend locally when Redd Davis, a British actor playing a leper in the film, went for a stroll in the plaza wearing his make-up and thoroughly alarmed the populace who called in the police. Rumor spread through the town that the film company had imported a real leper for the role. The unit quickly put out a denial.

Theatremen's 'Expendable Blues' As Loew's Chain Hotel-Minded

THE REHABILITATION OF MILTON RACKMIL

Universal prexy Milton R. Rackmil, the exhibitor doghouse a little more than a year ago, has been named "industry man of the year" by Allied States Assn.

The U topper was widely denounced by theatremen when he shut down U's production program for a reappraisal and sold the company's studio to Music Corp. of America. Exhibitors feared that he was liquidating the company and that another source of product would be lost to them.

Now Allied is hailing Rackmil "for his outstanding management contributions and excellent production achievement immeasurably increasing entertainment values for the screens of American theatres."

The award, based on a poll of Allied members, will be made at the banquet concluding the Allied convention in Chicago on Nov. 9.

In the same poll, Tony Curtis was named male star of the year. Shirley MacLaine, female star of the year, and Billy Wilder "outstanding director of the year."

Ben Marcus, Allied board chairman, was named "showman of the year" for his efforts in developing the Marcus-COMPO merchandising promotion.

Charlton Heston

of NATO commitments or the world of outer space."

"Combining skill and sensivity," he continued, "to play 'Hamlet' better than anyone else or to sing 'Melancholy Baby' in a smoky saloon, does not automatically qualify an entertainment celebrity as a statesman and a sound influence on the voting public."

Waving an absentee ballot from Roscommon County, Michigan, in his Madrid apartment where the Heston family will spend the winter while he roams Spanish hinterlands, the actor pursued his firm logic:

"In theory, you're supposed to pick for yourself, not for all the people who think you're a hell of a guy—whether it's because they work for you, or because they like the way you play love scenes or just inhale and exhale.

"I think Frank Sinatra sings 'One More For My Baby' as well as it can be sung, but I'd hate to think he was head-shrinking all the people who agree with me on that as to which man to vote for on Nov. 8, because I don't think he knows that much about presidents. I don't think Dick Powell does either, on the other side of the fence."

Hastening to make clear that he had no quarrel with anyone making a public choice, and that "going on record is a very old and very healthy American custom," Heston feels this tradition has nothing in common with the vigorous participation of marquee topbillers in organized political campaigns.

"I'm not throwing rocks at my own team," he explained. "But we do live in an age of specialization. Lippmann, Reston and Alsop, I'll listen to. They've been at it a long time and know more about it than the rest of us. Beyond that, I'd rather go it alone."

Unable to make a campaign prediction, he quoted Mort Sahl's "I don't think either of them can win . . ." and ended up with the admonition: "Picking a president is like picking a girl; maybe, the sooner you go it alone, the better off you'll be."

Filmgroup's 'Devil'

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

The Filmgroup will handle distribution of "The Devil's Partner," produced by Hugh M. Hooker, and "Creature From the Haunted Sea," Roger Corman production.

Pair will be packaged for Dec. 8 release.

Morale among employees at Loew's Theatres is said to be hitting a new low as the company shifts from a theatre to a hotel economy. The Tisch brothers, Laurence and Preston R. (Bob), now in a commanding position in the management of the company, are reported to be instituting a drastic economy wave in the theatre division.

The reported "sharpening of the axe" is unnerving veteran staffers. A wholesale revision of the division manager system is in the works. It's understood that four division managers who worked out of the N. Y. homeoffice will be sent back to the field as managers of theatres in New York. At the same time, one or two division managers will be retired.

The pruning, as a result of studies made by the Tisches, is said to be spreading to the operation of individual theatres. Many theatres, it's reported, are operating with only one usher on duty. In some houses, the matrons in the ladies' rooms have been eliminated.

At the homeoffice, there has been a mass move-in of hotel personnel. These include sales staffers and others connected with the two hotels that Loew's Theatres is building in New York—the Americana on the west side and The Summit (formerly Americana East) on Lexington Ave. on the site of razed Loew's Lexington Theatre. At the same time, the company is planning to build two motels on 8th Ave. and motels and hotels in other cities, some of which will be on sites of Loew's theatres.

Preston R. Tisch, recently named chairman of the executive committee and president of Loew's Hotels Inc., newly-formed subsidiary, is now taking an active role in the theatre operation and is said to be responsible for ordering the personnel shifts and the economy moves. Preston R. and his brother Laurence, chairman of the board and chief executive officer, hold the controlling interest in the company. Since reconstituting the board, the Tisches have been taking a strong position in management activities and have steered the company in the direction of real estate and hotels.

Hong Kong and interiors in London. "Pieces," set to follow, will be filmed in Rome and Southern France. Both are original screenplays written by the hyphenated team. As they have with their previous independent pix, they will alternate on the production and directorial chores.

As part of their long-range program, Panama and Frank are devising a followup film for Miss Ball and Hope. They are already working on the screenplay titled "The Spanish Border." Also on their slate is an ambitious episodic film, "13 Sinners," which they said would be shot in eight different countries.

Their arrangement with UA is a non-exclusive one. Having been tied down with Paramount for a long period, the team is enjoying its new-found freedom. "This is the first time in our lives that we are in a position to negotiate with all studios," Frank pointed out.

"Facts," according to Frank, represents a complete departure for Miss Ball and Hope in that they have dropped farce for serio-comic roles in "a highly provocative film dealing with infidelity."

Legion

Specifically, what's to stop certain theatremen from using their own ad copy, with jazzed-up stress on the prostitute angles, and ignoring the WB pressbook?

That some exhibs might be inclined to do this obviously is not beyond the realm of possibility and thus the Legion's call for self-restraint in industry quarters would seem to be partially falling on deaf ears.

Trade, Talent, Trust Problems Beckon A Major Probe

Council of Motion Picture Organizations, representing all branches of the film industry, has in the talk stage a sweeping project designed to cure many of the trade's ills in the fields of exhibitor-distributor and filmmaking practices.

In mind, the broadest sense at this ti , is an alleviation of the burdens on producers-financiers of pictures, a lessening of antitrust restrictions on distributors and, finally, a reduction of film costs for exhibitors and more pictures.

Obviously, this is a tall order. Such a program was called for, in vague terms, at last week's COMPO meeting in New York by Sim Pinanski, who operates the Boston circuit subsidiary of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, and who represents the Theatre Owners of America on COMPO's three-man governing board. Ben Marcus of Allied States and Abe Montague of the Motion Picture Assn. of America are the other two members of the triumverate.

In introducing the idea, Pinanski talked in general terminology about inroads on the American film companies' foreign market outlets, subsidies given foreign film industries, the merger authorizations given American banks, railroads, etc., but not American film companies.

Pinanski, Marcus and Montague were designated by the COMPO delegates to draw up a full, itemized program.

Thus, the specifics must await their decisions and then the approval or veto by the full COMPO board.

But the COMPO talk-about has served to bring into focus certain of the adversities with which the business end of the film industry is forced to cope with.

For one, the flight of Hollywood talent, which insists on working abroad and enjoying a tax-free status so far as the United States is concerned. These globally-prominent performers work in foreign pictures which play the world market and consequently reduce playing time around the world for the American product. The American distributors get hurt, and so do, too, the American exhibitors, for as the local distribs draw more limited income from abroad, then they must, in order to sustain themselves, demand commensurately more from the local showmen.

The U. S. State Department plays financial footsie with foreign countries which support their own picture industries via outright subsidy or other concessions and, at the same time, place restrictions on the import of Stateside productions.

On the local front, the American industry in large part is operating under antitrust injunctions which have the effect of hampering Hollywood production. Distributors and producers have claimed hardships right along, in terms of edicts against block booking, for one example, and along th lines of certain major circuits entering production and certain companies seguing back into exhibition. Nowadays many independent exhibitors are echoing the same sentiment.

Local taxation and censorshi is another part of the obstacle course.

As stated up front, a clarification of the COMPO undertaking must be awaited. But clearly it's a big row to hoe.

French Exhibs

producers and distribs and eventually fall back on their shoulders.

Exhibs also point out that the government takes taxes and also underwrites tv which is a top competing force now. Though Film Aid taxes are being cut gradually on admission tabs the money that goes into the exhib share is not enough to straighten out the shaky financial structures. Exhibs say that only drastic lowering of taxes can save things as well as needed governmental sharing until things get steadier on the fili economic front.

As of Nov. 20, at 9 p.m., all the houses in France are set to go dark.

Now 20th Publicists To Declare Intentions If Planning Cab or Feed

Twentieth-Fox homeoffice publicity men got the word Friday (28): no more expense accounts. Action is similar to that taken in recent months by several of the other major companies in moves to cut down on unnecessary expenditur

New policy doesn't mean that 20th staffers won't be spending lunch-cab money at all. Rather it means that before any such expenditures are made, they must be "cleared" by a department head. In recent months staffers had weekly amounts beyond which they couldn't spend, and before that, it was more or less "unlimited," provided, of course, they didn't overdo a good thing.

Kirk Douglas

The way to draw attention to yourself is always to throw a tomato at a movie star . . . I think it is an obvious device and it is silly. I don't know what more can be said about it. Susskind is a very bright boy but obviously with no particular point of view. Let's do something to stir up controversy and obviously people will talk about Susskind. It's right I guess from his point of view but some of the things he has said with regard Hollywood are kind of silly."

Good Will Ambassadors

Douglas said he feels that while actors should refrain from politicking in this country, they should serve as good will ambassadors for America while abroad. He declared: "I feel very strongly that an actor, perhaps more than other people, should have a social conscience and be aware of his responsibilities as a citizen since he is so much in the public limelight. Wherever he travels in any part of the world he is known as an actor and as an American actor and everything he does reflects on the country . . . I think they should take part as Americans in foreign countries, or wherever they are, to try as far as possible to present America in the best light. I feel there is a cold war going on in that sense of public relations among the different countries . . . I have written to people in the State Department and I have maintained we don't do enough in this area to promote good will among other countries. It is a small area but a very important one and I think it would be a good idea for the State Department to take more of an interest and more of an awareness of the entertainment world because whether they like it or not there is a natural tendency for people to have this snobbism and say—oh Hollywood.

"We have to be aware that American movies are area where w have won the so-called cold war. There is no other country in the world that makes movies that are so sought after in every part of th globe, as Hollywood. Therefore, it is important and should be recognized that whenever American movie stars travel in every part of the globe they should be in contact with the State Department because they are important ambassadors, if you will, for America. I think there should be a closer working together. Very often we go into a foreign country and I think we should be briefed about the problems of the country, where we are shooting. I think we would be glad to be called upon to help in many different ways and commence with our positions to help as American citizens . . . I have a feeling that this is one area that both of the Presidential candidates, Nixon and Kennedy, have an awareness of. I think that there will be more work done in this area than has been done in the past."

The interview by Price was done in three parts, covering many facets of the Douglas career. Price has done several of these interviews-in-depth of show biz people.

Naughty Heroines

Wong," it can be noted here that previewers evidently were impressed with the "respectability" of the nature of the film—that is, nothing really sordid as may be found in the cheap exploitation specials put out by the fast-buck independent producers.

It's a Music Hall booking for the reason that the Hall has yielded to the picture business trend toward the realistic.

Although 25 years ago, John O'Hara's "Butterfield 8" has been brought to the screen via Metro, and here again the central character is a dame of awfully easy virtue. The "Gloria" of O'Hara's novel is still much the same in cinematic form. She's a pushover but continually stresses that prostitute is not her name because she refuses to take money. It's not ideally suited for church auditorium showing, but nonetheless manages to avoid the pictorial obscene well enough.

Jules Dassin, in the recently-opened "Never on Sunday," concerns himself writer-director-performer with an out-and-out prostie. It's done for fun and, indeed, the theme is so turned that some observers might even find a moral uplift in it. Or so they say, because the lady is such an honest citizen.

Finished and now out is Warners' "Girl of the Night." This revolves about a call girl but is done in analytical, not thrill, fashion, according to director Joseph Cates.

Perhaps the most famed of all is the central character in "Rosemary," German import now in the circuits and based upon a real-life prostie of postwar Berlin who eventually was murdered.

The newcomers of Broadway legit include "Tenderloin" and "Irma La Douce" and in both the girls practicing that oldest profession can be spotted right off.

In all cases they're really good-hearted and well-meaning broads—these prosties.

Never Before, Maybe Never Again, Presidential Debates Hurt B.O.; 'Hur,' 'Stairs,' 'Song,' 'Time' Lead

By MIKE WEAR

VARIETY's regular weekly boxoffice reports are summarized each month, retrospectively. Based on an average of 24 key situations, the source data constitute an adequate sampling of current releases but are not, of course, fully "definitive." An index of relative grossing strength in the U.S.-Canada market, this monthly reprise does not pretend to express total rentals.

Combination of (1) presidential election campaign, (2) routine product and (3) seven-game World Series in an ordinarily routine fall month spelled s-l-u-g-g-i-s-h biz at many first-runs in key cities, per those covered by VARIETY. (We're speaking of October). Of course, the baseball series ouly cut into matinee trade but it represented lower grosses in many keys for a full week. The election dealt more-than-quadrenially severe blow to the wicket take than usual because, of the first time television debates, on choice b.o. nights.

"Ben-Hur" (M-G), the boxoffice hardticket champ which has been on top for many months, again had enough to be October champ nationally. Roman opus still went over $1,000,000 in gross for the four weeks covered last month. Second place went to "Dark at Top of Stairs" (WB), which showed such strength that it wound up first one week in VARIETY weekly surveys. Pic actually proved stronger in most keys than it did in N. Y., with the ad campaign stressing the fact that it was strong adult fare.

"Song Without End" (Col), high on the list previously, captured third spot. "High Time" (20th), with a high money total, wound up fourth. "Can-Can," also from 20th-Fox, copped fifth place. It has been higher for months, but is winding up its hard-ticket runs in many of the big cities.

"Hell To Eternity" (AA), comparatively fresh, managed to take sixth position, even rising to third place one week. "Psycho" (Par), on top or near first for the two previous months, took seventh money.

"Let's Make Love" (20th), which was higher in September, copped eighth place. "All the Young Men" (Col) wound up ninth. "Jungle Cat" (BV), high in the previous month, took 10th position.

"Surprise Package" (Col), a newcomer which appeared in the ratings only two weeks, finished 11th. "Sunrise at Campobello" (WB), out on hard-ticket, rounds out the Top 12 for the month. "Sunrise" so far has been very spotty, and something of a disappointment in several keys.

"House of Usher" (AI), sixth one week, paces the runner-up pix. "Under 10 Flags" (Par), "Sons and Lovers" (20th), "All Fine Young Cannibals" (M-G) and "Carry On Nurse" (Gov) were the other runner-up films. Only "Usher" and "Flags" hit $100,000 or over for the month.

"It Started in Naples" (Par), high on the list in September, finished third one week in October. "School For Scoundrels" (Cont) was as a runner-up film two different weeks. "I'm All Right Jack" (Col) was in the same category, but neither pix had enough to make this classification for the full month.

"Spartacus" (U), preemed in three key cities last month, looms as a potentially sock grosser on hard-ticket basis. It held close to capacity the first two weeks at the N. Y. DeMille where launched. "Magnificent Seven" (UA), which landed fourth place the final week of the month, also shapes as a big entry based on first six playdates.

"Desire in Dust" (20th), another newie, shapes quite spotty or mild thus far, but managed to wind up ninth the final week in October. "Girl in Night" (WB), also just getting started, was sixth-place winner the same week.

"Midnight Lace" (U) looks a big b.o. possibility based on its three smash weeks at N. Y. Music Hall. "Inherit the Wind" (UA), which drew great reviews in N. Y., did solid biz first two weeks in two houses there.

Robert Mitchum Corp. Arranges 3 Pictures For United Artists

United Artists has concluded a deal with Robert Mitchum for the star's independent company to make three pictures for UA release. The arrangement, which becomes effective Jan. 1, is said to be the first multiple picture arrangement entered into by Mitchum since the expiration of his contract with RKO six years ago.

First picture under the new deal will be "North From Rome," which starts shooting in Italy on March 15. It is based on a novel by Helen MacInnes.

studio to undertake, is now the only type of celluloid that can pull patrons back to the wickets in droves.

Today's theatre market is so curved now that one good spectacular film can be the difference of a studio going into the red or black for the year, declares Lewis.

But while the major investor or distributor chalks his profit or loss by the tickets sold, that's not so for the individual producer. Lewis pointed out that Bryna Productions doesn't participate in ticket sales until Universal recoups its initial investment. It's figured that the studio will have to pull in approximately $22,000,000 to break even. From there on in U shares in 30% of the pic's profits. By Lewis' calculations "Spartacus" will break even within two years. Six-months of which will entail a multiple booking engagement following one-and-a-half years of roadshow bookings.

Next big one on tap for Lewis at Kirk Douglas' Bryna Productions is "Cortez and Montezuma" which will be lensed in Mexico next year with a $10,000,000 dollar budget. But prior to this Lewis will produce a less costly film for Bryna starring Douglas. This property will be a contemporary yarn for which there is no distribution deal set as yet.

Hearings Over, Hartford Ruling Due; Hit Toll With Theatre Films 'Sexiness'

By JAY LEWIS

Washington, Nov. 1.

RKO General's tollvision proposal is hanging up to dry for a while after going through the wringer of a five-day Federal Communications Commission hearing.

Later the FCC will give the verdict. But the unofficial view is that RKO's plan stood up fairly well under all the probing, prying, pushing and hauling.

At issue is whether FCC should grant the application of RKO's Hartford Phonevision for a three-year pay-see test, but the hopes and fears of supporters and opponents of pay-tv generally also hang in the balance.

The hearings made most of the record on which the Commission will base its decision. The opposing parties still have until Nov. 15, however, to make further filings and submit proposed findings summing up their cases.

Also in the works is a potentially significant study of the Toronto Telemeter operation which will be offered for the record by FCC's Broadcast Bureau in the coming weeks. The survey, which may shed the first real light on the Telemeter experience, will be conducted by an unnamed Canadian research outfit and is designed to give FCC data on tolivision's impact on free channels.

Rival Attorneys

The oral arguments before the full Commission pitted Marcus Cohn, attorney for exhibitors opposing the grant, against W. Theodore Pierson, representing RKO and Hartford Phonevision. In the middle was Louis Stephens, conducting the case for the Broadcast Bureau.

The case for the application was presented in fairly short order with a stack of exhibits on various phases of the Hartford plan and RKO president Thomas F. O'Neil on the stand to elaborate. Largely a factual presentation, these points emerged:

(1) RKO expects to lose at least a million dollars during the three-year trial period. Under questiiing by the Commission later in the week, O'Neil said this was a "very optimistic" guess, however, and added that even if it took seven or eight years to break even, the company would view the losses worthwhile.

(2) Boxoffice potential will be the sole test of subscription fare. By this, O'Neil explained he meant only those attractions which could draw profitably at a Hartford motion picture house, legit theatre, concert hall etc.

(3) Subscription programming over the RKO outlet (WHCT, Channel 18) will total 40 hours a week with free fare comprising 30 hours. Backbone of the pay format will be feature films, to be offered at the rate of three a week except when displaced by stage plays, ballets, operas and the like.

(4) RKO General expects to lose $278,677 operating WHCT as a commercial outlet for the year ending Sept. 30, 1960. O'Neil said because of this, RKO will cease operating WHCT if the subscription application is turned down.

(5) Subscribers, 2,000 to begin with and 50,000 eventually, will be chosen on a first-come-first-serve basis unless the demand is so great as to warrant a priority system.

Bring In 'Sex'

Cohn, for the exhibitors, grilled O'Neil on cross-examination for about 10½ hours stretching over a three-day period. Chided several times by FCC Chairman Frederick W. Ford for dragging out the proceeding, Cohn sought to show or suggest that:

—RKO's programming amounted to "pie in the sky" since little or nothing could be learned of any concrete assurances of product. O'Neil stuck to his guns on this issue, contending that there was no way he could get firm commitments from program suppliers until he could offer them assurances FCC would okay the pay-tv grant.

—Sex and four-letter words make a big portion of current feature films and Broadway productions unfit for subscription viewing. O'Neil promised that there would be no surrender to "sensation seekers" demanding objectionable film fare and dirty words would be deleted from legit offerings. WHCT would adhere strictly to its obligations as an FCC licensee in this regard, he said.

—Enjoyment of feature films in wide screen and color would be impaired substantially by transmission in black-and-white to a tv screen. Also, Cohn brought up the question of such distractions to the subscription viewer as ringing telephones and doorbells.

—RKO's experiment would be "meaningless" as an indicator of how pay tv will work on a nationwide basis. It will show, Cohn charged, that only the rich can afford the "unconscionable" fees RKO will impose. RKO envisions an installation charge of up to ten dollars for the decoder and a 75-cent weekly rental fee. The programs will cost from a quarter up to $3.50. Cohn argued that Zenith, developer and manufacturer of the Phonevision decoder, will extract a 25% profit from its sales in the Hartford operation.

A planned frontal assault on the RKO project by National Assn. of Broadcasters fizzled when Chairman Ford thumbed down a statement to be read by NAB vice president for tv Charles H. Tower. Irrelevant and objectionable, Ford said. The statement, distributed to the press and NAB members, charged that tollvision would corrode programming over advertising channels and give the public less choice.

Hurtful To TV?

Tower was put on the stand for questioning by NAB counsel Douglas Anello on the adverse effects of pay tv on free outlets in Hartford, but nothing was brought out which damaged RKO's case. It ended with Stephens of the Broadcast Bureau expressing doubt that Tower knew enough about the Hartford situation to qualify as an expert witness.

Final witnesses in the hearings were Zenith president Joseph S. Wright, Teco prexy Peter Van Beek and producer Leland Hayward.

Wright estimated that Zenith has sunk about $10,000,000 into Phonevision and did not expect to recoup any of it during the Hatrford test. He also said that he had helped in the search for programming by contacting such filin execs as Jack Warner and Ben Kalmenson of Warner Bros.; Spyros Skouras of Fox; Abe Montague and Paul Lazarus of Columbia; and Robert Benjamin of United Artists.

Van Beek said Teco, charged with coming up with programs for Hartford Phonevision, has initially set aside about $100,000 to acquire options on material. Teco would profit two ways in the venture—from the sale of programming to Hartford Phonevision and from a percentage of the operation's gross.

Sperling Non-Exclusive; At Both WB, Columbia

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

Milton Sperling, longtime Warner producer, will produce indie slate of four pix for Columbia Pictures under deal wrapped up over weekend with Sam Briskin. Deal provides that Sperling continues his production activities at WB, both studio arrangements being non-exclusive.

He starts Col pact after his next for WB, "Marauders," latter to start in January.

Russians, they didn't comment to their American guests.

Party, itself, consisted of huge table laden with Russian delicacies, as much liquor as anyone wanted, dancing to four-piece band.

Karaganov, with Herman Weinberg and Darius Milhaud, is a juror and figures to push "Ballad of a Soldier" as best picture of the 20 (from 19 nations) being exhibited. Chances are he'll also plug for Tchukhrai for best director award.

Because Karaganov's the only Russian who speaks more than a few words of English, he's been getting biggest share of interviews. Among these have been a Bob Thomas column for AP and Paine Knickerbocker's column in the Chronicle, where he's quoted as saying he's never under any pressure to alter his reviews in Moscow.

Said Charles Einstein's Frisco Examiner column: "Surely the fact that the Soviets were the only ones to send a major delegation to the San Francisco Festival may not be ignored."

That probably sums up much local feeling as well as anything, with politics pushed into a separate compartment of thought.

Phillipines

Philippines is a simple matter in terms of budget. While some of his pix have run into the above-$100,000 category, his average picture budget runs between $30,000 and $45,000, with pix turning out two hours or more in running time. "Cry Freedom" was a $100,000 pic, Bayer noted, explaining it was done on location and with 7,000 extras. "Had the picture been made in the United States," he pointed out, "the budget would have been more like $500,000."

Bayer stated there are four major film studios and 13 independent studios in Manila alone and that together they turn out 350 to 400 films a year. "The Philippine market is tremendous," Bayer said. "Many movie fans see two and three films a day because there is little other entertainment. When they run out of good pictures they stand in line for the bad ones.

Bayer remains here through Nov. 12 and expects to return in March to work out final details on his co-production deals.

careful upgrading of quality, plus revamped distributor pricing arrangements and tighter control of costs. So says Bernhard.

Decca went off in a different direction. Sale of the U studio eliminated the stress on Immediate need for pictures, and overhead concern. Pictures could be made at the most feasible times and places. Mass production was abolished and this led to a significant (several millions in annual savings) cutdown in distribution setup. Instead of 32 regular-sized branch offices, there are now only 10, with 22 supplementary sales units.

U has had more time for its individual production as a result and has taken advantage of the promotional opportunities provided by this same extra time, Bernhard points out.

This brioche may be just what the baker ordered in France, but it falls pretty flat in the U.S., with or without translation.

It is supposed to be a French romp—and contains plenty of romping, though a sophisticated U.S. audience could hardly imagine what U.S. Customs was worried about in holding up its importation.

Story centers on a girl (Genevieve Cluny) in her mid-20's who wants to marry the artist (Jean-Pierre Cassel) she's been living with two years. He doesn't buy until his best friend (Jean-Louis Maury) starts making goo-goo eyes at the girl. Then he agrees.

The trouble with all of this is the men. They posture outrageously, indeed, almost sickeningly.

Occasional individual scenes are funny, and Miss Cluny is an arch and pleasant actress. Jean Penzer's camera work in and around Paris is stunning. Doubtful bet even for U.S. art houses. Stef.

San Francisco, Oct. 21.

International Golden Star Film production. Stars Giovanni Ralli, Sergei Bondarschuk, Leo Genn, Peter Baldwin; features Renato Salvatore, Hannes Messemer. Directed by Roberto Rossellini. Screenplay, Roberto Rossellini, Diego Fabbri, S. Amidei, B. Rondi; camera, Carlo Carlini; music, Renzo Rossellini. At Frisco Film Fest. Running time, 130 MINS.

Esperia	Giovanni Ralli
Fyodor Nazukov	Sergei Bondarschuk
Michael Pemberton	Leo Genn
Peter Bradley	Peter Baldwin
Renato	Renato Salvatore
Commandant	Hannes Messemer

Roberto Rossellini's latest essay on World War II is about a third too long, but ith judicious cutting and tightening might be successful in U.S. specialty houses or, conceivably, could go into general release.

Picture concerns plight of three Allied prisoners who have escaped after the 1943 Italian surrender. The three—an American (Peter Baldwin), Englishman (Leo Genn) and Russian (Sergei Bondarschuk)—are aided by a beautiful, young black marketeer (Giovanni Ralli) and smuggled into a Roman attic.

Germans, assisted by informers, still control the city and the underground has to hide the soldiers until they can escape to Allied lines. Bulk of the film's occupied with the soldiers' and girl's close calls.

Eventually, the Russian is killed, as is the girl's fiance (Renato Salvatore). In final scenes the Briton kills the informer who caused death of the Russian and the girl's fiance—the informer in the midst of trying to seduce the girl. Final frames show the Allies entering Rome.

Picture is quadro-lingual, which is interesting. Chunks of English, Russian and German are used, together with the predominant Italian. But too many scenes simply are too long and have too much talk for what, essentially, must be an action picture, no matter what "message" Rossellini's trying to put over (message, lousy). Some blame for length and script's turgidity must be placed on Rosselli

On the other hand, the acting is excellent, especially among the Italians—the Yank, Briton and Russian tend to be stereotyped. And Rossellini has injected some interesting business about a princely Roman family and about the church's part in the underground. Furthermore, there are plenty of the old, arty Rossellini touches and Carlo Carlini's camera work is splended. Sound dubbing on this particular print is poor, but presumably can be corrected.

This could go—IF the proper cutting's done, and it has some exploitation possibilities. Stef.

WHOSE COMPUTER D'YA DIG?

Dilemma Priced at $30,000,000

Everybody at CBS-TV from prexy Jim Aubrey down has a "plot" to free "The Witness" from its 7:30-8:30 "kid time" on Thursdays and move it to a later time. All that stands in the way is a sponsor named General Foods, which has more than a little leverage at CBS-TV with annual expenditures of better than $30,000,000 with the network.

That the 7:30 time and "Witness" are a mismatch is acknowledged freely at the web. Execs would like to move it to 9-10, thereby establishing it in a more sensible time period and getting a half-hour jump on "The Untouchables" to boot. But 9-10 is General Foods all the way, and at the moment GF isn't inclined to budge.

At 9, GF has "Angel," and it's tied to a 52-week commitment on the show. At 9:30, it has Ann Sothern, with a somewhat shorter commitment. Last spring, CBS took on "Angel" but pleaded with GF to drop the Sothern show, or at least to find some other time period. GF insisted, and after some hassling CBS gave way, prepared to write Thursday off as pretty much of a loss.

Now, however, along comes "Witness," which hadn't even been considered during the CBS-GF discussions. The more CBS sees of it, the more they like it and the greater their conviction it could do well in a later time period. But no soap, at least right now. Web probably would be willing to settle for an even 9:30 start with "Untouchables" if the Sothern show could be moved, since it could then switch "Person to Person" at 10 to another slot. What hurts the brass about the current situation is that they know "Witness" won't make it at 7:30, regardless of quality.

Meanwhile, though there have been no cancellations on "Witness" yet, the network figures it probable that it will lose two of its four bankrollers come the first of the year. Esquire Boot Polish and Schick Razors are primarily seasonal advertisers in for the big Christmas push, and while they could continue with the show, they have 13-week cancellation privileges. This doesn't help "Witness" any either.

So CBS is feeling its way to see if any juggling of the Thursday night lineup can be accomplished. But very gingerly—$30,000,000-a-year sponsors don't grow on trees.

CBS Radio Program Pattern Set; 19 New Info Shows, Sports, News

Final pattern of CBS Radio's added news and informational programming starting Nov. 28 has been set, and it adds up to 19 new informational shows, 10 new five-minute sports segments and 27 10-minute news reports and analyses per week.

Web has inked Zachary Scott and Jerry Coleman, ex-Yankee, to augment its regular news staff. Moreover, it has assigned specific newsmen to specific shows, such as David Schoenbrun for an 11:30 a.m. "Your Man In Paris" strip not confined to straight news but containing anecdotes, interviews, etc.

CBS estimates that all told, the new programming plus special public affairs shows will exceed the total airtime weekly of the six soapers, two half-hour dramas and the variety strip they will replace.

Coleman will do 10 five-minute sports shows each weekend, covering news, analysis and human interest features. Coleman's shows will augment the web's five-minute "It's Sports Time Strip" with Phil Rizzuto and Pat Summerall. Scott will do a 12:30 p.m. strip titled "Man and Wife," narrating famous

Progress

It's taken six weeks of negotiation between the American Federation of Television & Radio Artists and the tv and radio networks, but they've finally come to an agreement on something. It's the only thing they've definitely agreed on during talks on a new contract:

Child actors will not be permitted to audition for jobs during school hours.

CBS-TV Dickers 'The Good Years'

Walter Lord, whose "A Night to Remember" remains one of television's memorable efforts, may be represented on tv again via his current bestseller, "The Good Years." CBS-TV is negotiating an option on the book, which covers the period from 1900 to the First World War, as a possible vehicle for Leland Hayward for a treatment in the vein of "The Fabulous Fifties" and the upcoming "Gershwin Years."

Lord, a former J. Walter Thompson exec, hit paydirt on his first book in "Night to Remember," the sinking of the Titanic, which Kraft adapted for its series and subsequently repeated. Since then, he's written a book on the attack on Pearl Harbor and the current "Good Years."

Same period has already been treated on NBC via the "Project 20" special, "The Innocent Years." But a Hayward treatment, of course, would be far different from the documentary approach of "Project 20."

Life Mag's 500G 25th Anni Spread Set For NBC-TV

Life magazine, to celebrate its 25th birthday, is going to sponsor a 90-minute special on NBC-TV, and the blueprint is reminiscent of tv's early corporate celebrations by General Electric and General Motors. Perhaps priced not quite as high as either the GE or GM spec, "25 Years of Life" is reportedly going to cost nearly $500,000 to produce.

A music-variety format, "25 Years of Life" will take up a 90-minute period on Thursday, March 2. Slot is from 9:30 to 11 p.m.

One of major aspects of "25 Years" is the promotion potential. No details are available, but various observers are conjuring up images of full-page (free) spreads in Life, maybe Time, plus the strong probability of a regular Life story on the construction of the NBC special. Young & Rubicam, Life's agency, is responsible for the deal.

Ray Heatherton Show

Ray Heatherton has been signed by station WFYI, Garden City, L.I., to produce and perform in a daily chitchat show about show business in general called "The Seven Lively Arts."

Heatherton emceed "Luncheon at Sardi's for several years and did a children's tv show, "Merry Mailman."

ELECTION NITE'S BIG RAZZMATAZZ

By ART WOODSTONE

Television is felt to have performed in the last five weeks a feat of incalculable importance to the Presidential campaign. Now, with some luck, television also will probably be first in 1960 to foretell which man—Kennedy or Nixon—is the next President of the United States.

On Election Day, Nov. 8, the three networks will employ 2,900 men and women to gather and disseminate to a promisingly substantial part of the electorate the latest data on the fortunes of the two men. They will also have three forbiddingly complex machines to "project" and "extrapolate"—yet never to "predict," since that's a dirty word in computation—whether the next administration will be Republican or Democratic.

If the people who feed CBS' new IBM 7090, NBC's new RCA 501 and ABC revised Remington-Rand Univac don't make any drastic mistakes and if the early voting returns aren't perspiringly tight, viewers should have the answer by 9 or 9:30 p.m., times when some of the Presidential polling places around the country are closing up.

Each of the networks, having had three other tries to work out the kinks, say that the production of Election coverage will be simpler than ever before. Yet viewers will be enabled to see a wider range of statistics and hear more intricate shadings of interpretation and reportage than ever before.

NBC, CBS and, in much the same measure, ABC will translate for viewing voters how things are coming out in terms of racial blocks, religious blocks, geographic blocks and party lines. They'll be able to see, and perhaps to follow, breakdowns city by city, state by state and region by region. They'll see panoramic electric boards in the studios and hear reporters on location. It's not as if they couldn't hear and see many of the same things in 1956, except that this time up 1960 the networks promise more clarity and purpose.

No longer on NBC will viewers catch glimpses of bodies hurtling around Studio 8-H, because all the cameras will be nine feet off the ground, so that messengers, floor managers, and sound men and tv camerame on coffee breaks and select visitors will be able to walk upright and thus remain beneath the impersonal eye of the live cameras. Hearing this, CBS said it has avoided human miscellani all along, which brings up another point:

Somebody's Gonna Crow

The tv networks and their radio sisters will, just as they did during the summer political conventions, be vying tenaciously for top tv honors. If 7090 is first in picking a winner on Nov. 8, CBS won't keep it a secret in the Nov. 9 press bundle. If 501 wins the sweepstakes, NBC will crow, and should Univac take the decision that fact will be publicized post haste by ABC.

ABC says it has 1,000 men and women, in studio TV-I and in the Bob Hope to Guest On Bobby Darin's Special

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

Bobby Darin's first tv special, to go out Jan. 31 over NBC-TV in a 9 p.m., slot, will be jointly produced by singer's Ferrion Inc., and Bud Yorkin-Norman Lear Tandem Productions Inc. Revlon will sponsor.

Bob Hope is set as guest star, resulting from a reciprocal agreement in which Darin performed on Hope's season-opener Oct. 3. Steve Blauner, Darin's personal manager, set deal and will act as exec producer for show. Tandem will function in the production, direction and writing areas.

Soap Opera Performers, Writers, Bumped by CBS Axings, Setting Up Own Syndication Operation

A band of former radio soap opera performers is seriously considering going into the radio syndication business. Purpose is to keep working now that CBS has cancelled "Ma Perkins," "Right to Happiness," "The Second Mrs. Burton," "The Couple Next Door" and the 25-minute daily adaptation of "Best Sellers."

Originally, a suggestion was tendered that AFTRA, the radio actors' union, go into the syndication business, and another idea put forth was for the actors to chip in and buy their own station to continue producing soaps. Both ideas gave way, however, to the present plan to hire a studio, produce more of the same CBS soaps and then distribute them via an actor-writer owned syndication company.

John Young, who was on "Right to Happiness," recently sent out 200 letters to CBS affils to find out the degree of interest. Soon, he's expected to send letters to NBC, ABC and Mutual affils and to indies. Young and Virginia Payne, president of AFTRA and the former "Ma Perkins," are leaders in the group. Miss Payne said that they've been requesting 12% of the applicable station rate for supplying each soap, all of which, save for "Sellers," are in 15-minute daily form.

So far, there is no indication whether the group of actors will go ahead with the plan. The formats, according to Miss Payne, belong to the writers, not CBS, so that the writers and actors will team up on the deal. As for the actors, she explained, they won't seek a proift for themselves, merely a continuation of salaries as close to their old CBS ones as they can get via syndication.

Touche

Robert Saudek and his production crew on Sunday (30) taped the first "Omnibus" entry of the season, "He Shall Have Power," dramatizing the role of the American presidency, which will be shown Nov. 13 on NBC-TV.

Michael Tollin had just finished his segment, portraying Lincoln, moving scripter James Lee to crack to Saudek:

"He now belongs to the agents."

Ted Williams In 50G NBC Dickers (A la Durocher)

Ted Williams, who had been near a deal with ABC-TV, has shifted his gaze to NBC-TV, where the newly retired Boston Red Sox outfielder is in line for a $50,000 broadcaster-public relations (a la Leo Durocher) job. Contract has not been signed yet, but NBC figures Williams can handle on the air color and play-by-play and also tour for the company, making speeches and generally keeping up good will for NBC.

Job is obviously patterned after the old Durocher post. Before he quit NBC, Durocher was said to be making in the vicinity of $125,000 per annum.

What diministed Williams' interest in ABC-TV, or vise versa, is not known, but that deal looked hot just a fortnight ago. Since then, word has gone out that retiring Yankee manager Casey Stengel will move into the ABC-TV sports picture. This is something of a switch, because, originally—after Stengel and the Yanks parted ways—the manager was talking to NBC-TV.

Like Williams proposed job, Stengel would not only do airtime chores but probably get involved in the public relations image of ABC in that he, too, would travel and speak for the network.

Danny's Dandy Arbitron

Danny Kaye's tv debut scored heavily on the Arbitron front Sunday night (30), pulling down a fat 30.5 average for the 8-9 hour and giving CBS-TV a 47.9% share of audience. His ABC competition, "Maverick" and "Lawman," managed 15.9 and 15.1, while NBC's "National Velvet" and "Tab Hunter Show" ran last with 10.1 and 10.3.

Other weekend special was also on CBS, the two-part "Scarlet Pimpernell," which didn't fare so well. On Friday, it averaged 14.7 on the 7:30-8:30 hour, topped by "Dan Raven" with a 15.2 average on NBC. ABC's "Funday Funnies" had 13.4 and "Harrigan & Son" 10.8. On Saturday, "Pimpernel" again lost, doing even worse. It pulled a 12.3 average for the 7:30 hour, vs. 21.5 for NBC's "Bonanza" and 15.2 for ABC's "Roaring '20s." Latter, incidentally, soared spectacularly from a 9.5 for the first half-hour to a 20.8 in the second half.

Berlin, Nov. 1.

Don Cash has resigned as v.p. in charge of production of Intercontinental Television in Paris to join Fernsehgesellschaft der Berliner, Tageszeitungen, the new commercial station in West Berlin scheduled to take to the air Jan. 1, 1961.

John Mitchell's Bowout at ABC

John Mitchell and ABC split over the weekend. Veteran Paramount Theatres executive and one-time topper of ABC-TV, Mitchell and American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres toppers broke over what were reportedly policy differences.

Mitchell, who left New York and the tv network side a few years ago to become boss of KGO-plus-tv, ABC's owned & operated stations in San Francisco, (and not to be confused with Screen Gems' John Mitchell) shifted last spring to the net's international operation. He became general manager, under Don Coyle, of ABC's Central American TV Network, and he worked mostly out of San Jose, Costa Rica.

Ron Cochran Set To Helm 'Face New York'

Ron Cochran, for years the key newsman at WCBS-TV, N.Y., until his recent moveover to the CBS News network side, returns to the flagship station this month, but under somewhat different circumstances. While retaining his network status, he'll serve as moderator of "Face New York."

"Face New York" will be the WCBS-TV local edition of "Face the Nation," holding forth on an every-third-week basis. Panel of newsmen haven't been picked yet for the premiere, set for Nov. 28.

AFTRA's In-Perpetuity Toll Plum With a Lifetime Gross Incentive For Performers in Telemeter Pact

Toll video will pay actors several times more than they've ever before earned—if it is successful, and if it is a failure, then the actors have conditional guarantees that could mean they will still receive more than they earn presently from free television. But, judging by the generosity of a deal reached in behalf of actors, at least one toll video producer must figure that business will be highly successful.

Telemeter, the toll video division of Paramount, and the American Federation of Television & Radio Artists, after months of negotiation, last week reached agreement on a contract that, for a start, guarantees scale performers 5% of the producer's gross, in perpetuity, for each pay-tv program made.

The Telemeter agreement is seen as a minimum for all other toll contracts with AFTRA. It will also serve as a basis for Screen Actors Guild since the two unions now have a close working arrangement.

Plus 5% of the lifetime gross of each toll tv program, scale players in AFTRA are guaranteed an initial payment for each Telemeter production. It amounts to one-and-one-half times the rate for equivalent free programming on network television. "The Consul," Telemeter's first production, will pay actors on the basis of present AFTRA-network fees, but the one-and-one-half on other toll stanzas will probably be based on whatever new fees are contained in the free tv contract now being dickered by CBS, NBC and ABC with the union.

The difference in money between the Telemeter payment and the network payment for scale players will be put into a "players' pool" and will serve as credit against the 5% world gross. It works this way. If the network rate happened to be $100 for scale work, then the Telemeter rate would be $150—with $100 paid out immediately to the performer and the remaining $50 put into the pool, to be shelled out when enough money has accumulated. If an individual Telemeter production grosses $1,000,000 in a year in toll fees throughout the world, or even in this country alone, then the pool would contain a total of $500,000 (including the sum of the $50 advances) to be divvied up among scale players.

As further gross is obtained by Telemeter, more payments will be made into the pool, and that money, too, will ultimately be divvied among the actors in the show.

AFTRA is anticipating the possibility that Telemeter won't click on every show, and, consequently, another clause was written into the record-money contract. If Telemeter fails in any instance and decides to turn the show over to commercial tv in an effort to recapture some of its original investment, it must first pay scale players a brand new fee—one, which, again, is higher by 50% than the commercial network fee.

Coming Events

Apart from "The Consul," Telemeter is understood to have a dozen other toll tv productions lined up for production within coming months. Probably the first will be a pay-tv adaptation of Gilbert & Sullivan's "Mikado."

Others range from converted Broadway plays and musicals to "other cultural events." It is believed, in the latter category, Telemeter seeks a hand from the Metopera.

CBS-TV's SRO On Holiday Specials

CBS-TV has all but locked in its Thanksgiving Day specials with a pair of fat sponsorship deals. Campbell Soups has picked up all of the web's 90-minute parade sponsorship in the morning, while Ford Motors has bought an additional Leonard Bernstein New York Philharmonic concert for late afternoon.

Campbell will bankroll the three-city parade coverage in full. CBS picks up parades from New York, Detroit and Philadelphia over the hour and a half span. Deal set via BBDO.

Bernstein concert will be the filmed presentation of the Philharmonic's recent concert in West Berlin, at 5-6. It makes the fourth Bernstein concert scheduled by Ford. Three others are a Christmas Day repeat of Bernstein's "Ford Startime" show last year on NBC with Marian Anderson and the St. Paul's Boys Choir, to be followed by new 90-minute concerts in January and February. Kenyon & Eckhardt set the deal.

Stubby Kaye Into 'My Sister Eileen'

Screen Gems is adding Stubby Kaye as a permanent member of the cast of its "My Sister Eileen." He'll portray an agent for the title character with a crush on her older sister, Ruth, who's portrayed by Elaine Stritch. Kaye moves in with the sixth or seventh episode.

Idea is to strengthen the comedy series by giving it added warmth with Kaye. He was last seen as a series regular last season on "Love and Marriage."

Byron Paul Quits CBS For Coast Telepix Work

Byron Paul, longtime CBS-TV staff director, is quitting the network to move to the Coast and enter the freelance directing field in telefilms. He's already done a couple of "Have Gun, Will Travel" segments and decided to move out.

Paul, who directed many CBS-TV live series over the years, was last on "The Verdict Is Yours," as the regular director until the daytimer moved out the Coast.

Allstate No Longer Sore at CBS, Buys Into Sun. TV 'Line'

Allstate Insurance, which left CBS-TV in a huff last spring when it was first promised and then denied sponsorship on the Garry Moore show, is returning to the network Dec. 25, when it assumes alternate - week sponsorship of "What's My Line?"

The Sears, Roebuck insurance subsid grabbed the deal when it learned that Sunbeam is quitting as alternate with Kellogg effective that date. The Sunbeam budget won't permit year-round network sponsorship, and since its "Line" commitment was on a calendar year basis, it's due to expire the week before Christmas.

Allstate hassle with CBS stemmed from the fact it had been promised one-fourth sponsorship of Moore this fall. CBS had to back down on the deal when Moore refused to accept four alternating sponsors for the show and insisted on a maximum of three. Allstate went over to NBC and bought a quarter of "Thriller."

The "Line" buy raises some speculation as to Allstate's intentions regarding "Tiriller" and NBC. Buy was described as being out of an enlarged budget, which would mean that its "Thriller" status at the moment is unchanged. But even if extra money is involved, a two-show advertiser like Allstate would be in a far better discount position on a single network. Moreover, though happy enough with the ratings achieved by "Thriller," Allstate has been unhappy with the program content and has had some doubts about whether the show is right for the "insurance image."

Dr. Burke's Met Series

Dr. Albert Burke, former Yale professor and currently a tv producer-commentator, has been signed by WNEW-TV, the Metropolitan Broadcasting outlet in N.Y. for several on-the-air chores, including a new half-hour series of news-essays and to serve as anchorman for the station's election coverage next Tuesday (8).

Nielsen Updates 24-City Scorecard

Newest 24-city report off the Nielsen beltline—for the week ending Oct. 23—shows ABC-TV ahead of the pack, but a good deal less strongly than in the Oct. 16 multi-city. Moreover, the report indicates a good deal of switching and suggests that the overall pattern is far from determined.

The report, covering 51 half-hours in prime time, gives ABC the lead in 20 of them, with CBS just behind with 19 and NBC again last with 12. Last report found ABC ahead in 26 half-hours, CBS in 17 and NBC in six. New report finds ABC ahead again on Sunday, Monday, Thursday and Friday, with CBS taking Tuesday and Saturday and NBC Wednesday. One night — Tuesday — changed hands, going from NBC to CBS.

Total of 10 half-hours switched in dominance. Dramatic example was Tuesday at 9, which in the Oct. 16 report had "Thriller" first, "Stagecoach West" second and Tom Ewell third but in the latest report doing a complete turnabout with Ewell first and "Thriller" last.

Top 10 lineup for the report finds ABC and CBS sharing honors with four shows each, and NBC with two:

Gunsmoke (CBS)	40.3
Untouchables (ABC)	34.0
Have Gun (CBS	31.8
Wagon Train (NBC)	30.3
My 3 Sons (ABC)	29.1
Real McCoys (ABC)	27.8
Candid Camera (CBS)	27.4
Lawman (ABC)	26.5
Red Skelton (CBS)	25.8
Bob Hope (NBC)	25.6

Capra in N.Y. for Directors Guild Contract Dickers on Live TV, Radio

Key to Directors Guild of America's forthcoming demands in live television and radio will be adjustment of basic scale to bring directors in all media to parity on salary minimums. Outlining the overall concept, prexy Frank Capra asserted the union doesn't expect to win all in one year but will start ball rolling immediately.

Proposed demands were submitted for approval at weekend semi-annual national board meeting in N. Y., attended by Capra and 11 other reps of the Guild's Hollywood branch. Eastern group, more involved in live tv than is the local org, has been working on demands which will be made to the television and radio networks.

Present contracts with the webs expire Dec. 31, and Capra noted he anticipates no problem in signing a new contract by that deadline. "The networks' representatives sat in on film negotiations," he said, explaining the lines of communication already have been established.

Capra explained live tv scale for directors is "somewhat below" minimums in film and that scale for stage managers and associate directors is even more unequal.

Differences in working time, etc., prevent the two media—live tv and filmed tv—from being compared straight down the line. As an example, however, directors in tv film receive minimum of $650 per week. Figuring six working days per half-hour film, the director then would receive at least $780 per half hour of tv film. With working time specified, the direc-

'ARABIAN NIGHTS' AS FINKEL SATIRE

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

Four hour specials, diverse in format, have been blocked out by Bob Finkel's own packaging it for the Chevy Show this season. For the first time on the Sunday series a book musical will be performed.

He will lead off Nov. 27 with an "Arabian Nights" satire costarring Janet Blair, John Vivyan, as a song-and-dance man, and Louis Nye as the genii. Next spec, Jan. 1, ill be called "Headliners," with top club acts allowed to perform the specialties for a full nine minutes. Booked are George Gobel, Peggy Lee, Frankie Avalon and Percy Faith's orchestra of 40 pieces.

"The Happiest Day," book musical by Irvin Graham, will fill the April 23 date. Starred are Craig Stevens, Janet Blair, Charlie Ruggles, Tony Randall and Fred MacMurray if he is available. Book relates the story of a guardian angel who fulfills every wish. As the last of the specials, Jose Ferrer will be starred in "Something Old, Something New," in which the older man gets the girl. Interspersed will be vignettes by Ferrer on "Cyrano," "September Song" and "Caesar and Cleopatra."

If You Wanna Buy 'CBS Reports' It's Gotta Be On A 'No Peeking' Basis

By BOB CHANDLER

A revolutionary new "no peeking" sales policy has been adopted by Fred Friendly and Ed Murrow on the "CBS Reports" series with the full blessing of CBS' prexy Frank Stanton and CBS-TV topper Jim Aubrey. Under the policy, no sponsor may see a "CBS Reports" edition until it is actually on the air—if it wants to buy it sight unseen that's fine, but CBS would rather lose the sale than show the film in advance.

That's what very nearly happened last week when Philip Morris first refused, then recanted and bought Thursday's (27) "Money and the Next President"—sight unseen. On Monday (24), Philip Morris execs converged on CBS with orders from PM prexy Joseph Cullman to screen the "Reports" segment. Friendly and Murrow, who had warned the cigaret company in advance they would not show the film to anyone, refused to screen it for them. The execs stomped out and deal looked dead. But the next day, PM changed its mind and bought the show sight unseen.

The blind-buying policy is being justified by Friendly and CBS on the basis that this is a new brand of television journalism, based on the prestige, the reputations and the integrity of Murrow, Friendly and CBS. Sponsor is buying a concept and people, and while he's informed as to the subject matter to be undertaken, he has no more right to see the actual treatment than an advertiser has the right to ask for an advance copy of Arthur Krock's next-day's column in the New York Times or Walter Lippmann's in the Herald Tribune.

That's the approach being taken by CBS, and on a take-it-or-leave-it basis, with the network willing to sustain "Reports" than permit prospective sponsors advance screenings. It will obtain with the next "Reports" segment, "Harvest of Shame," on Nov. 25, and with every one after that as well. Ironically, Philip Morris is considering purchasing sponsorship of the third show as well. "Shame" deals with the plight of migratory farm workers.

Friendly laid down the law—and CBS backed him up—after, with some advance misgivings, he agreed to screen the "Reports" opener, "The Year of the Polaris," to a couple of prospective sponsors. One of them, interested in the show, made a purchase of the program conditional upon some changes in the content, and Friendly and CBS told the sponsors to forget it. Philip Morris also screened "Polaris" in advance and bought it as is, without any suggestions. But it was told at the time that regardless of any possible interest it might have in future segments, it would be permitted to see the film in advance.

Policy, however, carries with it an auxiliary rule to the effect that an advertiser purchasing a multiple commitment on "Reports" may pull out, without penalty, of any individual segment he feels to be too controversial or embarrassing for his auspices. On the face of it, there could be some such instances for the future. One show is "The Labor Day Massacre," which an auto company, for example, might not consider the best public relations tiein, especially if the show is critical of the auto industry.

CBS established this particular facet of sales policy earlier this year when it allowed Goodrich to pull out of its "CBS Reports" special devoted to the segregation problem in the South. Web feels it doesn't want to hold a club over a sponsor with no hankering to be involved in too controversial a subject. But the "no peeking" policy will stand as a hard and fast rule.

MCA's 9 Months Earnings at Peak

MCA Inc. set a record nine-month earnings during the period ending Sept. 30, with a 30% increase over the comparable 1959 period, according to Jules C. Stein, chairman of the board.

Earnings before taxes were $9,251,346, as against $7,212,033 for the '59 period. Net income after taxes totaled $4,484,073, compared with $3,496,333 for the nine months last year. After preferred dividends, net equaled $1.11 per share as against 86c last year.

Third quarted earnings also rose. Net income after taxes reached $1,354,626, compared with $1,039,025 for same quarter of '59. After preferred dividends, earnings equalled 33c a share, as against 25c in the '59 quarter.

Bump 'Raven' For 2 'Happy' Shows

NBC-TV is going to program a happiness hour to replace the brooding detective "Dan Raven" by the second Friday in January. When the Screen Gems action-adventure series, which is fronted by Skip Homeier, goes off after 13 60-minute episodes, two half-hour series will take its place and they are "Happy" and "One Happy Family."

"Happy" will be a continuation of the summertime series that filled part of Perry Como's Wednesday hour during the singer's vacation. It comes from Como's shop and was peddled by GAC, Como's agent. "One Happy Family" will be based on a Goodson-Todman tv film pilot.

"Raven," based on the exploits of a fictional detective lieutenant of police who works Hollywood's Sunset Strip, is the first of the new '60-'61 shows definitely marked for the retirement list. Presently, it carries participations, some of which run until the Jan. 6 retirement date. "One Happy Family" is reportedly taking the 7:30 time and "Happy" the 8 slot, which together make up "Raven's" time.

$100,000,000 CBS-TV DAYTIME

NBC-TV's Big Weekend Tint-Up

For promotional purposes, RCA got NBC-TV to make Friday, Nov. 11, "Color Television Day" and, later, it was turned into a "Color Television Weekend," covering all but utside produced telefilm programs from the orning of Friday (11) through the ight of Sunday (13).

Concentrated tint program push is to stimulate further sales of color tv sets by demonstrating the advanced state of multichromatic feeds.

Big color concentration is still on Fridays, where NBC can convert everyone of its daytime ommercial programs to color. From the 6 a.m. "Continental Classroom," which is always in color, NBC will colorize "Today," "Dough Re Mi," "Play Your Hunch," "Price Is Right," "Concentration," "Truth Or Consequences," "It Could Be You," "Jan Murray Show," "Young Dr. Malone," "From These Roots" and "Here's Hollywood." In the evening, the tinted flesh tones of Huntley and Brinkley will share billing with the news, and, afterwards, "The Bell Telephone Hour" will be in color. (Rest of sked is film stuff that cannot be converted from monochrome to multichrome in time.)

Saturday (12), the new "Shari Lewis Sh ," "King Leonardo," "True Story" will be tinted. "Bonanza," at night, will be the color entry. All of these Saturday shows, but for "Story," are normally colorized.

Sunday (13), the schedule of tint reads "Eternal Light," "Professional Football," and "Meet the Press" during the day, and "Shirley Temple Show," "Chevy Show" and "This Is Your Life" at night. Only Miss Temple and Dinah Shore's "Chevy" mally seen in color on Sundays.

TV in Britain Comes In for Some Scathing Blasts From Church, Govt.

London, Nov. 1.

Television was rapped over the knuckles last week in two speeches, one by the Home Secretary, R. A. Butler, and the other by Cardinal Godfrey, Roman Catholic archbishop of Westminster. Both deplored the violence, sex and horror in some tv programs.

Butler, speaking at a conference on mass communications organized by the National Union of Teachers, said: "The BBC and ITV should improve their standards. Some tv films of horror and violence are deplorable. We should not ignore the report of the Council for Children's Welfare, which gave a fearsome and alarming account of the effect of tv on the young." The Home Secretary added: "The Independent Television Authority is under an obligation not to include anything likely to incite crime or disorder. I only hope it carries out the terms of this statute."

Cardinal Godfrey, addressing a Public Morality Council meeting, was even more forthright. He said: "Television will be a power for evil and disastrous to the nation if it allows sex and sensuality to become big business. The unceasing portrayal of killings and crime for the entertainment of old and young weakens the moral fibre and breeds a distorted idea of th alue of human life."

He continued: "tv and sound broadcasting may be instruments of good or evil. It is idle to retort that the people have a right to what they want, that they the licenses and should call the tune."

Brit. 'Behavior' Code

London, Nov. 1.

Howard Thomas, boss of ABC-TV, has clamped dow bad language in his company's programs and has issued a code of conduct which must be followed by playwrights contributing to ABC-TV's Sunday ight "Armchair Theatre" series. Says Thomas; "I never forget that what we produce goes into the home. I think swearing shows a paucity of expression both on tv and in ordinary life. I think there is too much of it on television. As an ex-writer I know the English language has a wide range of expressions and words without falling back on bad language."

Thomas's decision is regarded disapprovingly by certai authors as "a form of censorship."

Met's Nine-Month Gross $11,125,281

Metropolitan Broadcasting grossed $11,125,281 and netted $301,428 or 18c a share before goodwill mortization during the third quarter ended Oct. 2. No comparative figures for the third quarter of 1959 were furnished because of broad changes in the company's operations, according to prexy John Kluge.

Met board of directors also sent out a 15c a share dividend check for 1960, payable to stockholders of record Oct. 2 on Oct. 28. Kluge said that earnings could have justified a higher divvy, but that profits were being conserved for expansion.

Company's gross for the first 39 weeks now totals $30,393,176. Net profits before the goodwill amortization charge are $1,170,176 or 69c a share. After all charges, net income for the quarter was $287,323 or 17c a share and for the 39 weeks was $1,035,247 or 61c per share.

NBC's Don Hyatt's Special Projects Plans Jumpin'

Don Hyatt, special project unit at NBC-TV has three working producers now, plus Hyatt himself. Because of the substantial workload, however, at least two more will be needed within the next few months.

Robert Bendick, who has other NBC chores too, w assigned last week by Hyatt to develop the unit's seventh or eighth package. In half-hour form, it's called "A Man & His Journey." Bill Nichols had been previously given the overseer job for "America's Music." Gene Jones is not only in charge of the "World of . . ." and "Quest," but he's " elping out Bendick" on "Journey," which means that before long he'll have to give up one or two of his chores because of the overload.

Hyatt, plus administrating the unit, will himself produce six "Project 20" programs and that's two more than he'd done in any previous season.

Newest entry, "Man & His Journey," will cover such persons as Lewis & Clark, Charles Lindbergh, the trip of the atomic sub, Skate, and Admiral Perry. And for the first time, the special projects unit will be using actors as more than just narrators as is the case on "Project 20." There will be a narrator, but professional performers will mime th action he talks about.

BIGTIME SPURT IN GROSS SALES

In the face of a general downturn in daytime business, CBS-TV has effected $25,000,000 gross sales spurt in the past two months that is now bringing the web to an annual gross daytime billings level of over $100,000,000 a year. Though it's unlikely this figure will be reached during '60-61, the types of new business generated in the current drive makes the Columbia daytim icture look rosier than ever.

One of the new buyers is General Foods, which hasn't spent a cent in daytime on CBS-TV in the past year. GF, via Young & Rubicam, is picking up two alternate quarter-hours a week, a small enough start but highly significant in that it was Y&R which steered all the GF daytime business over to ABC-TV to launch that web's daytime operations.

No ss significant is a major purchase by U.S. Borax, curiously enough, its first ever in daytime tv, despite its housewife target. Deal, set via McCann-Erickson, calls for four alternate quarter-hours weekly, with possibly more to come. Heretofore, Borax has put all its tv money into "Death Valley Days."

French's Mustard, which left CBS-TV daytime a year ago, is now back, and in spades, with nine alternate quarter-hours a week, set via J. Walter Thompson.

Remington Rand is using daytie with two alternate quarterhours to push its electric shavers for women during housewife hours, via Y&R.

Nestle is back daytime via Saturday morning, with an alternate-week buy of "Mighty Mouse" and the possibility of every-week sponsorship after the first of the year with a Roy Rogers show. Also via McCann-Erickson.

Calgon (water softener) is in network tv for the first time with single alternate weekly quarterhour.

Lipton Tea has returned to CBS daytime with four alternate quarter-hours a week, plus another after the first of the year.

Kellogg has expanded its daytime-Saturday morning stake to the extent of a total of five and a half weekly quarter-hours, or 11 alternate quarter-hours, via Leo Burnett.

On the renewal side, Nabisco has kicked in with a big one—four alternate quarter-hours plus the weekly "Sky King" Saturday mornings, also via McCann, and on a firm 52-week basis as well.

And Best Foods has renewed its four alternate quarter-hours at least through the first quarter of next .

60% SRO Level

All of which brings the web over that $100,000,000 a year level on a gross basis. This, of course, is lowered considerably by discounts, both frequency and weekly, the latter of course extending to alternate-week nighttime sponsors who buy alternate daytime quarterhours to give them weekly status for discount purposes.

Nevertheless, the new and renewed business brings CBS to a 60% SRO level in daytime, a con-

'Wide World' Revivals, Full Evening 'Entertainments', Selznick Specials As NBC-TV Looks to Future Spreads

NBC-TV has at least 12 90-minute specials and four two to three-hour "Evenings of Entertainment" in detailed preparation for the '61-'62 season. Eight big-size treatments for the return of a 60-minute "Wide Wide World" are also working, and a host of specials, hovering between entertainment and public affairs, are being laid out for next season by the network's special projects unit.

NBC-TV program chief David Levy is said to want either scripts or full treatments on each of these spectaculars by—the latest—Jan. 1, so that the network can try selling them five or six months earlier than they've ever been sold before. It is not rare, but, by the same token, it's hardly common for the tv networks to peddle specials so far in advance of the regular tv network selling season, and it is equally unusual for any web to pin the sale on elaborately prepared "stories."

More often, it's a case of pinning the sale of specials to a star (a concept not foresaken by any means) and to the last-minute needs or urges of advertisers.

Thus by January, Richard Linkroum, director of specials for NBC-TV, will have complete treatments on the "Evenings of Entertainment," which is basically Levy's idea and will preempt most or all of one night's tv schedule to create room for a thematic blockbuster.

There is to be—if it's sold, of course—one 90-minute original drama or, more precisely, a special program containing three original dramas, geared for a single female star. The network believes that this trilogy, on "three aspects of love" (love appears to be a prevalent theme these days for NBC programs, since several others are also being considered), might attract some actress who is unfamiliar in tv circles. "It could be a tour de force and that should be appetizing to a star," said an NBC exec. Dick Berg is writing a third of this show, and a second writer will soon be hired. ("The third third will depend on what the other two are like.")

By retaining a portion of what was to have been a multi-hour lavish by producer Dore Schar, (Schary's option is up with NBC), Levy now has a 90-minute drama by Lorraine ("Raisin In the Sun") Hansberry called "Peculiar Institution." It's set during the Civil War, which was to have been Schary's overall theme.

Then there are the adaptations of six David O. Selznick motion pictures, one of which is "Intermezzo." The network, naturally, will have the pix themselves, plus a regular presentation, as a forcible sales point for advertisers.

Apart from the "Wide Wide World" hours, NBC is not presently going deeply into the develop-

Maybe He's Right

Cincinnati, Nov. 1.

CBS-TV chief James T. Aubrey Jr., has learned that boobooitis knows no bounds in the broadcasting industry.

A fluff by him during a Cincy Ad Club talk brought home the sting experiences by even the best mikers.

Lauding new programming of the web, Aubrey focused attention to the previous night's schedule. "For three hours, starting at 8 p.m., he said, "we had uninterrupted topflight comedy."

What Aubrey failed to remember was that the Tuesday night "uninterrupted hours of topflight comedy" had been interrupted—for a half hour of the Nixon-Lodge rally in Cincinnati, originated on WKRC-TV for CBS-TV.

Also embarrassed by Aubrey's booboo was Hulbert Taft Jr., president of the local CBS-TV link, seated near the speaker.

Dave & Chet Set In Reactivated NBC TV Specials

Since NBC-TV decided last week to go ahead and do more Tuesday night specials the 1961 half of the tv season, web quickly set about to line up stanzas. First two that are definite in the 10-11 p.m. slot are by Chet Huntley and David Brinkley, the NBC news team, who, for these stanzas, will work separately in what seems to resemble the old "World of Huntley-Brinkley" formula.

Each will narrate and appear in a feature news special, probably from abroad. This follows the format laid dow several weeks ago by NBC News producer Reuven Frank for "World of Huntley-Brinkley."

NBC also mapped six "love stories," to be produced by Gene Burr, a key production exec on the network's staff. No titles are available but it was explained that the six one-hour entries will mix adaptations and originals. Original dramas on television are rare these days.

On Friday nights, to alternate after Jan. 1 with the 9-10 p.m. "Bell Telephone Hour," Mitch Miller's "Singalong" is said to be gaining ground. This means that NBC will have two more Tuesday night special entries almost off the bat; the special projects unit at NBC has been preparing two musical offerings, "America's Music," for Fridays opposite "Bell," but if Miller goes in there, they'll be shifted to Tuesday nights.

Nothing to It

Shortly after the telecast of "The Thinking Machine" on its new "Tomorrow" series last Wednesday night (26), CBS-TV says it was besieged with calls from viewers trying to solve the problem of the cannibals and the missionaries. For any readers struggling with it, here is the problem and the correct solution:

Problem: Three missionaries and three cannibals, traveling together, come to a river. There is one boat on shore which can carry only two people. If the cannibals are allowed to outnumber the missionaries on either side of the river, they will eat them. How can all six get across uneaten?

Murrow Hurry-Up On Quemoy-Matsu

Ed Murrow will plane to Quemoy and Matsu immediately after the elections to do a "CBS Reports" from the beleaguered islands. Commentator must hold back until after next Tuesday (8) because he's due to handle commentary on CBS-TV's election coverage.

However, since the Quemoy-Matsu issue has become one of the hottest of the election debates, "Reports" producer Fred Friendly will attempt to rush it on the air as quickly as possible. It will probably go as the first "Reports" segment in December, since the November segment is already set. That's "Harvest of Shame," story of the migratory farm workers.

Writers Guild Recall Vote Hits Sextet of Coast-Berthed Officers

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

Six of the seven officers and board members of the Writers Guild of America West's television branch against whom the movement was initiated have been recalled, at the largest vote turnout last week in history of this branch of scribblers' union.

Sextet included tv-radio branch prexy Kay Lenard, v.p Joel Kane and board members Stanley Niss, Richard Collins, Stirling Silliphant, Fran van Hartesveldt. Sole remaining board member whose recall was sought is Phil Leslie, who now remains on board with Nate Monaster, David Harmon, Fenton Earnshaw and branch secretary Hy Freedman, all of whom were supported by the recall petitioners.

More than 450 ballots were cast, 300 by mail, with 200 active WGA-W members attending session at Beverly Hilton. Ousting of the six is effective immediately. Remaining five board members met Sunday night to appoint three additional tv writers to fill the vacancies, this group of eight then constituting a quorum. Subsequently a nominating committee will be appointed and an election set after 30 days to elect another three members to the board.

Recall movement was based on feeling in various quarters that the tv board, as constituted, did not rep the majority will of the membership. Final straw for the recall petitioners came when a constitutionally called meeting resulted in a "near unanimous" vote to have writer Sam Newman hired as full-time commissioner to work with producers in developing a royalty concept for tv reruns. Majority of board did not agree that hiring of a writer was in the best interests of the Guild and so voted.

Speculation that Newman now could and would accept post was quashed directly after recall vote by Newman himself. Writer, who was a key figure in many of the negotiations during the recent telescribe strike, reaffirmed he is not available for the post. He praised Joe Taback, assistant to Guild attorney Mel Nimmer, who was appointed as paid commissioner on a temporary basis and declared Taback's services are needed. "But," he added, "I feel the position of responsibility must be held by a writer."

Miss Lenard, in Cedars of Lebanon Hospital recuperating from major surgery last week, made a concise statement in response to the election. Referring to actions of the board during and after the strike, Miss Lenard said, "I am more certain than ever that we made the right decisions and equally certain that time will vindicate the correctness of our position."

U-I's Vidpix Aloofness

Universal-International is the only major motion picture company remaining out of vidpix. For a while it looked like U-I might be getting into the vidpix field, when Norman E. Gluck was rehired from Screen Gems.

Gluck had helmed U-I's commercial film production unit at one time. But now it's reported that Gluck will confine himself to U-I's 16m field, without any indications of re-entering vidfilming either the commercial or entertainment departments.

Hugh O'Brian Pact On ABC-TV Pilots

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

Hugh O'Brian has formed HOB Productions and has a deal with ABC whereby netw rk will finance pilots for the indie. Projects will not necessarily star O'Brian, who currently is in his sixth season on the "Wyatt Earp" show. Buck Houghton, producer of the "Twilight Zone" teleseries, is working with O'Brian in an advisory capacity.

Actor is currently talking with ABC anent a two-part Civil War special entitled "The North and the South." It likely would be first of a series of ventures between O'Brian's company and the web.

O'Brian continues through January on "Wyatt Earp" filming and probably will follow with national company tour of "Destry Rides Again" for producer David Merrick. Producer also is discussing new musical project with actor.

METRO TV'S NIX ON JAPAN'S LOW CEILING

As long as present price ceilings exist in Japan, Loew's will never sell its pre-'48 pix to Japanese tv, according to Richard Harper, Metro TV syndication sales topper.

Harper, who recently returned from a trip to Japan and Australia, said the ceiling must be improved "substantially" before Metro would think of moving into that market with its pix. He said while in Japan, he talked about Metro's "Thin Man" and short subjects. Present ceiling there is $500 per half-hour for all Japan.

Hal Hudson, Edwards Team in Vidpic Field

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

One of the earliest filmers of tv shows, Ralph Edwards, is returning to the vidpic field in partnership with Hal Hudson. Deal under which Hudson was to produce shows for Paramount's tv wing was dissolved by mutual agreement.

Ten years ago Edwards filmed "Truth or Consequences" with the multi camera technique. This show and Edwards' "This Is Your Life," "It Could Be You" and "About Faces" are televised live. Hudson, formerly with CBS, was for four years producer of "Zane Grey Theatre" and executive producer of "Black Saddle" and "The Westerner."

Hudson will office with the Edwards organization.

'Brannagan' Costars Take To the Road

Steve Dunne and Mark Roberts, costars of "The Brothers Brannagan," yesterday (Tues.) started on a month-long tour, which will take them from N.Y. to L.A. to promote their program.

Crowded tour will take them to Norfolk, Va.; Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Charleston, W. Va.; Roanoke, Va.; New Orleans, Miami, Tampa, Birmingham, Memphis, Chicago, Denver, and other points.

Hopefully, they return to L.A. Dec. 2, when the ratings should be coming in spelling out whether there might be another round for "Brothers Brannagan."

Desilu Dividend

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

Board of directors of Desilu Productions Inc., has declared a quarterly cash dividend of 15 cents per share on company's common stock, payable Nov. 25, 1960, to shareholders of record Nov. 11.

No dividend was declared on Class B common stock, all of which is owned by Desi Arnaz and Lucille Ball.

Official Films' 'Format' Turning Loss Into Profit

Official Films for the six months ended June 30, 1960, realized a profit before taxes of $186,507, a profit attributed to the success of short-segment programming and the new management, led by prexy Seym ur Reed.

For the year, though, loss of $691,030 after taxes was sustained, a loss which would have been much greater had it not been for the success of the shorties. The loss, too, was high due to the large writeoff of unsuccessful half-hour syndie properties, inherited from the previous Harold Hackett management. The writeoff for the year was $442,081. Official had a tough go in the market place with its first runners "Police Station" and "What Are the Odds," "International Detective" shook down as only a fair entry.

The annual statement to stockholders broke dow a financial statement, comparing the profit and losses under old and new management. (New management introced th shorties, according to the statement). For the six months ended June 30, 1960, profits were put at $186,507, compared to a loss of $877,537 for the six months ended Dec. 31, 1959.

Prexy Reed said that all of the firm's shorties, roduced from newsreel librari , "ar highly profitable." He wound up by stating that "we expect 1961 to be a very satisfactory year."

Official will stay out of the first-run half-hour traditional syndie field at this time. Outfit, though, will have network entries for the new season, via tieups ith established producers on pilots.

'JACKPOT GOLF' AS NEW CHI ENTRY

Chicago, Nov. 1.

Public relations firm of Cooper, Burns & Golin—which last year got its feet wet in tv syndication with baseball from the Cuban Leagues, a project sabotaged this year by Fidel Castro & Co.—has produced a pilot for a new syndie series in half-hour format, "Jackpot Golf."

Instead of actual matches on the links, competition will be a sort of golf obstacle course, with top pros matching their basic skills (driving, putting, etc.) for a purse of $5,000 or more, per episode. Arnold Palmer and Art Wall competed in the pilot, with Jack Brickhouse calling the shots. John Rohrs & Associates will handle syndie sales.

Executive producer of the series, Max Cooper, had been associated in the past with Peter De Met and Walter Schwimmer in "Championship Bowling" and "All-Star Golf."

CNP's Chi Expansion

Chicago, Nov. 1.

California National Productions has added two regional salesmen to the central division staff, a personnel move which represents major expansion in this territory by th NBC-TV film sales arm. Both will report to Edward Montanus, manager of the CNP central division.

Marshall E. Ormond, formerly with Kaiser Aluminum in Chi, will base in Minneapolis and cover the North Central states. Thomas P. Miles, previously with Ziv in Cincy and TPA in New York, will headquarter in Kansas City and cover Kansas, Nebraska and Oklahoma.

TV SHORTS REAP TALL COIN

Next Year's Samples

For all the early season aspects, Hollywood's telefilm producers are already out pitching their "new fall lines" for next year. Intensity of the meetings at the network and agency level is picking up, with most of the program boys spending much of their time on pitches for shows for next year.

At CBS-TV, for example, Desi Arnaz blew into town last week, accompanied by Don Sharpe and Cy Howard, for a pitch on hi new shows to prexy Jim Aubrey and program veep Oscar Katz. Tom McDermott of Four Star is in, primarily for meetings on current shows but also to give out ith what's coming up next season. Screen Gems' Bill Dozier was in till last week for home-office meets—he wasn't selling, but Gotham-based sales vp. John Mitchell is and has already closed some coproduction deals.

William Morris toppers are already ieeting with the webs with a flock of new properties out of Four Star and other clients and have met with the webs. Metro-TV's sales topper, John Burns, has also been out aking the pitch around the networks. And that's mall sampling.

'xcept in a few cases, no deals have been made. Pitches have been made on the basis of an idea, an outline or complete pilot scripts. No pilots actually in the hopper yet, though Screen Gems will launch a pair within the next week or so.

Metro TV Near $3,000,000 Deal On Sale of Pre-'48s in Australia

Loew's is sitting on the biggest foreign single deal to date—mounting to nearly $3,000,000 for the -'48 library in Australia.

Negotiations were conducted by Richard Harper, Metr TV's syndicatio. sales manager, who recently ed from a three-week Far Eastern tr While in Austr, he secured bids for the pre-'48's from he two commercial program groups and the government operated network. At this point, 's not known which of the three contending parties will win out. Bids currently being weighed.

Metro TV has yet to move in the foreign market with its pre-'48 features. What has held it back was the fear of exhibitor reprisals and hurting theatrical boxoffices overseas.

Harper, though, sure that Metro TV will close an Australian deal very shortly, as rec mmended by him to top management. In Australia, every company but 20th-Fox, he points out, has sold pix to tv. He mentioned that MCA TV has sold the Paramount pix, apparently getting special dispensation to make the deal. MCA TV-Paramount deal provides for the delay until 1962 in selling the pix abroad. Along with 20th-Fox, Metro, too, has been the exception in the selling to tv area. But, according to Harper, Metro TV should be making its pix-to-tv deal shortly in Australia.

Closing of the deal also would open the door to other foreign markets on the Metro pre-'48's, Harper adds.

ITC in Jan. Bow With 1st Runner

Independent Television Corp. will have a first-runner for th syndie mart comes January. Property be either an off-network entry or a made syndication series.

Screen Gems still hasn't decided as yet whether it will into another first-runner before the year is out. SG now is scouting the regional and local sponsor field to sound out the direct-to-advertiser sales field. If enough deals are forseen in the direct-to-sponsor category, SG will move with a January release.

Ziv-UA currently is out selling its new first-runner "Miami Undercover," MCA-TV, which failed to come out with a new syndie entry for the fall season, is expected to come through with a property for January, perhaps in the off-network category. MCA-TV, incidentally, released the off-network "M Squad" this season.

Time still is too early to tell how the other syndie houses will act for the January period.

Hankoff in SG Exit

George Hankoff, vet account exec at Screen Gems resigned his post in national sales department.

Hankoff understood to be in ne tiations with a number of other ssible associations. Bowout came in the midst of some changes in the department, headed by v.p. John Mitchell. Henry White resigned as national sales director, under Mitchell. His spot was filled by Jack Sobel, formerly with General Artists Corp.

Hankoff had been in national sales five years, moving over fr m SG's syndie division.

'King of Seas' As Brit. ITC Entry; Trend to 60 Mins.

London, Nov. 1.

An hour vidfilm series based on the life of Sir Francis Drake, titled "King of the Seas," is planned by Incorporated Television Co., the sister firm of Independent Tele- Corp. of U.S. Both outfits wned by Associated Television of Britai

Programming trend in England is felt to be definitely towards the hour shows and the demand for children series here is big. On the sponsor end, too, in Britain the second largest advertisers are the candy manufacturers. It's also felt here that there has been a sharp decline in the umber of U.S. vidfilm series keyed to kids, judging from the American filmed material being pitched.

ITC also has just completed an hour vidfilm show, titled "Ghost Squad." Another project just finished is a half-hour series, titled "Riviera," starring Charles Drake, an American actor who has appeared in the "Robert Montgomery" series. Show was filmed on location on the French Riviera.

It's understood here that Herbert Leonard, associated with Screen Gems, also plans to do a series with the Riviera as its locale. The French playland too has been used as the backdrop for Metro TV's "Harry's Girls," a property of Jay Alan Ler

Shulton Buys Pilot

Shulton, Inc., toiletries outfit, will sponsor a series of five half-hour vidfilms on WPIX, N.Y., in conjunction with the holidays. Episodes had been pilots which never made it as series.

Initial telecast, "The Wonderful World of Little Julius," starring Eddie Hodges, supported by Gregory Ratoff and Sam Levene, will be Nov. 21 at 9:30 p.m.

O.F. BIZ SPARKS QUICKIES TREND

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

Television shorts, not so long ago greeted with a "what that?" attitude, enjoying a robust ride today. The shorts range from a one-minute program package upwards. Contents include history, sports, comedies, cartoons, et al.

Marketing of shorties has pulled Official Films out of the red, for the first time in several years. (See separate story). Wind of Official's success has probably gotten around, for there are program quickies on the drawing boards coast to coast.

In the midst of this offbeat trend, some words of caution are in order. Already, the competition is described as "tough." An under produced shortie will get the brush both on the agency and station levels. A number of unacceptabl quickies in pilot form are going begging. In brief, it's the pro quickies that are getting the whirl.

The five-minute cartoon cliff hangers are not by any means. They've been around for quite me time, altho gh currently more of that variety is available and being planned.

The new shorties are best exemplified by the properties of Official Films, pioneers in the field. There's "Almanac," a five-minute item, keyed to anni dates, Pearl Harbor, D Day, etc. Footage was culled fr m Hearst Metrotone News, with Richard B. Morros producing. There are 377 episodes vailable and since it's been put into syndication, the package has grossed about $1,000,000, being sold in 97 markets.

Key to the newsreel shorties is the theme or "gimmick." Official also has "Greatest Headlines of History," five-minuters; and the one-minuter "Sportfolio," keyed to the climactic 40 seconds—the actual program content—of great sporting events. Film libraries of Pathe News, Columbia Pictures and other sources are utilized.

Each show is freshly produced, with new sound tracks, scripts and narrator. Stations have been buying them as spot carriers, throwing them in news slots, sign on and/or sign off periods, sports shows and all over their schedule. Some outlets have strung them together to fill in a 15-minute or half-hour show.

Because of national and regional sponsor interest, Official has two new quickies making the agency rounds, "Profile" five minuter, and "Do You Remember," a one-minute package. Two pilots of "Profile" consist of newsreel bios of Teddy Roosevelt and Will Rogers. "Do You Remember" is keyed to flashbacks of great and small events.

Morros, producer of "Almanac," is working on a kid series—this one on fresh film. The five-minuter, "Let's Talk About," concerns topics ranging from tugboats, to

HARDIE FRIEBERG'S SETUP; PACTS 'RIPLEY'

Hardie Frieberg, vet syndicator, has formed his own organization, with headquarters in N.Y., and inked a deal for his first property, "Ripley's Believe It Or Not."

Vidfilm series, described as "live action," as opposed to cartooning, will be a shortie—104 five-minute episodes. Joining Frieberg on th selling end are Owen Duffy, for the northeast; Ed Simmell, far west, and Bruce Collier, who will cover Texas and Oklahoma.

Series ill be produced by Sceptre Productions, Inc., principals of which are vets in motion picture special effects. Principals are Jack Rabin, Irving Block and Ray Kellogg.

Frieberg most recently had been sales exec at Bernard Schubert, Inc. Formerly he had been sales v.p. at Independent Television Corp., with a sales background at TPA and Ziv.

Shupert Out as Metro TV Topper; Weitman Status Still Up in Air

George Shupert has resigned as v.p. in charge of Metro TV, in the wake of rumbles of a major reorganizational move in the major's tv subsid.

John B. Burns, director of national sales, was elevated to the newly-created post of general sales manager. The Shupert spot has been left vacant, perhaps as an interim arrangement before the appointment of an overall tv topper.

Announcement of the reshuffle was made following a Coast meeting attended by Loew's prexy Joseph R. Vogel, Sol C. Siegel, v.p. in charge of MGM production, Robert O'Brien, v.p. and treasurer, Robert Weitman, v.p. in charge of tv production, Burns and Shupert. Shupert returned to N.Y. immediately following the meeting. At this point he said that he has no plans other than a vacation.

Reason for the Shupert resignation was given as "policy differences." Shupert, who had been Metro tv topper for about a year and a half, refused to elaborate. Metro TV, this season, only has two shows being networked, the half-hour "National Velvet," and the 60-minute "Islanders." For a studio of that dimension, the number of entries is small, no doubt a source of dissatisfaction with management.

Another sore spot was said to be the heavy monies laid out on Alan Jay Lerner's "Harry's Girls," shot on location on the Riviera. Three episodes of the series have been completed, reportedly coming in way over its production budget.

Exiting of Shupert also has triggered questions relating to the future status of tv production v.p. Weitman. There have been confirmed reports that MGM tried to lure Hugh Benson to the MGM tv production fold. Benson is assistant to Bill Orr, head of Warner Bros. tv operations. Benson, saying that he did receive the MGM-TV overture, said he preferred to stay put at WB.

Weitman joined Metro TV about six months ago, moving over from CBS-TV programming with v.p. stripes. There also had been recent reports that Metro tried to hire

Don Sharpe & Desi In Closer Biz Ties

While Desi Arnaz has made no effort yet to replace Martin Leeds, who resigned as exec v.p. of Desilu some six weeks ago, he has enlisted the aid of vet agent-packager Don Sharpe on an informal basis.

Sharpe, who is Arnaz' personal agent as well as a packager on his own ("Peter Gunn," in partnership with Blake Edwards, is his current entry), has been accompanying Arnaz on sales calls in New York and is helping out on the Hollywood end in matters of business affairs. It's not clear yet whether he'll be involved on any permanent basis.

Arnaz was in N.Y. for sales pitches last week, returning over the weekend to the Coast. Sharpe went back with him.

Can Screen Gems Bring Off 45-Min. Format on Drama?

Screen Gems has been di sing the possibility of having a dramatic series of 45 minutes in length with the three networks. The reception to the offbeat time span is described as "interesting, but the problems manifold."

SG's sales v.p. John Mitchell tacked off the reasons why he's suggesting the offbeat 45-minute series approach: For the drama series, most hour shows are too long terms of the delivered story material. Conversely, half-hour dramas are tough to write and give little room for development. The 45-minute form would strike a balance and creatively make a good deal of sense.

From the viewpoint of the sponsors, Mitchell went on, the 45-minute form would give them a sponsor identification stronger than they have in the half-hour or hour form. Forty-five form could permit only three advertisers buying 15-minute segments each. In terms of dollars that would be equivalent to alternate week sponsorship of a half-hour show, but with the 45-minuter advantage of weekly commercial exposure. The hour, in contrast, can accommodate six sponsors.

The 45-minuter also could be utilized in a competitive assault by one network against another in certain difficult time periods. It could be used to "straddle" the strong competitive program, as "Maverick" did to Ed Sullivan.

SG at this point isn't proposing specific properties for the 45-minuters, but is waiting for further reaction.

CBS Films production v.p. Robert Lewine also proposed a 45-minute format some months ago.

Some of the problems inherent in any switch of this sort is affil okay, new rate cards for affils and other attendant wrinkles.

Ziv-UA's New Deals On 'Miami Undercover'

Roster of deals have been closed on Ziv-UA's latest syndie entry, "Miami Undercover," led by buys in Los Angeles, Columbus and Houston.

In Los Angeles, KABC bought the skein. Household Finance and Burger Beer signed to sponsor the property on WBNS, Columbus; and Texas State Optical picked up the tab on KPRC, Houston. In Miami, WLBW picked it up.

Other stations signing include: KOA, Denver; WLWA, Atlanta; KTSM, El Paso; WAVY, Portsmouth; KDIX, Dickinson, N.D.; and KTVK, Phoenix.

General Toy Buys Holiday Features

General Toy, via Webb Associates, has bought a series of holiday feature specials on WCBS-TV, N.Y., culled from MCA TV's Paramount library, already bought by CBS' flagship.

The Thanksgiving and Christmas holiday specials include: "Tom Sawyer," to be telecast Nov. 19, from 4 to 5:30 p.m.; "Huckleberry Finn," Nov. 26, from 4 to 5:30 p.m.; and "Alice in Wonderland," Dec. 10, 3 to 4:30 p.m. Deal is one of the few with one sponsor picking up the tab on a feature.

'ICEMAN COMETH' AS NOV. 14 ENTRY

Eugene O'Neill's "The Iceman Cometh" has been slotted on WNTA-TV's, Newark-N.Y., "The Play of The Week," over a two-week period, starting Nov. 14.

Because of the retention of some of the language of the original drama and the mature nature of the drama, station has moved up the broadcast time of the dramatic showcase from 8:30 p.m. to 10:30 p.m., The Sunday performance will be at 10 p.m.

Brooks Atkinson, critic-at-large for the New York Times and dean of legit critics, will deliver the introductory remarks. The four-hour vidtaped drama will be televised in two two-hour segments with Part 1 scheduled for the week of Nov. 14 and the concluding part the following week starting Nov. 21.

Most homes watch ABC-TV most of the time:

In the 24 major markets where all three networks have facilities—the markets where people can really express their preferences—ABC-TV is the number one network, week after week! Moreover, as these current Nielsen Reports show, ABC has a dominant lead 4 nights a week. And ABC-TV was number one in 21 half hours for each of two consecutive weeks. If you have something to say in these markets, doesn't it make more sense to say it on ABC-TV?

JOHN BROWN'S RAID

Producer Robert Alan Aurthur, having delivered a successful all-tape remote job in last season's "The American" on NBC-TV made in Arizona, tried to duplicate the achievement by taking a tape crew to Harper's Ferry to recreate in "John Brown's Raid" the story of the abolitionist's abortive war on slavery. As shown on NBC last Tuesday night (25) as a Purex one-hour special, it was a mistake.

There are some shows, requiring a dimension and a scope toward achieving a reality, that are better left for filming. This, certainly, was one of them. Director Sidney Lumet, more than an able craftsman, tried to maneuver things into some semblance of that needed reality, but it was a lost cause from the start. Little enough drama emerged from the hour outing (and one couldn't help wondering why this continuing concentration on John Brown as a subject of presentation when the end result proved little more than the rantings of a religious fanatic?), for it was as though everybody concerned was briefed on the premise: "Forget about the drama, it's the tape job that counts." At least that's the way it played.

One got a glimpse of Harper's Ferry restored to its original condition, but as the assorted performers, topped by James Mason as the fanatic abolitionist, moved through their ungainly chores in staging their raid and seizing the U.S. Armory and arsenal, it came out blurred and a lot less than life size—as though it was being viewed through the wrong end of a telescope. Most of all, it lacked believability.

Portraying the raid itself is but a small segment in the overall role of John Brown in the abolition movement. If the raid as such, or the mock battle which appears child's play in comparison with today's warfare, justified being done on tv, it certainly had no relationship to the bigger issue of slavery and the Civil War. This might have been better exemplified either in the trial or the hanging. Only a glimpse of this was revealed in his final statement. Rose.

This new NBC animated kidvid series is a tough contender for moppet attention if noise and fast action really count.

A large collection of fast and loud-talking characters zip pell mell through storylines that sometimes get blurred by the frenetic activity.

Show has three segments with King Leonardo, a cross-eyed lion, primarily featured. He and sidekick Odie Colognie (a skunk) watch tv in the castle, which provides segue for two other segs with continuing characters. One is "The Hunter," a hound in the vogue of Huckleberry, but far short of the appeal of Screen Gems' best cartoon friend. Third seg is listed as "Tooter Turtle," but in show caught (Saturday, 29) it concerned a diminutive human character who derrived supernatural strength through wearing a cap woven of Sampson's hair.

Voicing was good, if often noisy. Production was technically top-notch. Characters would seem to ha a potential as yet not achieved in the writing. Even for the pliable kid aud, they need more warmth and wit. Hippest to date is a beatnik rat in the Leonardo series (which, incidentally, was a cliffhanger with stories in segments covering two weeks).

There are some familiar voices behind the characters: Kenny Delmar (Senator Claghorn), Sandy Becker and Allen Swift (New York kid show emcees), and actors Jackson Beck and Ben Stone. Bill.

AMERICAN MACHINE & FOUNDRY
CBS-TV (film)

(Cunningham & Walsh)

CBS-TV's public affairs department mounted one of the most fascinating hours of television in the first of its "Tomorrow" specials, "The Thinking Machine." But for all its intriguing qualiti this study of the progress and potential of the digital computer was also one of the most frustrating hours in a long time.

Producer-writer Thomas H. Wolf's detailed accounting of the capabilities of the computer, of their potential for the future, of the question as to whether they can "think" in the manner in which human thought functions, all made for provocative and interesting viewing. And the examples used to illustrate the functions of the computer and its similarities to the human nervous system were challenging viewing, a series of puzzles for the viewer to solve.

The show, in fact, had everything but the basic answer to the question: how do they work? How does the computer store and "remember" the coded information fed to it? How does it play a game of checkers, as shown on the program, or write a tv script, again demonstrated on the show? Wolf gave explanations of how a computer is programmed that were clear enough, but no real effort was made to explain the physical and electronic mechanics of the device, to show the actual process by which it stores memories electronically.

As a consequence, every illustration of the computer at work left the viewer confused—dazzled, it's true, by the virtuosity and versatility of the machine—but confused over its basics. Perhaps the puzzlement of the viewer contributed to the show's fascinating quality, but it was an unsatisfied feeling nevertheless.

But with that one major limitation, "The Thinking Machine" was an excellent try. David Wayne, as interviewer and questioner, skillfully guided Massachusetts Institute of Technology (which is helping on the entire series) professor Jerome B. Wiesner into the various explanations of the computer's functions, with the stress on the question of its ability to "think." The answer to that one was solved, though the differences seemed to lie in the area of semantic, as much as speculation.

The illustrations of how the human nervous system and the brain are sometimes like the computer process, however, were intriguing. Experiments proving instinct in animals analagous to programming a computer in the hereditary sense and environmental experience in humans (also like programming a computer) were clear and effective.

MIT's TX-O computer supplied the tv w sterns, ably enacted by Jack Gilford and Heywood Hale Broun. Actually, the computer was programmed with a series of informational matter and a series of simple plot alternatives, and two of the resulting scripts acted out. In a third case, what happens when the computer breaks down was illustrated.

"The Thinkin Machine" was a novel, highly interesting way to present science on televisi Its one major fault, however, was in failing to start with the fundamental. Ironically, the "Tomorrow" series was initiated for CBS-TV by Irving Gitlin, si ce removed to the rival NBC cam Chan.

A Peabody Award winner last year, "Great Music" has been put into syndication this semester, and rightfully. The series is possibly the best of its kind on television. Almost strictly for buffs of symphonic music, its ratings will never be impressive, but there's probably nothing more potent in the syndie marts by which to create a class image with the thoroughbreds of a community.

WGN-TV has used good judgment in not watering down the longhair programs for wider acceptance in the other markets. Selections in the initialer (23) were Stravinsky's "Song of the Nightingale" and Mozart's Fortieth, indicating the standard, although a few upcoming outings earmarked for the light classics idioi

With maestro Fritz Reiner ordered into temporary retirement by his doctors, the series has lost some marquee value, since he was to have conducted several programs, including the first. Chi Symphony baton is now in the capable hands of associate conductor, Walter Hendl, who performed the first tele concert this season with inspiration. The orchestra was well-rehearsed, and the Chi Orchestral Assn. undoubtedly will keep it so, per its associate-producership of the series.

In the opener, the class tone w sustained in every department, from director Dick Doerschuk's camera slants to Ken Nordine's annotation and Franklyn MacCormack's soft pedal pitches for RCA Victor. Color makes an obvious contribution. Use of etchings and prints before selections, to somewhat recreate the flavor of the times i which the works originated, was a good touch and somewhat relieved the constant focussing on the musicians. Les.

MAIGRET
With Rupert Davies, Ewen Solon, Ilelen Shingler, Freda Jackson, April Olrich, Thomas Gallagher, Aubrey Woods, Maria Andipa, Neville Jason, Leonard Graham, Michael Hitchman, Ernst Ulman, Peter Grisewood, Joan Young, Linda Castle, Stan Simmonds
Executive Producer-Director: Andrew Osborn
Music: Ron Grainer
55 Mins., Mon., 8:45 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

So far as is possible to judge from this kickoff stanza, "Murder in Montmartre," BBC-TV has a world-conquering skein in the Maigret yarns which it is shooting in cahoots with Winwell Productions Ltd. About all that can be said against the initialer was, that its opening moments tended to be overemphatic and hammy and that the villain of the piece, when finally laid low, turned out to be someone who'd taken no part in the preceding action. For the rest, it was the authentic Georges Simenon stuff to the life.

Not the least of the assets was the appearance, personality and knowhow of Rupert Davies in the role of the famed Surete inspector. Served by a crisp, adult script, Davies was speedily established as a humane student of life and character as well as the science of criminology. Further, he's got a believable domestic background and real relationships with his associates. Much of the credit for getting this across must, of course, also go to executive producer and director Andrew Osborn, who has additionally done handsomely by the rich assortment of subsidiary characters and secured—without resort to any phoney accents—a thoroughgoing Paris-steeped atmosphere.

The complex plot of "Murder in Montmartre," which didn't baffle thanks to the firstrate dovetailing and economical dialog, had Maigret being tipped by a nightclub stripper that "a countess" was about to be killed. Maigret listened but took no great note until the stripper was herself murdered, with "a countess" soon joining the corpse parade. The action moved around Paris, in and out of a dingy dive and Maigret's office, upstairs and downstairs, and fast, till the cops cornered the guilty one in an exciting climax prefaced by a tense buildup. Apropos the villain being someone previously unintroduced, this wasn't such a letdown as might be assumed, thanks to the gripping nature of the preceding going-on.

Alongside Davies in the key role was Ewen Solon as his aide, Lucas, and the two worked together as if they'd been associates for years.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Bell Telephone Hour

"The Bell Telephone Hour" rang up a sing-America fest on its hour-long musicale Friday (28) with a buoyancy and bounce that made it a lively presentation for viewing and listening. Henry Jaffe Assoc., which produced the show, and Barry Wood, the exec producer, rounded up a topflight cast and had them go through an American songbag that developed into a delightful earful.

The show was exuberantly hosted by Robert Preston, who used a lot of his "Music Man" character to get the U.S. musical message across. His pitch was right and winning and he was especially effective when the show went into an oldtim paign segment and he sung out about keeping cool with Coolidge.

Mahalia Jackson, Dorothy Collins and Jo Stafford were others whose contributions made the hour shine brightly. As usual in the Bell series, Donald Voorhees kept the orch in tune-top shape. Gros.

The Play of the Week

A loosely written play dealing with a Negro family in New York is being rendered this session by "The Play of th Week," WNTA-TV, Newark-N.Y. That it is less than a complete success is not as important as the fact that "Seven Times Monday" by Ernest Pendrell breaks with a virtual "lily white" drama tradition on the tv medium.

In the tradition of "Marty," the Pendrell play explores the lives and feelings of little people. In that exploration, many moments of sentiment nd heart warming situations are projected. Playwright Pendrell, though, in "Seven Times Monday," fails at times to articulate problems posed. Some of the plot devices are obvious. Some motivations of people remain unclear, buried in high-flown flowery language.

Treating Negroes as th did, just as ordinary peopl is commendable. But Negroes have special problems in N.Y. and elsewhere because of white prejudi When, in the play, the lead character talks of his need for respect without the subject of existing prejudices coming up, or when the apartment hunting problem comes up without reference to racial barriers, it is mystifying to the ' wer. Perhaps the author was trying to show Negroes, divorced from the racial angle, just as all people, and thereby making them m re real and the ejudices more unjustified. But in terms of drama, the method chosen by the author is mystifying.

Ossie Davis, as the lead, was excellent. He rendered a fine sitive portrayal of a head mechanic dreaming of becoming a cop in order to win respect. Ruby Dee was soft and loving with occasional temper flareups, as his wife. Earl Sydner as the dreaming father dileneated a fine portrayal. Others in the cast were commendable.

Play, despite its weakness, is memorabi for few scenes, among them a Negro as the head mechanic, bossing, with heart and aptitude, a group of white and Negro workingmen; white girl, in thankful appreciation, ecki a Negro on the cheek; Negro treated with joshing respect by his colleagues, as if he were just another citizen.

"Play of the Week," incidentally, is one of the few drama vehi dealing with the color questi Last season there was Langston Hughes' "Simply Heavenly," an outing. Incidentally, which has not been picked up in southern cities where stations are telecasting "Play of the Week." Horo.

Walter Winchell Show

Paul Coates pulled no punches in his interview with May Britt who was equally forthright in recognizing she may have to make a choice between her career and Sammy Davis Jr.; that, presumably, because "I'm Nordic-looking—you know, Scandinavian—there is more do about this intermarriage," she said, when Coates compared it to Pearl Bailey and Harry Belafonte who, have married interracially. (He made no mention of Lena Horne.)

For a third week fellow-columnists spelled the ailing Walter Winchell, still out with an abscessed tooth, but announced as due back next Sunday. Hy Gardner did a split-screen telephone interview with Eddie Fisher in London, long a favorite technique, and Fisher, too, detailed out that a lingering low-grade (100-degree) temperature, which has baffled London medicos vis-a-vis his wife, Elizabeth Taylor, has caused delay in starting film production of "Cleopatra." If righteously indignant about the exaggerated "103 temperature," he didn't express himself in a manner to win friends and influence newspaper people whom he chided unsubtly for "not leaving us alone and scaring both Liz's parents and my parents" who, understandably, took press reports of her "serious" illness too literally.

Unfortunately Sheilah Graham's prepared chitchat (from Hollywood) opened with a Liz Taylor item, directly on the heels of the Gardner bit. (He also did a split-screen interview with Maria Callas' mother, who has been his guest before on Gardner's own local show, but never nationally.) However, Miss Graham properly stressed "Cleopatra" is Miss Taylor's starrer, or else; she also mentioned her possible suit against th Mirisches (not by name) for switching "Irma La Douce" over to Shirley MacLaine. Local ABC newscasters rounded out a good half-hour and, ' WW wants to be spelled for reasons of health or vacation, this seems to be a very workable format. Somewhat nonsequitor, however, is th Winchellian telegraph-key bit while Don Gardiner is doing the straight news; that's a radio-tv gimmick which should be reserved for th original cast, no road companies. Abel.

Shirley Temple Show

Considering the production effort, Shirley Temple's NBC-TV Sunday hour (30) was one of th least satisfying of the well-intentional kidviders. Adaptation of Mark Twain's "Prince and the Pauper" was a dull and heartless affair totally lacking any of th original's magic.

Producer-director William Asher to make several dramatic alterations in the Tw classi about a 16th century juve delinquent and English rince who switch identities. The alterations were probably more of a detraction than addition.

Child actor Peter Lazer in the dual role of prince and pauper, projected little appeal either way the unjustified self-assurance and ext vertism of the kids on these outings is one of the prime shortcomings). Gig Young as Miles Hando the irate who teams with the displaced prince, was languid when he should have been swashbuckling. Supporting players all had a tendency to overplay it as though they were trying to get across to two-year-olds.

It's hard to believe that Miss Temple's hostess bits of wide-eyed credulity communicate to young- They sure miss with adults. Bill.

The Witness

A solid urtroom" drama punched at the outlines of the late hood, Benjamin (Bugsy) Siegel, and before the hour of "The Witness" ended, the outlines merged into an absorbing portrayal of rackets and racketeering.

Thursday's (27) outing was th first for producer Nick Mayo, who replaced Murray Susskind. It also marked a switch for the questioning panel, with only one member of the panel a real-life lawyer. Prior to Thursday's outing all 11 members of the h aring panel had been legal pros.

Whether the panel is composed of real-life lawyers or actors is an incidental item, though. The Bugsy Siegel outing indicated w that this Talent Associates vehicle is worth retai ing. Show, slotted for a 7:30 p.m. start, when the kiddies are plentiful and the set count low, has been having its rating problems at CBS-TV. A better time period certainly would help—and salvage a fresh format.

Quotes around "courtroom" used to underline the special sense, for "The Witness" is unlike any court room, or governmental hearing, in details. Liberties are taken

A DATE WITH DEBBIE
With Debbie Reynolds, Carl Reiner, Charles Ruggles, Walter Brennan, Carleton Carpenter, "Cannonball" Adderley

Impressive as the credits were, and expensive as the production looked, "A Date With Debbie" was not much fun. Certainly it wasn't the special occasion ABC-TV and Revlon had hoped Debbie Reynolds' first major tv appearance would be. Lavishness is still no substitute for inspiration, and dull material is a bore no matter who it's written for.

The show seemed to have no other objective than to prove that Miss Reynolds can do everything—ing, dance, act and play comedy. It made its point, but not very entertainingly. Carl Reiner and Joe Stein, who worked up the script, provided only commonplace skits, unnatural dialog, and all too few funny lines. As for Miss Reynolds, she was quite a charmer in her adult guise, but as she resurrected her whilom role as a fresh-faced teenager she grew saccharine, and her versatility became something more like precocity.

Her strongest offerings were the more mature ones, and her weakest those harkening back to her teenage career. Early in the show she scored with satirical impressions of Zsa Zsa Gabor, Anna Magnani and Brigitte Bardot; but the framework—a spoof of Ed Murrow's "Small World," with Carl Reiner playing Murrow—was hackneyed, and it soiled her achievement. Her songs went well, in the main, but a dance routine to "Cannonball" Adderley's jazz had no sense of spontaneity and was noticeably poorly rehearsed.

An episode with her two motion picture "grandfathers," Charlie Ruggles and Walter Brennan, was a particular low point (chiefly from the poverty of the script lines); and her climactic sketch, an elocutionary monolog on a girl's first date, was overly long and downright childish. For a finale she and Carleton Carpenter reprised a song they did together in pictures, in their teens.

There's little point in assessing the contributions of the guest performers, since they were all conmined to minor service and virtually wasted. It was Miss Reynolds' hour entirely and, unfortunately, not a very rewarding one.

AN AMERICAN ALBUM

PARTICIPATING
WBZ-TV, Boston (film, tape)

Westinghouse Broadcasting got such fave reaction to its Mike Wallace helmed "Close Up U.S.A." short (average 6 mins.) telecasts, it decided to combo these recent reports into a best-of-Wallace, hour-long special for its five tv outlets, and other stations. Kicked off at its Hub property, WBZ-TV, it was indeed the best-of-Wallace, with the noted interrogater-commentator at his probing finest as he interviewed Americans from all walks of life on their election year hopes and fears.

Excerpts from his 9,000-mile cross-country auto junket, with cameraman Don Volkman and WBC newsman Sid Davis, included interviews with Oregon lumberjacks, Pittsburgh steel workers, Indiana farmers and Roswell Garst, the Iowan who hosted Khrushchev last year. One powerful segment found Wallace interviewing three generations of a Negro family in Little Rock—all, interestingly enough, with different views on the segragation issue. Right behind this one came an interview with Arkansas Governor Faubus.

As a pictorial album of people and places, this documentary proved to be a timely, fascinating stanza of Americana, with Wallace providing updated and eloquently simple commentary on his subject matter. Volkman's skill at filming and editing was everywhere evident. Despite the differences in geographic location and personal circumstances, the viewer was left with the strong impression that all Americans have the same areas of concern this fall, and know the election issues clearly—even if they aren't too enthused over either presidential candidate. Guy.

Bud Benjamin and his associate producer Ike Kleinerman began their newest season of "The Twentieth Century" on CBS-TV by installing a portable microphone in the shoulder padding of Sam Huff, middle line backer for the professional football Giants of N.Y. The bruising outcome was likely to have been enough to scare the stars of Normal and East Turtleswitch U. into not accepting those pro bi Huff loves the game, he exp! ined, but he also admitted professional football ranks are "no place f nice guys," and, in a sense, out this caution by adding, ways feel good when I hit somebody." And hit he did, as the "Century" cameras and the miniature mike followed the literally bone crushing quality of scrimmage and game.

Benjamin & Co. took a cynical view of professional football. The camerawork stressed the mayhem, not the strategy of the game. Perhaps that's why giant defenseman Huff, from a West Virginia mining town, was selected as protagonist for the half-hour. The script and longtime "Century" anchorman, Walter Cronkite, provided sharp insight into a game that they considered essentially a business; they viewed the weekly paycheck as the greatest "teacher" in professional football.

Program showed other teachers, however: the various line and backfield, defensive and offensive coaches to big boss Jim Lee Howell. All nice guys and all a little inarticulate, by other than football standards. It was an all-round good lesson and good lowdown on the workings of a jarring, exciting sport. Art.

TAKE A GOOD LOOK
With Ernie Kovacs, Edie Adams, Cesar Romero, Carl Reiner, Bobby Lauher, Peggy Connolly, guests
Producer: Milt Hoffman
Director: Joe Behar
30 Mins., Thurs., 10.30 p.m.
DUTCH MASTERS
ABC-TV, from H'wood (tape)

(Erwin, Wasey, Ruthrauff & Ryan)

Ernie Kovacs missed his cue, a turntable moved and revealed Miss Universe of 1960, first guest on the season's opener of "Take a Good Look." Kovacs remembered he had to explain the way the show works first, got up, pushed the turntable back, got lost backstage, and finally emerged to state:

"The way the game is played is this. We have a guest whose name has been in the newspapers. We show some clues and the panel has to guess the identity of the guest. (Pause.) Come to think of it, it's ridiculous. Imagine going into an agency and trying to sell a show on the basis of a format like that. They'd throw me out."

They sure would, and its surprising that Erwin, Wasey, Ruthrauff & Ryan didn't do just that to Irving Mansfield and Peter Arnell, who package the show. But that Kovacs-cigar relationship was just too good to pass up, and despite the indifferent quality and ratings of the first season, Kovacs sold a lot of Dutch Masters. So here he is again, and so's the show.

"Take a Good Look" is easily the most undisciplined, pointless panel show on the air. Besides, it looks as if it were taped off in a far corner of ABC's Hollywood studios, in quarantine, as it were. The game doesn't make much sense, the panel doesn't care much about it, and Kovacs foregoes all the formalities.

The latter elements are probably a saving grace, for if anyone were to take the format seriously, it would be dull to the nth degree. It's precisely the abandon of Kovacs and his panel which gives the show what occasional charm and humor it does possess. The other good but bewildering element are those way-out Kovacs sketches that furnish the clues for the panel. Bobby Lauher and Peggy Connolly furnish good comic assistance to Kovacs in these.

"Take a Good Look" doesn't warrant a second look, except for the fiercest Kovacs fan. But he does make that occasional accidental second look good deal less painful. Chan.

MONEY & THE NEXT PRESIDENT

60 Mins.: Thurs. (27), 8:30 p.m.
PHILIP MORRIS
CBS-TV (film)

(Leo Burnett)

In the second outing for the "CBS Reports" series, exec producer Fred W. Friendly made a foray into the thickets of money theory and emerged with a first-rate study of an underlying central issue in the current Presidential campaign. Even by public service show standards, this exploration of abstruse economics was a courageous decision reflecting high credit on the network and the bankrolling Philip Morris company.

The show, essentially, attempted to clarify such problems as inflation, the price of gold, international exchange and growth of the gross national product through an exchange of views between representatives of conservative and liberal economic thought. Through intersplicing of brief campaign arguments by Nixon and Kennedy as well as excerpts from their video debates, the stanza clearly, but not specifically implied that Richard M. Nixon is in the conservative camp while Kennedy leans towards the liberal ideology. The show, however, was scrupulously nonpartisan in the presentation of the respective arguments.

The most clearly defined issue involved the role of the national government in directing the rate of growth of the economy. In the camp favoring the initiative of private enterprise were Nixon, Secretary of the Treasury Robert B. Anderson and former White House economist Gabriel Hauge. The advocates of greater governmental control over the country's economic plant were Kennedy and economists John Kenneth Galbraith and Leon Keyserling. The show only permitted skeletonized statements, but the differences between the two camps were drawn sharply and lucidly in interviews conducted by members of the CBS news staff.

The attempt to explain the causes of inflation and the creation of new money were too sketchy for complete clarity but here the complexity of the subject resisted easy simplifications. The nature of the problems, however, were suggested and viewers of this show could take it from there. Similarly, the problems stemming from the recent flurry in the price of gold and America's current international trade imbalance required a fuller treatment. Film clips of gold bars moving in and out of Fort Knox and of Volkswagens being shipped into the U. S. were interesting, but did not illuminate the fundamental theoretical nature of the subject.

Overall, the show was highly instructive and doubly provocative because it was pegged to the Presidential campaign. As the reporter posing the problems, Howard K. Smith had a script that was admirable for a tone that was objective without being stuffy. Herm.

(Campbell-Ewald)

Timely and delightful was "Ghosts, Goblins and Kids," an hour-long Halloween salute aired Sunday (30) on NBC-TV's "Chevy Show." With Jay North, Angela Cartwright and Teddy Rooney topping a cast of 300 moppet performers, the layout was an ideal family show. There was little in the format, however, that could satisfy more sophisticated adult tastes.

But for kidviewers and those of their elders who weren't averse to recapturing a more pleasurable part of their childhood, this Henry Jaffe package was an exciting romp. Masters North and Rooney and little Miss Cartwright sparkled as emcees of the session which saw most of the large cast on a "trick or treat" foray.

Among the more memorable bits were Miss Cartwright's perky "I Enjoy Being a Girl" vocal, North's "I Wish I Was a Pirate" ditty and young Rooney's lusty campaign managing in a school election. A particularly cute touch was the warbling of three-year-old Charisse Allred. The flock of acts ranged from the trampolining of the Teagardins to the 80-piece Pasadena Boys' Club marching band.

Plugs were also in the Halloween motif—Chevrolet's also a treat, an announcer intoned. And as for the "election" sequence the winner, of course, was Chevrolet. On the whole this was fine entertainment for youngsters, but the comparatively late hour (9-10 p.m.) must have lost some of the potential moppet audience. Gilb.

By far the best rendering of a costume classic yet achieved on television was turned in over the weekend by Talent Associates with their two-part version of "The Scarlet Pimpernel," first of six "Family Classics" two-parters on CBS-TV.

Apart from the excellence of the physical production and these flawlessness of the performances, this "Pimpernel" had just the right touches and flavor to make an immensely enjoyable show. It was pure melodrama in the classic sense, and producer Robert Costello, director Marc Daniels and adapter George Baxt had the good sense to exploit rather than to minimize this flavoring of the Baroness Orczy original.

It was the straight flavor of the melodrama and the simplicity and even naivete of the characterizations, with excellent performances from the principals, that gave "Pimpernel" its charm. Zachary Scott, as the malevolent Chauvelin, was the perfect villain, cold and ruthless, sneering in his triumphs and furious in his defeats. Michael Rennie was the essence of 18th Century foppish vulgarity as Sir Percy and the picture of nonchalant derring-do in his alter ego as the Pimpernel. And Maureen O'Hara was the picture of feminine virtue and courage.

If this sounds like burlesque, it wasn't. Rather, it was simply a case of playing it by the book. And it worked, giving the viewer more than an occasional impulse to cheer the hero and hiss the villain. All of which made for a full two hours of fun viewing. The same flavor was carried into the lesser characterizations. William Shattner was the picture of upright young manhood as one of the Pimpernel's aides; Reginald Denny, Liam Redmond, Richard Easton and James O'Hara likewise were strong, upwright characters. Tim O'Connor, Eric Berry, Leonardo Cimino and the rest of the French revolutionaries were fine heavies. Suzanne Storrs was an attractive emigre rescued by Rennie and his men.

Daniels handled a large cast with ease and fluidity, and his show clicked off with the pace of a racehorse. The two-part structure of "Family Classics" would ordinarily be tough to take, but by doing the episodes on two successive nights, CBS gives it a cliffhanger flavor without the weeklong interval that so often causes the viewer to lose interest. Joan Fontaine was an excellent choice as hostess-recapitulator.

Breck Shampoos are in for half of the series; Procter & Gamble bought the other half of the opener only. But CBS should have no trouble filling up the remaining availabilities quickly, after this auspicious start. Chan.

AN HOUR WITH DANNY KAYE

Danny Kaye's commercial bow in television was a long, long time in coming (and it took a giant, well-heeled General Motors to turn the trick), all of which served to compound the disappointment in Sunday night's "An Hour With Danny Kaye" entry on CBS-TV. If one's willing to settle for about 15 minutes of the genuine Kaye hilarities, then it can be said that the comic brought it off. But with such high audience anticipation, and for the kind of longterm dough GM is shelling out for its one-a-year specials, everybody concerned was shortchanged. It's perhaps ironic that when Kaye, back in '56, "played a benefit" for UNICEF with an hour "See It Now" telecast, he communicated a far greater warmth and a more genuine display of his gifts than on his so-called commercial premiere.

Unfortunately most of Sunday night's display was on a johnny-one-note level of entertainment, and much of it seemed forced. There's no questioning Kaye's enormous gifts and versatility—they rate with the best of them in show biz. But when everything comes off as a variation on what had just been done, particularly when one is working with something less than inspired material, the bogdown is bound to show. And show it did.

The okay Kayeisms were good, in the sporadic moments when they came. His "Minnie the Moocher" as his closer was in the grand old Kaye tradition, down to the uproarious r-h-i-n-o-c-e-r-o-s baby talk and audience participation. His dueting and vocal gymnastics with Louis (Satchmo) Armstrong on "When The Saints Come Marching In" was Grade A Kaye, with the Satch in good form, too. Good, too, was the "Small World" satirization, with its five-Kayes-in-one cookery routine as he circuited Paris, London, Tokyo and Vienna, and in and out of the Ed Murrow slot, for perhaps the show's chef-d'oeuvre. Here was some delightful buffoonery.

But 15 or 20 minutes hardly constitutes an hour and although Kaye practically worked the entire hour, most of it solo, too often it failed to generate the needed spark. A flamenco routine with a line of Grecos and a pair of senoritas, with a travesty on the cape twirling and hoof stomping, was hardly up to the standards of the Kaye artistry or as a yok inducer. And ditto his psycho professor bit recounting his treatment of the whole Katzmeyer Band (70 sick trombones).

One could have wished for more of the Kaye tunes. Too, since this was his initial foray into the commercial sweepstakes, it would have not been amiss had a "new generation" of Kaye viewers been introduced to some of the more classic material of the past. For tv it would have been new.

The star's personal identification with the GM product is understandable, considering the long-term investiture involved. H's commercial with a group of kids in extolling the virtues of the new car lines was translated into a forgivable and sometimes charming bit of fantasia. But that hammy heart-to-heart let's-be-good-to-General Motors recap was a little too much out of the "gilding the lily" department.

It was tasteful, simple production with a fluid directorial assist from Norman Lewison.

It took a star of Kaye's calibre and a General Motors to break down the CBS resistance on tinting up its spectrum. On Kaye it looked good. Rose.

'Deputy's' SRO Status

"Deputy," NBC-TV's Saturday night half-hour western with Henry Fonda, is going SRO after Jan. 1. Bristol-Myers, on a 39-week deal, will then pick up the remaining weekly minute that has been floating around unsold, save for an occasional spot fill-in, since the start of the '60-'61 season.

Bristol-Myers' minute, costing the sponsor $34,000 (time and talent) weekly, will be mate for General Cigar's two-minutes a week in the 9 p.m. half-hour. Cigar deal, which began this fall, also goes until next September.

From sign on to sign off during the past 12 months the programs that came before our cameras attracted the biggest audiences in all television... as they have consistently done over the past five years... and as they show every promise of doing throughout this season.

VARIETY-ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top six network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top six syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week six different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top six shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting competitive programming in the particular slot, etc is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top six network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S.

VARIETY-ARB FEATURE CHART

VARIETY's weekly feature chart, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, covers one market. Each week the 10 top rated features for the one market will be listed.

Factors which would assist distributors, agencies, stations and advertisers in determining the effectiveness of a feature show in a specific market have been included in this VARIETY chart. Listed below is such pertinent information regarding features as their stars, release year, original production company and the present distributor included wherever possible along with the title. Attention should be paid to such factors as the time and day, the high and low ratings for the measured feature period and share of audience, since these factors reflect the effectiveness of the feature and audience composition, i.e., a late show at 11:15 p.m. would hardly have any children viewers, but its share of audience may reflect dominance in that time period. In the cities where stations sell their feature programming on a multi stripped basis utilizing the same theatrical throughout the week a total rating for the total number of showings for the week is given, the total rating not taking into account the duplicated homes factor. Barring unscheduled switches in titles the listed features for the particularly rated theatrical filmed show are as accurate as could be ascertained.

The CBS Radio Network announces for the '60s: an expanded program structure, new audience appeal and selling opportunities seven days a week—all starting November 28th.

Now CBS Radio becomes the first network to present ten minutes of news on the hour. This means more complete coverage by the top news team in broadcasting. In addition: Edward R. Murrow, Lowell Thomas, Allan Jackson, Howard K. Smith, Robert Trout, "World News Roundup," "World Tonight" on a regular schedule, plus the unrivaled coverage of special events by CBS News.

Ten more weekend sports programs are scheduled as ex-Yankee Jerry Coleman joins Phil Rizzuto and Pat Summerall in providing knowledgeable sports reporting all week long, 52 weeks a year. And important events—big Bowl games, the full New York Giants football season, horse racing's Triple Crown, the Masters Golf Tournament—are all on the CBS Radio Network.

ONLY

Only the CBS Radio Network offers advertisers such a range of selling opportunities, morning to night, seven days a week. From a single segment of Arthur Godfrey to a full-scale saturation campaign. '—But NBC Has Huntley-Brinkley'

William S. Paley and Frank Stanton, each in his own terms, has laid down the "or else" to the CBS news staffers: let not NBC out-rate and out-prestige CBS on the election returns handling. Both Paley and Stanton have been in frequent huddles in recent weeks because of the NBC shoot-ahead not alone during the political conventions of early summer but since then, with the NBC stations out-pointing CBS even on the Kennedy-Nixon debates, though all three webs carried them.

Behind the Paley-Stanton peeve is more than th immediate facts. There is their memory of the long span of ars during which CBS steadily ranked first as to news. This goes back to the war years and earlier; radio predating video.

Paley is said to have laid down the opi ion that too ma of the CBS news voices hav become just that—voices reading copy. The word "stuffy" is believed to have been bandied in the inner councils at 485 Madison.

Other angles of complaint have occurred simultaneously. Southern stations were reported a few months ago objecting to "too much integration news" in Doug Edwards aircasts. Management apparently seriously pondered some action to meet this objection only to be somewhat discomfitted when Edwards' ratings, for reasons not adequately analyzed, started to rise.

CBS is thought to be in a quandary about its news formulae, uncertain of the cause of falling behind NBC. "New faces," and the concomitant "new brooms" theory does not wholly satisfy as an explanation of NBC shooting ahead.

The X-factor CBS operations are the quite-large staff of news writers. These are unmentioned names. Nobody knows, generally speaking, what person or persons puts on paper the actual words later read by the famous "analysts," some of them in th $75,000-a-year-and-more class. If the stellar newscasters have slumped in popularity does that imply that the copy, as written by the unidentified writers on staff, is not as good as heretofor? Or has the passage of time and the accumulation of prestige and prosperity caused the voices to seem "pompous"? These are among the points reportedly aired in shop.

Paley particular is reported to believe that the CBS news ces have tended to become "preachy" at the expense of projecting the old illusion of intimacy and first-handedness, with NBC apparently moving into the breach.

Generally, here's how the trade sums it up: "NBC's got Huntley-Brinkley."

CBC in Fullscale Election Coverage

Ottawa, Nov. 1.

Coverage on both radio and television by the Canadian Broadcast- g Corp. of the U.S. election will approach in volume CBC's coverage of Canadian federal balloting. CBC will begin at 9 p.m. to carry election coverage from New York on both its webs, Dominion and Trans-Canada, and tv will tee at 9:30 p.m. to the full network. CBC staffers ill locate in NBC's election headquarters, studio 8-H, Rockefeller Plaza.

For CBC video announcer Bruce Marsh, national affairs reporter Norman DePoe, Washington correspondent James Minifie and Maclean's magazine editor Blair Fraser, will handle gab chores. CBC's tv web will be controlled from New York by L. E. Duffey, national tv news chief, and John Lant, producer, for CBC. Last 30 minutes CBC will comment and interpret, the st will come from NBC-TV.

CBC's AM coverage will feature anley Burke, the corporation's UN reporter; Knowlton Nash, freelance w.k. on CBC; Charles Lynch, news chief of the Southam News Bureau. Radio control from New York will be handled by Arnold Bruner, news supervisor, and Angus McLellan, producer, but the two networks will be controlled from Toronto by Charles H. Spraggett, editor in CBC's central newsroom. On radio, 20 minutes of each hour will be Canadian commentary.

BBC-TV's Morning-After Probing of U.S. Elections

London, Nov. 1.

BBC-TV is to start transmissions at 6:30 a.m. local time Nov. 9 for a program devoted to the previous day's U. S. election polling. Richard Dimbleby will introduce the lineup of news and views mounted by the talks, news and remote broadcasts departments, which will include a dispatch from Douglas Stuart in New York.

Last night (Mon., 31) the weekly "Panorama" included campaign reports by Robin Day and Ludovic Kennedy, who have been travelling across the U. S. with the candidates. Next Monday (7), the entire "Panorama" will consist of reports on the closing stages of the election from Washington, D C. Another BBC-TV effort on the campaign is skedded for Friday (4), this being a documentary filmed in America with Anthony de Lotbiniere as producer and giving profiles of Nixon and Kennedy.

The Tally Tariff

CBS-TV sold out Westinghouse Election night. NBC-TV picked up a segment from Look mag last week to make it eleven-twelfths of SRO and ABC-TV is maybe a third to a half sold.

But even if all three networks were completely sold out in terms of sponsors for their Election coverage on tv, they'd still lose money on the productions and the time consumed for them on Nov. 8. How much they'll lose, they haven't been able to ascertain yet.

WNEW's Station Link In Six Key States On Election Coverage

Extensive tie-ins with radio and tv stations in six key states will enable WNEW, the Metropolitan Broadcasting indie in N.Y., to tackle its Election Night coverage on a national basis on a scale unusual for an indie radio station.

Besides its local coverage—which involves stationing of WNEW reporters at seven key areas in Gotham for on-the-spot coverage—and the customary wire service reports, WNEW will exchange information with the other radio-tv outlets, giving them beeper reports on the race in N.Y. in return for the out-of-state spot reports.

Total of 14 stations are involved, including the six other Metropolitan outlets in Philadelphia, Cleveland, Sacramento, Washington, Peoria and Decatur. Others are WBZ and WHDH, Boston; WGN, Chicago; KSO, Des Moines; KBOX, Dallas; KTLN, Denver; WGBS, Miami; and KLAC, Los Angeles. Martin Weldon, WNEW news director, will serve as anchorman, assisted by Quentin Reynolds. Weldon heads the 15-man coverage staff.

Unusual aspect of the coverage will be the presence of television cameras in the radio newsroom. They will be from WNEW-TV, the sister station in N.Y., which in 1956 and 1958 originated its coverage at the N.Y. Herald Tribune but this year will move cameras int the radio newsroom to capture the hurly-burly of coverage. WNEW-TV will do 10-minute pickups from the station every half-hour (with two-minute wrapups every 15 minutes), but WNEW's radio coverage will be continuous from 8 p.m. to conclusion.

Nixon, Kennedy Refuse to Take The Fifth as Debate Wrangling, Countercharges Hit a New High

By LES CARPENTER

Washington, Nov. 1.

There won't be any fifth for Kennedy and Nixon. It became too bitter to swallow.

In fact, the charges and countercharges hurled back and forth between the camps of the two Presidential candidates over who was trying to do what to whom regarding a fifth "Great Debate" may well go down into the record as the most controversial single item in the 1960 campaign.

Even Republicans were admitting over the weekend, as hope for another "Great Debate" fizzled, that GOP candidate Richard M. Nixon had taken a public relations blow i the collapse of negotiations. At the same time, columnists and political writers were largely agreed that Democratic candidate John F. Kennedy attained a public relations advantage from the four "Great Debate" programs which were broadcast.

It is ironical then that Nixon, always regarded as one of the most skillful users of tv in national politics, would wind up in his long-awaited try for the Presidency with an opponent who seemingly is benefiting more from tv than Nixon is.

The plus factor has been assigned to Kennedy because he has shown up on tv better than he had been expected to. It had been assumed in advance that Nixon would greatly outclass him on the "Debates." Also, the face-to-face encounters on radio-tv hardly made Nixon better known, because virtually every voter was already familiar with him. But they did introduce Kennedy to countless voters, while Nixon, by participating, was swelling Kennedy's audience.

Throughout the arguments over terms and conditions of a fifth "Debate," Kennedy and his representatives remained in an affirmative position, while Nixon and his men sometime seemed to be splitting hairs and taking a position not easily understood, it was widely agreed by politicians in Washington salons over the weekend.

In the end, Nixon's tv rep. Fred Scribner Jr., said there couldn't be a fifth program unless Kennedy apologized for "bad faith" charges levelled against the Nixon men.

Kennedy refused through hi press secretary, Pierre Salinger, who let go another blast: "Mr. Nixon should apologize to the American people for his reluctance to participate in this debate. He's used every trick and device known to avoid it."

The question of whether the American voters wanted another debate program is certainly debatable, as is whether it would contribute any worthwhile new information. The fourth program had contained considerable rehashing of points made on earlier ones, even though the economic issue was never fully explored on any of them.

The political consideration is that Kennedy & Co. kept on the offensive throughout the fifth debate negotiations, loading newspaper columns with suggestions that Nixon wanted to avoid an additional debate program. The accuracy of such an accusation could be argued for days, with points to be made on both sides. But the fact is that the Kennedy group got the idea across in print, and it definitely didn't hurt their cause.

Scribner, in a telegram to Kennedy's tv expert, J. Leonard Reinsch, on leave from the Cox stations, accused the Kennedy forces of committing a triple violation of agreed procedures in the negotiations over the fifth. Scribner accused Kennedy himself of one violation by wiring Nixon "demanding a final answer" within 24 hours on debate arrangements.

Earlier breaches, Scribner declared, were when Reinsch telegraphed the radio and tv networks accusing Nixon of "bad faith" and when a Kennedy aide released details of the negotiations which were supposed to be kept secret.

Scribner said Kennedy and his helpers had been conducting "a scheme to bring about a termination of negotiations while at the same time attempting to place th responsibility on us."

Nixon's position on a fifth debate at various times included, among others, these demands: (1) the program be lengthened to two hours; (2) the subject matter be restricted only to a discussing of U.S. policy toward Cuba; and (3) the Vice Presidential nominee (Lodge and Johnson) appear on the program instead of Nixon and Kennedy and that they use the time making formal statements outlining their positions on issues, rather than debate issues.

Kennedy took these positions: (1) expansion to two hours was all right with him; (2) there were too many other issues involved in the campaign to spend one hour on Cuba alone; and (3) it's fine to have Lodge and Johnson on the program, but they should be in addition to Nixon and Kennedy and not a replacement for them.

The networks wanted something else. They wanted a debate in the Lincoln-Douglas tradition—which is what all the programs were supposed to have been in the first place.

'The Buck-Toothed One' . . Dems Yell 'Foul'

By BILL STEIF

San Francisco, Nov. 1.

Northern California Democrats are screaming "foul" over three 60-second tv spots for the Nixon-Lodge ticket, and on important Frisco station, Westinghouse's KPIX, has refused to play the spots.

Another Frisco station, KRON, owned by the Republican-oriented Chronicl has allowed only one of the spots on th .

Nevertheless, the spots are being played on nearly two dozen Northern California tv outlets, ranging from Fresno to Eureka, in what the Nixon-Lodge campaign agency, Whitaker & Baxter, calls a "medium saturation" $35,000 campaign.

And Clem Whitaker Jr., who runs the big agency his father and stepmother Leone Baxter) founded, says:

"These spots are the single most effective thing we've done in the cam I wish we had another $50,000 for super-saturation—and I wish the Republicans were playing them all over the country."

The spots, designed by Imagination, Inc., Frisco, all follow the same format. They each open with cartoon character "emcee" at a "Hometown Candidate Screening Committee" meeting, and the emcee then introduces "our next speaker." These are the caricatured speakers":

1) "Mr. Beatnik," who looks the complete public image of the Beat, and says, "Well, man, if I can drag myself to the polls, I'll vote for that New Frontier kid. Why man, I dig that cradle-to-the-grave security bit . . nothing to do but stay in your pad and listen to that ring-a-ding jazz all day while Uncle Whiskers pays for the rent and the wine. Cool, man, it's the craziest." Emcee breaks in to ask if the Beatnik doesn't "realize that all those New Frontier promises would just cost you and everybody else a lot more money in withholding tax?" and the Beatnik replies, "Withholding tax? Why man, you have to work to pay withholding tax, and only squares work!" Emcee then goes into pitch about "fellow squares," winds up pulling back curtain to reveal Nixon's photo and plugs Nixon "to protect our paychecks from needless government spending."

'Stay Out of the Kitchen'

2) "Mr. K," short, fat and bald and obviously Khrushchev, who replies to emcee's question about presidential forecast, "Well, I'll tell you one thing—we can't expect that Nixon and Lodge of yours to buy our line. Why Nixon shook his finger at me in that kitchen of yours in our world's fair . . ME, the greatest dictator since Genghis Khan. You'd never find Nixon saying I ought to be apologized to when I get mad." Emcee then says, "As Harry Truman used to say, if you can't stand the heat stay out of the kitchen" and goes into standard Nixon pitch.

3) "Smilin' Jack" (this spot is called "the buck-toothed one" by Frisco Democrats), who drags in saddle bags full of money, speaks with Back Bay inflection, says New Frontier is "where none of you little people will have to worry about how to spend your money—'cause the government will spend it for you . . you've all been living too high off the hog . . you've been starving your poor old Government . . it's time to tighten your belts and pay higher taxes to us superior people who'll be running that New Frontier. After all, if there's one thing I know about, it's how to spend money" (and he goes off-camera throwing money around). Then comes normal Nixon pitch.

Whitaker says that, except for newspaper cartoonists, "satire in the classic sense of American politics is a lost art." The idea of these spots, he says, is simply to apply "Herblock's or Newton Pratt's (Sacramento Bee) art to tv, to bring the cartoons to life." He says he had to overcome reluctance in some quarters of the Nixon campaign organization to use this attack, but says it is now proving very successful all over Northern California, and especially the Sacramento and San Joaquin Valleys.

Phil Lasky, Coast Westinghouse boss, couldn't see these spots at all and, according to Whitaker, "after a long argument admitted he might be censoring, but thought the comparison between newspapers and tv wasn't valid."

Harold See, general manager of KRON, nixed "the buck-toothed one" and "the Beatnik," but okayed the "Mr. K" spot.

Actually, the first place the spots were used was on KPIX, a week ago Sunday (23), just before and after a Frisco 49er pro football game, which, of course, had a maximum audience.

Whitaker says the spots weren't finished until the Friday (21) night before they were scheduled and adds that, though Lasky accused him of running in a couple of ringers, this wasn't the case. Lasky screened the spots the day after the football game and promptly tossed them off his channel.

Whitaker says he's also held out the "Smilin' Jack" spot most of the time because he hasn't enough money to saturate and feels this one is a trifle more invidious than the other two.

California Democrats are fit to be tied over the whole campaign, and their headquarters staff reports hundreds of phone calls protesting the posts. An upper-echelon Kennedy spokesman says:

"We consider this extremely low-level campaigning, conceived by the opposition ad agency in its zeal. We have rejected this same type of campaigning. We couldn't see any possible benefit in campaigning at this level and it certainly will backfire badly on Nixon and Lodge to indulge in this kind of childish viciousness."

Whitaker, however, is delighted at the sharp reaction of the opposition, and insists:

"We've hit 'em where they live."

example, having already gotten cancellation notice.)

One thing's for sure: there will be plenty of frantic jetting between N.Y. and the Coast in a desperate bid to mend program fences—to salvage whatever can be salvaged from a lot of wrong guesses.

For the moment the only balm they can extract is in playing the numbers game. As a talking point to their clients and as a possible means of saving their own hides, the agencies have more or less unofficially designated what constitutes a "passing grade" on the new crop of shows, even though they've abandoned any hope of delivering a solid hit. Here's how they figure it: If a show grabs off a 30% share of audience, or roughly one-third of the total viewing audience for a given half-hour or hour, they figure they're reasonably safe.

By the same token, if they can produce an 18 rating it isn't too disastrous and is something the average sponsor can live with. (Couple years back a 20 was considered the dividing line, but the three-network competition is considerably stiffer this season.) Passing mark on cost-per-thousand this semester is pegged at about $4. That's up from the approximate $2.80 of two years ago, but production costs being what they are these days, the agencies consider it a reasonable buy.

None of the foregoing has anything to do with qualitative programming, of which there is practically nothing (save for some of the items emerging from the networks' Public Affairs units.) Thus the "lament for a new tv season" must inevitably invite a reprise of what is already becoming a cliche—television is at a low, low ebb.

Unfortunately quality is what the advertiser is least concerned with. This is the "year of the Nielsen"—all that matters is the number of homes reached. Few are the sponsors today interested in programming for quality. If "formula tv" can grab off an audience, little else matters.

The days when the agency boys, and frequently on the sponsor level, stayed on top of scripts and exercised some measure of control on their shows, are now gone. (Some of them cop a plea and claim that the producers won't let them through the studio doors and thus their hands are tied.) As far as the networks are concerned, they're primarily interested (1) in getting circulation for the advertiser; (2) seeing that taste, violence and other code regulations are respected. Beyond that they have little to say.

But wherever the blame lies, the end result is that an exciting medium is going down the drain.

Collegiate Hoop Sked for ABC-TV

ABC-TV is expanding its sports schedule still further this winter. Network is going to do 10 weeks of college basketball beginning Saturday, Jan. 7. Last network to do collegiate hoop coverage was NBC-TV two seasons ago.

Since basketball doesn't come under the same centralization as college football, ABC-TV lined up its own hoop sked. It includes games by Kentucky, Dayton, North Carolina State, Bradley and N.Y.U. After the 10-week season, there'll be a few weeks before the start of pro baseball when ABC-TV might do some Saturday sports "specials."

There was talk of doing lacrosse as part of the sked, but word now is that the ABC-TV programmers have ruled that out.

On Dec. 10, ABC-TV has scheduled tentatively coverage of Pop Warner's Little League Football championship game.

Danny Kaye Setting Up TV Production Unit

Having made his tv debut over the weekend as a performer, Danny Kaye is now setting up shop in the medium as a producer as well. He and his producer-wife, Sylvia Fine, have organized Belmont Television to produce films for tv in which Kaye won't star. His Dena Pictures handles his own appearances such as his General Motors special Sunday (30).

Robert Forrest is exiting NBC's California National Productions to join Belmont as v.p. and exec producer. Dena veep Herbert Bonis will handle Belmont's business affairs and will act as production manager. Firm will announce product plans Nov. 15.

Roy Huggins to oversee production but Huggins chose to head up production at 20th-Fox. That Weitman attended the important Coast confab and remained in the fold may be of significance, indicating his future status with the company. Everything, though, may hinge on whom the company finally gets to replace Shupert.

Burns came over to MGM-TV shortly after the Shupert appointment.

Mex TV Moving On Network Link

Mexico City, Nov. 1.

Mexico is moving to make a television network operative withi a y Linkup of stations will begin undergoing tests early in 1961, according to present plans of Te evicentro engineers.

A top executive said network will be the most important in all Latin America, will simultaneously give homescreens all major remote control events, no matter where situated in the republic.

Programming of live shows from Televicentro studios will also go to all stations, whether they form part of the Emilio Azcarraga tv empire, or independents.

Engineers believe network coordination can be perfected before the end of 1961, with network mushrooming out via additions of new stations now in various stages of completion, or in permit negotiations. Among these facilities at Mazatlan, Acapulco, Jalapa, etc.

Mexican television engineers privately believe that the "television octopus" is destined to spread out rapidly within the next two to three years. Possibilities of a m r or less regular link with American networks for special events and spectaculars is not discounted either.

WMCA Editorial

of radio station WMCA, New York City, in broadcasting an editorial endorsement Oct. 27 of Sen. John Kennedy as a gratuity by the station.

"This appears to be a clear violation of Sec. 315 of the Federal Communications Act which guarantees equal time to political candidates. The act specifically states that radio stations h an obligation to provide reasonable opportunity for discussion of conflicting views on issues of public impor t The election of our next President is of paramount publi importance.

"We hereby request that you act immediately to secure equal time for a representative of Vice President Richard Nixon to offer his side of the issue. I also request that the station be required to give equal free time promotion to this appearance as was given to the station's e d i t o r i a l endorsement through frequent spot announcements prior to the editorial."

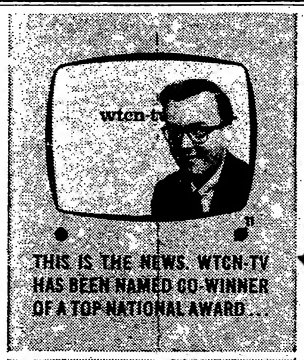
In replying telegrams sent to Morton, the FCC, and protesting New York State Republican leaders, WMCA made the following points:

1. Station had invited Nixon or Ambassador Lodge, his running mate, prior to the editorial broadcast, to appear on the air at any time convenient to them to comment on the editorial. Bid still open, although the station has yet to receive a reply to its invitation.

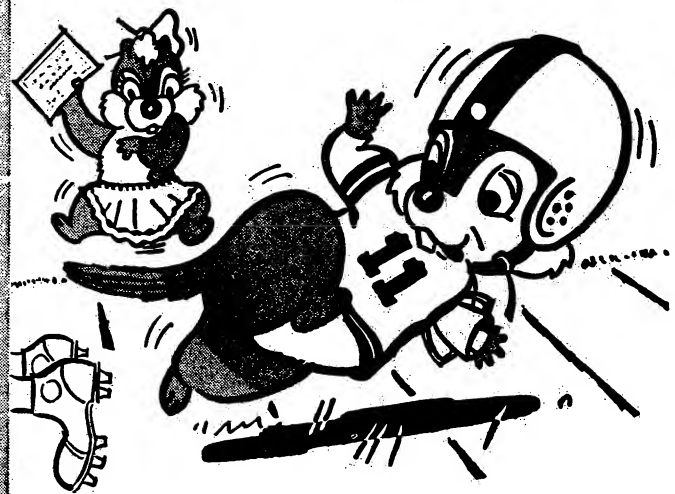
2. On Oct. 26, following the first editorial broadcast, the length of which was nine minutes and 26 seconds, WMCA "with appropriate editorial p r o m o t i o n announcements" had Louis Lefkowitz, New York State Attorney General, and Governor Nelson Rockefeller, the two ranking Republican leaders of the state, on the "Barry Gray Show," simultaneously, heard on WMCA and WNBY, Buffalo, another Straus station. (WNBY also carried the pro-Kennedy editorials). Both Rockefeller and Lefkowitz spoke at length on their reaction to the editorials.

On Oct. 28, Joseph Carlino, Republican speaker of the N. Y. State Assembly, was on the "Barry Gray Show." He also commented on the editorial.

Station charged the complaints to the FCC were based on "incorrect facts and assumptions." In its reply to the FCC, which had immediately asked for comments on the charges, WMCA stated "we believe we have gone to great lengths in order to provide fair and balanced treatment and that we have not merely complained with all statutes and regulations but exceeded requirements in serving the public interest."



"GOPHERS"
TIE IT UP!



WTCN-TV is rolling in "gopherland." Powering ahead. Gaining in the national rankings. Perhaps nothing points this up so eloquently as the recent RTNDA national award—shared equally by WTCN-TV with a local station that has been quite alone on its throne for years.

The odds are changing. Much of the smart money is going on the WTCN-TV "gophers" to win. Why? New team, new strategy, new impact in the Twin Cities market.

It's time to re-assess the relative strengths. Make sure you've got a winner in the important Twin Cities market. Get your money down on WTCN-TV while the odds are still in your favor.

Your Katz man will be glad to book you.

field for the quadrennial appointment. NBC has 1,000, it reports, and CBS indicates 900. It is reasonably certai , according to various sources, that besides the array of self-monitors in their Manhattan studios, each of the networks will have two spares parked in some to make sure that nothing exceptional done by its rivals escapes rival notice.

Having lost its studio space in the doomed Grand Central office building, CBS has already installed "Election Headquarters" in studio 65, located on West 26th Street and the web's largest studio in Manhattan.

The operation, under the direct supervision of producer Paul Levitan, will have 170 persons manning what goes on inside—which, according to Levitan, covers three basic matters: (1) computation and reporting of data; (2) forecasting (via the IBM thingamabob), and (3) field reporting—by a special force of 500 "weathervane" observers based at the precinct level to keep fresh information to flood studio 65.

ABC will house its weather eye on politics in TV-1, the big studio up on 66th Street, where Nixon and Kennedy met in their fourth tv debate. There'll be 300 newsmen, technicians, production specialists and secretaries in ving around inside. Aiding the Univac (CBS used it '56) will be pollster Louis Bean, and ABC will grab other material from its own field men, fro AP and from UPI, and use as a source on Nov. 8 the one which comes up with the news fastest. Don Coe will be in direct charge of this journalistic complex.

NBC's 3-Ply Operation

NBC has put the particulars in the hands of producer Reuven Frank, who has broken down tudio 8-H in Rockefeller Center into three-ply operation: (1) gathering information from the various sources; (2) posting the information, and (3) producing the picture so that the fruits of one and two ar satisfactorily communicated the viewers. Incidentally, Canadian viewers will lso get icture of the NBC operation (including, naturally, RCA's new computer) since Canadian Broadcasting Co. will have both men and equipment in 8-H.

The on-camera crew for CBS will have Walter Cronkite as its perennial anchorman, which means he'll feed th latest news as it comes in—even before it goes on the tote board, in some instances. Douglas Edwards will preside over the board tallying the returns from th six "key" states, and Edward R. Murr w and Eric Sevareid will provide interpretive remarks. David Schoenbrun was brought in from Paris to supply the foreign inter retation, and IBM 7090 will be handled by Howard K. Smith. (After it's fairly well decided who has won, these CBS vets ll convene at round-table o perform a post-mortem or near-post-mortem). Charles Von Freund will tail Sen. Kennedy and Paul Niven will follow Vice president Nixon.

ABC's frontline troops will conist of John Daly, in the anchor post, aided by Quincy Howe, Paul Harvey on the Senate race and Erwin Canham on the House race, with John Secondari giving the Gubenatorial lowdown. From remote locations, Don Goddard pollster Bean (Univac will be in Remington's own offices) and Julian Anthony will talk. Virgil Pinkley will cover Nixon and Edward P. Morgan will pursue Kennedy.

David Brinkley and Chet Huntley will serve as pivotal NBC men in the studio. The other insiders will be Sander Vanocur covering th east, Frank McGee enterpreting returns from the south, John Chancellor o.o.'ing the midwest and Merrill Mueller the west.

ABC-TV will open its coverage at 9 p.m. on Nov. 8, according to present plans. CBS-TV was to start at 9, but moved back the starting time to 8:30, thus matching the NBC-TV kickoff. However, NBC says that it's opening the wire for nything that might develop between 7 p.m., when Huntley and Brinkley finish their regular newscast, and 8:30 p.m.

Besides the tv men in each of the networks' N. Y. Election headquarters, there'll be plenty of people to make sure that radio listeners hear the latest quasi-Presidential gossip. Radio anchorman for CBS will be Robert Trout, for ABC Radio Bill Shadel, and for NBC Radio it'll be a group of reporters at anchor—Frank Bourgholtzer, Peter Hackes, Elmer Peterson and Martin Agronsky.

Some "important" incidentals: In the ABC "Election Night Headquarters" on 66th Street, there will be "roast beef, corn beef, ham and ham and cheese sandwiches, on a variety of different breads." ABC predicts that over 600 of them will be consumed on the evening of Nov. 8. And being fed into NBC's "Election Central" in 8-H will be 1,400,000 watts of continuing power, which according to the network, is three times more than has ever before been fed into any NBC-TV studio, 70 times more than is used to electrocute man.

ment of 60-minute specials for '61-'62, which may or may not be a clue to the turn NBC specials will take a season hence. Linkroum made a European trip last winter and when he returned he was interested resuscitating "WWW," but this time, with tape production available on the Continent and elsewhere abroad, with a truly world-wide flavor. The material is now being laid out by Linkroum and a cohort, Milt Myers. They'd like to do eight of them.

Besides the several 90-minute programs otherwise mentioned as being in the mill, NBC still has an item called "Divine Adventur ," which could make of the network's sound stages next season, but detailed work is apparently not yet being done for this series of bible dramas. "Adventures" have been in NBC's inventory for som time.

Don Hyatt's special projects unit reports to Levy's entertainment programming department, and his specials (which, not so incidentally, are selling well this season) also fall into the early preparation category. Hyatt is hard at work on a group of "series," from which many one and two-shot affairs can and probably will, be gleaned for next season. All the "series" aside (see separate story), Hyatt is preparing a script for a 60-minute onetime stab called "Glamor Girl," described as a view of woman from Theda Bara to Brigitte Bardot.

BOOROM JOINS MET

Warren J. Boorom has resigned as v.p. of Radio Advertising Bureau to joi Metropolitan Broadcasting Co. as director of advertising and promotion. In addition to his v.p. post at RAB, which he joined in 1954, Boorom was director of member service.

Prior to joining RAB, Boorom was ad-promotion director of WTOP-TV & AM, Washington, and was earlier with WWDC there.

With the Station Reps

Local radio personalities are better known in their bailiwicks than U. S. Senators.

So says the Radio Advertising Bureau, which made a series of surveys between July and October of 1960. Studies covered 3,959 adult men and women in four cities in four sections of the country—east coast, midwest, west coast and Pacific northwest.

While the results are good news to radio's promoters, RAB considers them "a matter of deep concern."

In three out of four of the areas, U. S. Senators scored well below the best-recognized local radio personality. The midwest was the only area where the politicos had the edge in identity. They were identified by 71.5% of the respondents compared to 67.7% who recognized the "best recognized" radio personality.

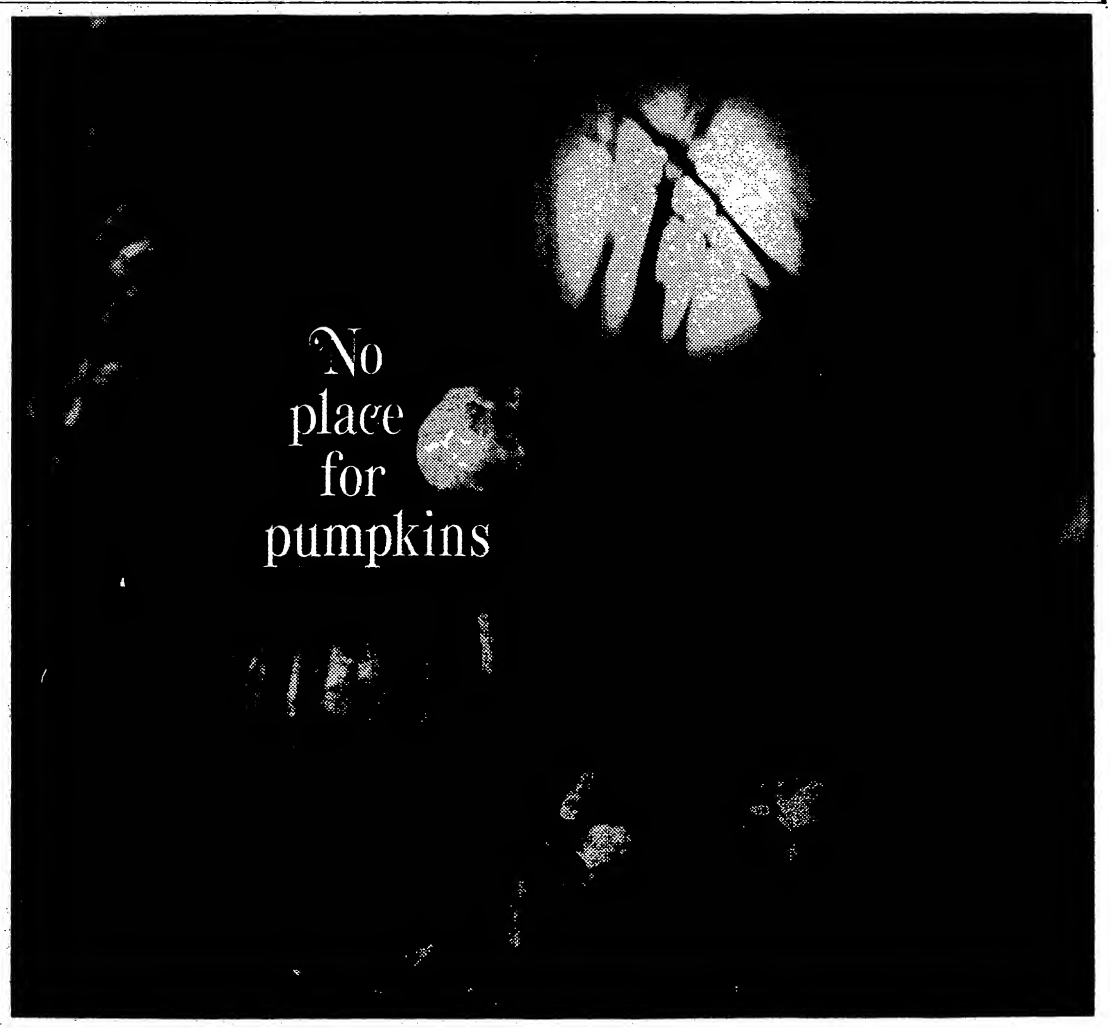
The other sections: East coast—Senators, 26.9%, radio man, 52.3%; west coast—Senators, 34.4%, radio man, 61.4%; Pacific northwest, Senators, 46.3%, radio man, 53.1%.

On the federal level, the politicians might as well be anonymous. Three Cabinet members, prominent in the news immediately preceding the study, scored way below the three best-recognized deejays in all four areas. Two of the cabinet men were recognized by slightly more than 15%, the third by 31%, while the deejays averaged from 52.3% at the top to 43.9% for the third best-recognized.

RAB prexy Kevin Sweeney says, "These facts, which make us proud of radio broadcasting's local personalities are also a matter of concern to us . . . This data confirms previous studies indicating the great strength of local radio personalities and the important influence they can have in moving goods.

"But when many more adults can recognize and identify correctly the names of radio personalities in the largest city of a state than can identify correctly the names of the U. S. Senators, every person interested in the democratic process should be concerned. When personalities who have been on the national scene for more than a decade score lower in recognition in major cities than radio personalities who have been on the air for only a few years on a single radio station, the concern deepens. Clearly, Americans cannot vote intelligently on major issues or candidates for offices if substantial percentages of the citizens cannot identify the names of the major protagonists when the names are placed before them."

Ottawa—Don Macdonald, director of information services for the Canadian Broadcasting Corp.'s Toronto area, upped to public relations officer for the same area. He is succeeded as info chief by Robert S. Bryden.



There plenty of sad little Cinderellas in television today . . . almost all of them commercials. It may be human nature to be carried away by the glamour and glitter of a network show, but don't get carried too far. . . . We at Ayer believe that the three minutes that sell the product should be among the most exciting and compelling of the program. In our book, the only profit vehicle is the coach and four. We have no place for pumpkins.

Helen Shingler put in a brief but effective appearance as Mme. Maigret, while others to stand out included Thomas Gallagher, Freda Jackson and Aubrey Woods. As the slain stripper, April Olrich overplayed somewhat, but mention of the role leads to the mention that there were some delightful sex references, both verbal and visual. Ervi.

A MOON FOR THE MISBEGOTTEN
With Nancy Wickwire, John Meillon, Colin Blakely, Graydon Gould
Producer: Naomi Capon
Writer: Eugene O'Neill
90 Mins.; Thurs., 8:30 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Not an especially apt choice for tv, Naomi Capon made a brave stab at Eugene O'Neill's "Moon for the Misbegotten" but couldn't entirely encompass the writer's powerful vein of highly-charged emotion. The facts of the story were skilfully presented, but the exaltation of the climax missed out.

O'Neill built up to a scene in which the wild, almost masculine Josie (Nancy Wickwire) had her night of chaste love with the dissolute Jim Tyrone (John Meillon). Although doomed to part, this was supposed to suggest that the fact of love itself was the important thing, and to hell with the consequences. Previously, Josie had been shown as a raucous and stormy female, quick with the rudery. Her transformation didn't convince, and this was largely the fault of the medium itself. Also, O'Neill's inflated dialog seemed pretty sham in its striving for lyrical effect.

Despite this, Nancy Wickwire, imported from the U. S. for the occasion, clicked strongly. Better in the earlier roustabout scenes with her scheming pa (Colin Blakely), she couldn't bridge the gap to spiritual tenderness. Probably no actress could.

With the easier chore of Jim Tyrone, John Meillon was first-class. He brought off his development from heavy-drinking to pathetic torment so that the character hung together and moved mightily. Colin Blakely, too, scored as the shifty parent.

Naomi Capon's production was confident, but seemed to be geared at too low a temperature for the fever of O'Neill's prose. Otta.

Foreign TV Followups

Play of the Week

For their stanza of Granada's "Play of the Week," the choice fell to "Tiger at the Gates," Christopher Fry's adaptation of Jean Giraudoux's French tale. It's a cogent argument about war-sickness, penned in 1935 but still relevant to the times. And it came with the accolade of stage success in London a few years back.

Story concerned the classic old wrangle over Helen of Troy (Carole Lesley). Hector (Keith Michell) was all for returning the wench. Tired of the fight, he was all for a bit of domesticity with his wife. But his compatriots were not with him, beguiled by Helen's charms, they were all for hanging on to her, however many lives she might cost.

The final argument was between Hector and his enemy Ulysses (Charles Graves), and it was a witty airing of the futilities of war. Giraudoux reduced Helen from the statuesque ship-launcher of legend to a vacuous, prattling blonde, not worth a pea-shooter fired in anger. And the irony was well conveyed in this production, although, in other respects, director Paul Almond was slow to take advantage of any excuse for action in the script.

The result was, in fact, pretty sluggish. The verbal skirmishing absorbed, but it wasn't backed up by visual impact. The acting was fine, with Keith Michell and Charles Gray vigorously deploying the pros and cons of the matter, and good support forthcoming from Veronica Turleigh as Hecuba and Barbara Chilcott as Cassandra. Carole Lesley made comely Helen, but scarcely indicated the voluptuous quality that all the fuss was about. Otta.

Sunday Night at the Palladium

A tiptop turnout of acts made this a topnotch edition of ATV's "Sunday Night at the Palladium." A rousing sendoff to the show was given by a Spanish juggler, Ugo Garrido, with a superb display of foot-and-hand-work as he kept three bottles airborne while dancing the mambo; Garrido made an outstanding novelty act out of the basic old tricks.

Morecambe & Wise, local funnymen who keep up a higher average standard than most, clicked with their poised, acutely-timed crosstalk. This show has frequently shown itself lacking in comic material, and this act effectively put the balance right.

For its cultural nod this time, there was Beryl Grey, ballerina. She twirled excitingly enough in the flashy variations from "Don Quixote," but she hadn't really the steely brilliance to make the full stunning impact.

Topping the bill was Connie Francis, who was warmly received and proceeded to deserve it. In a balanced program, she swung into "Old Man Mose," followed with a telling ballad, "My Heart Has a Mind of Its Own," gave a vital pop-Spanish tinge to "Malaguena," and bowed out with "I Believe." It was a well-spiced act, delivered with sincerity and punch.

Emcee Don Arrol had the misfortune of a few misfiring gags, but rose above them. And producer Albert Locke was as safe as houses. Otta.

for dramatic impact, some of them wild, albeit colorful.

Larry Blyden, Bugsy, rendered an effective, multi-colored performance. The bit roles of Carl Low, James Patterson, Danny Dayton, Herbie Faye, and others were gems. Th John O'Toole script was snappy. Only flaw was the boastful "On Top" speech by Blyden to the panel, which seemed hokey. Ralph Nelson's direction was acute. Horo.

Weather With Tex Antoine

The most consistently good weather show on television is the WNBC-TV, N. Y., five-a-week latenight strip with John (Tex) Antoine. This is a pleasant state of affairs, because not only is it consistently good, it is consistently sponsored. Antoine, his eminently understandable and interesting weather news format, and Consolidated Edison have been together on WNBC-TV for about 11 straight years.

Stanza, following the nightly news in the period between 11:10 and 11:15 p.m., still has the uniquely pragamatic approach to weather reporting in the New York area: Antoine is a deft illustrator, so he is allowed to illustrate freely as he traces the development of his high pressure and low pressure areas; he is knowledgeable about his subject and, being articulate, he is allowed to make his viewers knowledgeable; and being charming and yet sincere, his blurbs for Con Edison are commercial gems. His stanza Wednesday (26) night was merely another example of his value as a useful tv attraction. Art.

Bower Stays On In Damascus At UAR's Request

Roger Bower has agreed to stay on with Damascus Television as TV Specialist for an additional six months at request of the United Arab Republic and approved by the Bureau of Educational & Cultural Affairs, U. S. State Department. The extension dates from Nov. 1, 1960 and runs through April 1961.

Bower went to the UAR last July to assist in establishing the Television Service there. In addition to advising and aiding in the organizational structure, he has been indoctrinating production and directing personnel in the fundamentals of show construction and staging, as well as television basics.

After his evaluation of the operation, management felt tha his services were needed to meet and help solve the problems of the expanded operation when the official building opens with new studios, equipment and personnel. The new studios get under way in February. Bower's extension will cover the period before and after.

Bower is a vet with a long list of credits as a personality and producer-director. More recently he has broadened his activities to include management and has acted as consultant and troubleshooter siderable feat considering web is not selling minutes and a daytime quarter-hour before discounts runs better than $26,000 for time and program. Only area where CBS operates on a less-than-card basis is 10-11 a.m., where sponsor pays station compensation charges and a nominal program charge. But even here, the sponsor must buy in at 11-12 to qualify for the lower 10-11 rate, so that a good deal of money is involved.

Altogether, the new and renewed business runs to over 20 weekly quarter-hours, a major spurt at any time but particularly bullish these days.

Chi WBKB in Alliance With BBC On U.S.-Made TV Documentary

Chicago, Nov. 1.

WBKB, the ABC-owned telestation here, has signed contracts with British Broadcasting Corp. to co-produce a tele documentary which is being masterminded by BBC chief documentarian, Denis Mitchell. Film, currently in the shooting stages, is expected to be ready for exhibition by February or March of 1961, with BBC getting U.K. European rights and WBKB and ABC the North American, both television and theatrical.

It's another milestone in progressive Anglo-U.S. tv economics, with costs virtually halved by co-production. Financially, the deal is 60-40, with the Chi station on the bigger end. VARIETY has already noted the earlier cross-Atlantic production pacts for dramatic shows, between ABC-TV and Associated Rediffusion and CBS-TV and Associated TeleVision.

The BBC-WBKB relationship came about via the initiative of Sterling Red Quinlan, ABC veep in charge of the Chi station. BBC had sent Mitchell to the U.S. to do three documentaries on America, and he selected Chicago as the subject of the first. As he had never been to the States before, Mitchell looked for contacts and was eventually referred to Quinlan. On glimpse at the British director's 1959 Prix Italia film, "Morning in the Streets," with Liverpool as the subject, gave Quinlan the urge to buy in on the Chicago pic. He flew to the east and sewed up the deal with BBC's New York office.

Mitchell will have full artistic control and will use WBKB's camera crews and facilities. Scoring and editing will be done in England, and WBKB will have no access to the footage, nor knowledge of the viewpoint, until the film is completed. Studs Terkel has been hired by Mitchell to serve as guide and consultant on the Chicago pic.

If the finished product is at all the art film the Liverpool pic is, Quinlan believes it could have a future—after its various tv exposures—as a short subject in art houses and possibly in university film festivals.

Mitchell's is an unusual documentary technique which uses, in lieu of narration, candidly-recorded voices of the locale played over the film. He hasn't decided yet what his other two U.S. documentaries for the BBC will be, but tentatively is thinking of doing one on a small town and the other on a cross-country trip. He'll take along the WBKB cameramen, although the station is sharing only in the first subject.

WAST's Radio Spread On 'Early,' 'Late' Features

Albany, Nov. 1.

Believed to be the first large-scale purchase by a Capital District television station of time on a non-owned radio outlet—to advertise a film package—is WAST's buying of 750 announcements via WPTR, starting Nov. 9.

The deal provides for the broadcasting by the 50,000-watter of that number during a 30-day period.

WAST's "Early" and "Late Shows" will be plugged Monday-through Friday; the "Late" film blocks, on the weekends.

Pik Exits Essex To Set Up Own Org.

Robert Pik, pioneer exec in distribution of foreign films to tv, has set up his own organization. He resigned as exec assistant to Joseph Harris, board chairman of Ess Universal.

As topper of Robert Pik Organization, he left for an extended trip abroad to gather product. He will visit the film production centers of Europe, including London, Paris, Rome, Copenhagen, Madrid, Athens.

Prior to his departure, Pik observed "The American television audience is growing up. Foreign films, with English dialog, can now be seen in 130 U.S. tv cities. Just seven years ago, only 10 of the country's most sophisticated markets were showing imported motion pictures."

With Essex Universal, Pik helped in assembling the "Art Theatre of the Air" package, acquired by Buckeye Corp. when the latter bought Essex Universal's subsid, Flamingo Films. Pik also acquired and dubbed a group of European pictures for Hampshire Enterprises which he headed. These too were sold to Buckeye in a separate deal.

Latter package included such titles as "The Last Bridge," "We Are All Murderers," "The Proud and the Beautiful," and Fernandel's "The Dressmaker."

Evelyn Rudie Kid Series

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

Evelyn Rudie, nine-year-old moppet, will star in a new vidpix series beamed at child audiences, "Spotlight on Kids." Series is comprised of 260 five-minute segments, to be produced by Sherman Grinberg's Filmrite Associates Inc.

Under terms of deal closed by William Morris office, starlet will participate in profits to tune of 25% in addition to her salary. Segments will be made at rate of 10 per week.

Taft Schreiber's Squawk to FCC In MCA Petition

Washington, Nov. 1.

MCA and company exec Taft Schreiber have asked the Federal Communications Commission to tighten the reins on the television programming inquiry, charging that it smacked of "an adversary proceeding against talent companies."

A petition, as filed by Washington attorney Harry M. Plotkin and Allen E. Sussman, MCA counsel, representing Schreiber at the recent stormy L. A. session of the inquiry, Schreiber refused to furnish certain talent information and walked out after a hassle over whether it would be kept confidential. FCC Chief Hearing Examiner James Cunningham, presiding officer, ordered Sussman to keep quiet during the row.

Petition asks FCC to direct Cunningham to acknowledge a set of six principles relating to a witness' right to counsel at FCC hearings. Cunningham's treatment of Sussman was "arbitrary" and deprived Schreiber of his right to counsel, petition asserted. Internal business affairs of production or agency companies like MCA in matters unrelated to actual broadcast licensees should be declared out-of-bounds for the FCC sleuths. MCA asked for oral arguments before the full Commission on its petition.

Others in the field include:

E. Roger Muir, former vet NBC staffer, in an indie deal with California National Productions, will produce 130 eight- films, built around the antics of Cliff Norton and Mack Sennett. Title of the "Funny Manns."

Heritage Productions has the five-minute "Golf Tips," featuring Dow Finsterwald and guestars. Series copped 20 markets on the basis of a pilot. Also underway is the five-minuter "Major Moment in Sports," package of 365 shorties edited with baseball luminary Leo Durocher on the voice-over. Heritage also has the 15-minuter "Campy's Corner."

"Diver Dan," a children's underwater fantasy, employing both "live" and animated sequences, is being produced by Young Productions, in Philadelphia. Seven-minute episode series has totaled sales over the $500,000 level.

Jules Power Productions is filming a 10-minute slapstick comedy series, titled "Bloopy and the Colonel." Joe Ross and Bobby Gibbons will be featured in the lead roles.

Trans-Lux Television has a series of five-minute "Rube Goldberg Inventions."

Hardly a week goes without some new entry piling up on the shortie roster.

MILTON PERLMAN IN SHIFT TO DYNAMIC

Milton Perlman, vet producer, whose credits include "The Goddess," has joined Dynamic Films.

Dynamic prexy Nathan Zuker said Perlman's addition will enable the company to better fulfill quality requirements of industrial, commercial and public service films. It also will enable Dynamic to expand into the legit and theatrical fields.

Perlman's immediate attention will be directed towards readying a new Broadway play which he will produce in association with Dynamic. The play "Love and Like" was written by Herbert Gold.

Bowling Shirts Outfit Sponsors You-Know-What

Chicago, Nov. 1.

King Louis Bowling Shirts, a Kansas City firm repped by the K. C. agency, Potts, Woodbury, is making a minor syndication splash this fall by spotting "Championship Bowling" in 50 one- and two-station markets. Company also purchases spots in the series in most major markets.

Kegler series, which is now in its seventh year of syndication, is currently in 138 markets. Producer-distributor Walter Schwimmer expects the number to hit 175 during the current tv season.

M-G's Not-Till-'65 Pledge on 'Bounty'

In a rare show of harmony, Metro TV has secured pledges from stations throughout th country that they will not telecast the oldi "Mutiny on the Bounty" until 1965.

Reason Metro TV went out into the field and sought the pledges was that parent Loew's contemplated a new, extravagant "Mutiny" starring Marlon Brando, with Sir Carol Reed as director ar l Aaron Rosenberg as producer. The pic now is in production in Tahiti. But before the cameras were allowed to grind, every tv station which bought the pic had pledged to withhold telecasting it until 1965.

Perhaps one factor easing the way for the pledges was that Metro TV, when it initially sold "Muti y" with its library, held out a five-year option for theatrical reiss Option also carried the clause that "Mutiny" would be given a tw and-a-half-year theatrical reiss playoff.

Like, Leave Us Have No Doubts About It

"The People's Choice" is the greatest success story in daytime stripping! From coast-to-coast, smart stations have won the smart money (P&G, Lever Bros. General Mills, Jergens, Lestoil, Anahist, etc.) AND results with this top-rated 104-stanza laugh series.

In market after market—NOW on the air in 16 out of the top-20 markets!—"The People's Choice" is the audience's choice, the advertiser's choice AND the station's choice.

Good reason for it, of course. Situation comedy is HOT . . . R-E-D HOT! And "The People's Choice" is BOTH the best AND the most recent off-the-network-into-syndication addition to the too-too small list.

Look into it today, hey.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

New York radi indie WLIB Monday (31) aired a phone interview with the Rev. Martin Luther King from Atlanta, where the Negro minister's release from jail last week had been arranged by Presidential candidate Jack Kennedy.

King, who received a four-month sentence for driving with Georgia license plates, was asked by WLIB's interviewer if his release by the Democratic candidate and the lack of response from the Republican side had significance. He replied, "I do feel that Senator Kennedy took a very significant stand in this whole thing. He took a courageous stand because Georgia happens to be one of the southern states that Senator Kennedy is pretty sure to carry. His courage and willingness to take a stand in my unjust arrest meant that he was losing a lot of support in the white community, which he has already done." King repeated that he wouldn't publicly endorse either candidate, but the strong statement on Kennedy's action is thought to be significant since many previously believed that the influential Negr had privately favored Nixon.

New York branch of the Screen Actors Guild has its annual membershi meeting tomorrow (Thurs.) at the Hotel Edison. Main item on the agenda will be a report on the progress of negotiations on a new commercial contract between American Federation of Television & Radio Artists and the networks and ad agencies. SAG execs have been sitting in on th dickers, side by side with AFTRA.

Session begins at 2:30 p.m.

Net sales of Capital Cities Broadcasting amounted to $5,311,362 for the first nine months of '60, against $3,478,251 for the like '59 period. Net income was $556,508 this time around, with earnings per share amounting to 49 cents, up over the previous $134,666 and 12 cents.

Capital Cities owns radio and tv outlets in Albany, a tv station in Raleigh, N. C., and radio and tv outlets in Providence. Lowell Thomas is a stockholder and director of the corporation.

In a combo pubservice effort to get out the vote, WBZ radio and WBZ-TV is staging "Go To The Polls" nonpartisan "Voter-Cade" rallies in 22 near Boston communities Saturday (5). The "Voter-Cades" will travel a combined total of 220 miles and will consists of a fleet of convertibles with station personalities, police escorts, Dixieland bands, barbershop quartets, WBZ news wagons and bunting decorated floats, from which the rallies will be staged. A bevy of models will distribute WBZ radio-tv "Voter-Cade" stickers to the adults and balloons to the small fry.

Unusually good response for a ublic affairs promotion has been accorded the "Channel 2 Election Guide," one of five booklets prepared by the CBS-TV o&o stations for distribution through the League of Women Voters and the American Heritage Foundation. The WCBS-TV, N. Y. booklet lists each separate Congressional race in the metropolitan four-state area, with biogs on each candidate and maps breaking down election districts. Response has come from other stations as well as civic groups and politicos. Only unhappy aspect was the fact that the several-thousand distribution w sn't enough; Women Voters wanted 100,000 copies to circulate, but WCBS-TV couldn't foot that kind of printing nut.

Forty NBC-TV affiliates this fall latched onto a promotion stunt done last season by KPRC, in Houston. It's "You're the Critic," a contest in which viewers are asked to watch the prime time lineup for a week and then choose the 10 most popular stanzas.

KPRC gave away a first prize of $1,000 to the person whose selections came closest to the next week's official local rating results. Other NBC stations have been giving away everything from cash to clocks and from trips to encyclopaedias, in the effort to promote viewership.

Metropolitan Broadcasting Co.'s Dec. 12 special on Sir Winston Churchill will not make use of material fro Britain's Associated-Rediffusion, as stated here last week. Company did have a contract with A-R for the use of its material, but this was terminated by mutual consent and Metropolitan then turned to other film sources to remake the one-hour special.

Pic Music Goes Way, Way Out

'Something Wild' Scoring Assignment Goes To Morton Feldman, Avant-Garde Longhair

Background music for films may be entering a new and daring phase in a search for heightened dramatic impact. Once limited to conventional symphonic atmospheric effects and more recently riding in a jazz groove, background music is now moving to the outer limits of contemporary longhair sounds, which are as removed from traditional musical concepts as a modern abstract painting is from a recognizable object.

Symptomatic of the new direction is the fact that the background scoring assignment for the upcoming Carol Baker starrer, "Something Wild," has been given to Morton Feldman, a young New York longhair avant-gardist who is located artistically even further out than the extremism of John Cage, though in the same general school of "action music." The Feldman score for "Something Wild" will be marked by such twists as "predictable unpredictability," "dripping notes," and "supersonic thrusts" and other radical concepts not generally associated with million-dollar film production.

An odd angle of Feldman's scoring assignment for "Something Wild" is his collaboration with the click rock 'n' roll writing team of Mike Stoller and Jerry Lieber on some of the musical motifs. Via this route, Feldman has become hip to the jazz idiom and his own contributions to the film music will exploit the improvisatory skills of some of New York's top jazz sidemen on some controlled jamming of Feldman's abstractions.

Feldman noted that despite his reputation for way-out music, he has been given a full greenlight by the pic's producer, George

Jazz Troupes Fizz in Philly

Philadelphia, Nov. 1.

Jazz music has reached the bottom of the barrel locally. Within a week three different attractions have failed to make a score at the Academy of Music.

Stan Kenton and Count Basie put on two concerts last weekend (23) and their total attendance didn't add up to a half house. They netted less than $5,000 out of a potential $23,000.

The following evening Gerry Mulligan bombed with a total attendance of 321 customers for a take slightly over $1,200. Sunday night (30) Ray Conniff's "Concert in Stereo," not strictly a jazz show, drew only one-third of capacity despite heavy promotion campaign in record shops and press.

Fountain's NSG 3½G, Cleve.

Cleveland, Nov. 1.

Pete Fountain's jazz concert at Cleveland Music Hall drew one-third of a house and about $3,500 last Saturday (29).

'ALL OF ME' IN CENTRE OF RENEWAL HASSLE

A new copyright renewal suit involving the divergent interests of widow and children of the late Seymour Simons in the standard, "All of Me," was filed in N.Y. Federal Court last week by Marlong Music against Bourne Music. Marlong claims to have the renewal rights from Simon's three children in "All of Me," which was coauthored with Gerald Marks. Simons died in 1949 and Marlong says it obtained the children's renewal portion since 1959.

The suit is seeking to determine what share of Simons' royalties belong to the three children. Marlong is asking for 50-50 split with the widow. The plaintiff charges that since 1959, Bourne has not paid any royalties to the children.

Mercury Pushes Drive For Pop Single Talent

Chicago, Nov. 1.

Having restored Carmen McRae and Jose Melis to the Mercury Records corral, label execs are continuing to push their roster expansion with strong focus on a buildup of the singles catalog in all of the pop idioms.

Latest acquisitions include chirper Arlene DeMarco (ex-Sisters); the Cadillacs (5), rhythm and blues vocal group; and saxist Gigi Gryce, now fronting his own band, but previously recognized as a top composer-arranger in the jazz field.

The Chi-based diskery also casting about for more nitery and supper club acts, with expectation at least a couple saloon circuiters will shortly be signed.

Kassner, Sporn Buy Out Kessler, Form Holding Co.

Eddie Kassner and Murray Sporn, who together bought out Broadway Music two years ago, have now purchased Rush Music, a firm which Sporn had partnered with Danny Kessler for the last nine years. Kassner and Sporn have now merged all their companies, totally 21 separate entities, into new holding corporation called American Metropolitan Enterprises to control their interest.

The new company will own seven ASCAP firms, 11 BMI firms, two disk companies and a management office. The group now controls about 10,000 copyrights and will have global publishing affiliations throughout Kassner's international setup.

Marvin Holtzman, formerly artists & reportoire head of Epic Records and more recently, of Strand Records, has been named a&r chief of the group's two disk labels, Seville Records and President Records. Milt Stavin, artists manager, has been named to head the personal management operation.

Kassner and Sporn indicated that American Metropolitan Enterprises will also acquire real estate and become active in the legit and film sectors of show biz. Through Kassner's connection with the German film producer and music publisher, Peter Schaeffers, it's expected that he will be able to get European films for distribution in the U.S.

Murray Rebates 36G To 'Mesmerized' Student

Calgary, Nov. 1.

Howard Lyons, who shelled out $52,450 to Arthur Murray Studios here, is getting back $36,500 of it from Arthur Murray Inc. of N. Y., as well as a lifetime membership in the studio.

The 43-year-old bachelor inherited $65,000 last December. By February he had bought $37,450 worth of lifetime membership in Arthur Murray Studios and lent its manager, Robert Cofer Bonds, $15,000 to be repaid $100 a week. He eventually took it to court and Justice Harold Riley placed his affairs in the hands of a public trustee because Lyons had been "mesmerized" by Murray employees. The settlement frees defendants from any further claims by Lyons, including the $15,000 loan.

Testimony showed that Murray employees had assured Lyons he'd be able to dance professionally on stage and that their main ballroom would be named after him.

EXECS EXPLAIN DIVIDEND CUTS

By HERM SCHOENFELD

The deep current of discontent over the new distribution system of the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers is now dominating the thinking of the Society's top execs. That was graphically revealed last Thursday (27) at the fall membership meeting in New York at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel where, for the first time in memory, all other ASCAP business was laid aside for a discussion of the new payoff system which hit a broad cross-section of the membership with heavy cuts in the third quarter dividend.

Stanley Adams keynoted the meeting, which was marked by a turnout of some 400 members including a group of top cleffers from New York and the Coast, by stating that he understood how heartsick many of the members felt when they received their checks of weeks ago. While assuring the membership that the Society would continue to study the payoff plan with an eye to correcting any inequities that may arise, the ASCAP prexy stated that many of the cuts were unavoidable.

Firstly, he pointed out that the Society's October distribution was 4.6¢ off the July distribution, a normal seasonal drop. Secondly, he pointed out that there was now an automatic 5% deduction from the writers' melon for the "awards fund," which pays off to prestige works without regard to performance points. Since the distribution of the awards fund is still to prestige works without regard to performance points. Since the distribution of the awards fund is still to be made, many writers are still due to get additional coin which may brighten their economic picture.

Adams warned the membership that the alternative to the present plan was either a 100% performance payoff or an antitrust court test which might destroy the legal basis for the Society against bringing in outside forces, he noted that the Society was compelled to adopt the new payoff system by the Department of Justice. He said: "We did not seek a change in the classi-

Victor in 8-Way Tieup for Xmas

RCA Victor has developed a massive joint promotion with eight manufacturers to step up its Christmas sales. Bill Alexander, Victor's advertising and promotion manager, has arranged tieups with Lionel Trains, Alexander Dolls, Presto Ware, Schick Razors, Pioneer Accessories, Poole Silver, Wheary Luggage and Royce Union Bikes in which these companies will offer their products as promotion and display material in Victor's Christmas program.

Victor is keying its ad campaign to the slogan: "Give The Christmas Gifts America Loves Best" in displays spotlighting Victor's 23 bestselling packages and the products of the eight manufacturers. The diskery is also prepping a full-color window displays, two-minute color spots on NBC-TV, and point-of-sale eye-catchers for retailers. Victor is also issuing a special Christmas catalog supplement.

Par-Famous Building Operation On Coast

Paramount-Famous is building up its Coast outlet. Eddie Wolpin, firm's general professional manager, has assigned Tony Richland to L.A. to assist Al Friedman, who's head of the Par-Famous operation there.

Richland had been working out of the N.Y. base for the past six years.

Big Three, Chappell Face 500G Loss In ASCAP Income; Rap 'Payola' Count

ASCAP's 470G Awards

Sweetening the bad news many writers received in the dividend check early in October, ASCAP made an additional distribution of over $470,000 this week as special awards to writers in the pop and standard fields. Coin for the awards came out of a 5% deduction from the total writer's share.

Awards, chosen by outside panels, are given to these members whose catalogs have a unique prestige value not reflected in a straight performance count and for those works which are predominantly performed in media, such as concert halls, that are not logged by the Society.

The powerful impact of the new consent order on the ASCAP's payoff system has created one of the rare fissures in the ranks of the publisher members of the board. While hassles among the writers are commonplace (see adjoining story), the major firms have usually maintained a solid front of agreement on ASCAP affairs.

Operation of the new payoff system, however, brought vigorous squawks from Mickey Scopp, Big Three Music general manager; and Max Dreyfus, head of Chappell Music. The combined loss to Chappell and the Big Three, as a result of the new plan, will come to about $500,000 for the current year equally divided.

It's understood that Scopp, speaking at a special board of directors meeting last week, protested strongly that the first distribution received under the amended consent decree was disproportionate. It was pointed out that a small proportion of the publishers received preferential treatment due to the counting of an extensive number of plugs amassed by firms which engaged in the practice of buying performances on afternoon tv shows during the period of Oct. 1, 1958 to Sept. 30, 1959.

Understood that both Scopp and Dreyfus pointed out that despite the fact that such questionable trade practices were widespread during this period, the amended consent decree specified the 1958-59 period as the basis for the first fiscal survey year to be used in calculating distribution of the 30% "recognized works fund," a new name for the availability category; and the 12% "continuity of membership fund," heretofore known as seniority. Since the beginning of this year, ASCAP has put into effect a new weighing system which would greatly diminish the impact of theme and background music, or so-called non-feature performances.

Scopp and Dreyfus are insisting

New Suit Tries To Crack Rights Of 'Mirror Disks'

A new attack on "mirror disks," in which arrangements of hits are allegedly copied note for note on a cover platter, was launched in New York Supreme Court last week by S&S Productions, Rust Enterprises and Laurie Records against Everest Records. Suit involves "Over The Rainbow," cut by a vocal group, The Demensions, with Irv Spice's orch for S&S which subsequently leased the master to Laurie Records which in turn made a distribution deal with Rust Enterprises, formerly known as Andie Productions.

Complaint charges that after Everest failed to buy the "Over The Rainbow" master, it hired a vocal group, called The Baysiders, to cut "Over The Rainbow." The plaintiffs charge that "the performance and arrangement of "Over The Rainbow" on the Everest label, owned by Belock Instrument Corp., were "an international counterfeit of the unique, distinctive and creative character of the performance and arrangement" on the Laurie label and "constituted a willful and unlawful misappropriation" of the original arrangement. The complaint charges Everest "with malice and with intent to confuse and deceive the record-buying public, to unfairly compete with and defraud plaintiffs and to appropriate to itself and the other defendants (Everest's artists & repertoire chief Leroy Holmes), the fruits of the popularity of the plaintiffs' recordings."

Plaintiffs claim damages of $25,000 and an injunction blocking the release of the Everest version of the tune. They also are asking for an accounting of the profits made by Everest on the tune plus court costs.

The 1909 Copyright Act does not give any protection to an arrangement, hence the suit is being brought in the N. Y. State courts on the basis of illegal competition. Rosen, Seton & Sarbin are repping the plaintiffs.

The same law firm is also fighting a similar suit in the New York courts in which Eldorado Music and Eldo Records are suing King Records for the latter's copy of "Image of A Girl." This case involves both the "mirror copy" issue as well as Eldorado's claim that King failed to take out a license of the tune which it published. Latter claim involves the Copyright Act and hence this suit is being fought in N. Y. Federal Court.

Col Ups Shepard

Thomas Shepard has been promoted to an associate producer's spot in Columbia Masterworks' artists & repertoire department.

He reports to Schuyler Chapin, Masterworks' director.

20th-Fox Steps Up Off-B'way Accent

Twentieth-Fox Records is stepping up its original cast album activity. Label has gone off-Broadway to nab the rights to the musical "Greenwich Village U.S.A." It's diskery's second off-Broadway move having already put "Oh Kay" into the groove.

Henry Onorati, 20th prexy, put the show into the groove Monday (31). He's also planning an unusual package presentation for the original caster. There'll be a one-pocket version consisting of the music only and a two-pocket version consisting of the music and the sketches. Score for the revue was written by Jeanne Bargy, Frank Gehrecke and Herb Corey. It's published by Tommy Valando's Sunbeam Music firm (BMI).

Other original caster in the 20th hopper is last season's "Andersonville Trial."

ERROLL GARNER FORMS LABEL FOR OWN DISKS

Erroll Garner is planning to record under his own label. The pianist will etch under his Octave Records banner with a distribution tie to be set up later this week. He also plans to sign other artists to the Octave label.

Garner, who's been tied to Columbia Records since 1956, is currently involved in litigation on breach of contract. His pact with Col was to run until 1961 but he received an okay from the American Federation of Musicians for the Octave move.

The pianist is currently enroute to Los Angeles where he headlines at the Crescendo from Nov. 4 until the 20th. His concert tour under S. Hurok's auspices begins Jan. 10.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Freddie & The Voxpoppers (Warwick): "LONELY FOR YOU" (Rayven†) will win over lots of spinning friends because of its slick ballad quality and strong vocal approach. "HELEN ISN'T TELLIN'" (Rayven†) has a bright novelty flavor set in a brisk rhythm line that rates some spinning attention.

Jamie Horton (Joy): "WHAT SHOULD A TEEN HEART DO" (Joy*) is a juve-slanted ballad fashioned with the familiar rocking lines that draws plays on turntables. "HANDS OFF! HE'S MINE" (Joy*) swings with a catchy beat that should keep the juke crowd happy.

Andy Williams (Cadence): "YOU DON'T WANT MY LOVE" (Tree†) is presented with a frisky bounce that's quite catching and should make a dent in the spinning circuit. "DON'T GO TO STRANGERS" (Jefferson*) is a revival of a strong ballad with a warm vocal approach that gets played.

Kathy Linden (Monument): "WE HAD WORDS" (Arch*) has a warm and pleasing ballad style that should get a lot of spinners on its side. "TAKE ME HOME" (Acuff-Rose†) works up a flashy country beat that will nab turntable time in pop areas.

Bobby Pedrick (Shell): "COME OUT, COME OUT" (Saxon†) comes over with a rousing beat and vocal attack that's strictly for the teenage market. "SCHOOL CRUSH" (Conquest*) doesn't aim higher than the teenage level but sometimes that's enough to make it pay off.

Junior Waters (ABC-Paramount): "NO GREATER MIRACLE" (J. Stearns Lorob†) has a pleasing ballad form and serves as a good showcase for this newcomer who's sure to attract interest. "WE BOTH NEED LOVE" (J. Stearns Lorob†) is in a high rhythmic groove and he builds it into a fine spinnable side.

The Jazztet (Argo): "THE COOL ONE" (Andante*) is a solid jazz piece but with the kind of instrumental approach that could crash through the pop spinning lines. "FIVE SPOT AFTER DARK" (Andante*) is the group's theme and it's developed for a good spinning ride.

Dion (Laurie): "LONELY TEENAGER" (Loi †) should find some friends among teenagers who will find some meaning in the beat and the message. "LITTLE MISS BLUE" (Lowery†) has a colorful beat and the jeaners will porbably swing towards it.

Al Gardner (Decca): "THE STOMP" (Roosevelt†) has a hot beat that could catch teener interest around the jukes. "SOLITUDE" (American Academy*) is the oldie in an okay deep-voiced rendition.

Savannah Churchill (Jamie): "TIME OUT FOR TEARS" (Republic†) was a winner for the thrush in 1949 and has a strong chance for a click repeat this time around because of the forceful delivery. "I WANT TO BE LOVED" (Melrose*) is another repeat performance of a good ballad and could catch the spinners' interest again.

Mel Carter (Arwin): "SUGAR" (Daywin†) has a sweet ballad feel that should build a following for this newcomer. "I'M COMING HOME" (Daywin†) features a soft-gospel style approach that gives it a stepout potential.

Louis Prima (Dot): "OL' MAN MOSE" (Joy*) gets a rowdy revival that will catch occasional play. "WONDERLAND BY NIGHT" is a pleasing instrumental with a good trumpet lead.

Jan & Jean (Dore): "GEE" (Meridian†) features a sprightly beat and a juve-styled vocal that will get its spinning pickup from the teen crowd. "SUCH A GOOD NIGHT FOR DREAMING" (Aldon†) is a fair ballad that will win some requests because of the harmony approach.

Le Garde Twins (Liberty): "WHERE CAN THE LOVELIGHT BE" (Acuff-rose†) has a brisk and catching flavor that could come out strongly in the spinning sweepstakes. "BABY SITTER" (Acuff-Rose†) has an okay rocking attack for the juve set.

The Lettermen (Warner Bros.): "TWO HEARTS" (Witmark*) is a lighthearted ballad that builds a pleasant sound for programming. "THE MAGIC SOUND" (Meridian†) works a frisky beat around a novelty idea for fair results.

Orville Couch (Mercury): "BIG JIM SANDY" (Bid D & MRC†) is another of the country song sagas but it fails to hit the bigtime spinning mark. "DOWNTOWN" (Big D & MRC†) is in an uptempo rocking groove with a shouting vocal that gives it some interest.

Best Bets

PERRY COMO ..... MAKE SOMEONE HAPPY
(RCA Victor) ..... Gone Is My Love

Perry Como's "Make Someone Happy" (Stratford) is in a bright rhythmic ballad groove that's headed right to the spinning top. Tune is from the incoming legituner "Do Re Mi." "Gone Is My Love" (Roncom*) fits neatly into Como's ballad groove and will get its share of plays.*

JOE REISMAN ORCH LOVE THEME FROM WORLD OF SUZIE WONG
(Roulette) ..... A Breath of Scandal

Joe Reisman Orch's "Love Theme From World of Suzie Wong" (Famous) develops the oriental motif of the "Suzie Wong" pic theme into a choice instrumental slice that will win over all spinning levels. "A Breath Of Scandal" (Famous*) plays up a lilting melodic line with a melodic charm that will keep the programmers happy.*

FRANK SINATRA ..... OL' MacDONALD

Frank Sinatra's "Ol' MacDonald" (Eddie Shaw) is brightened up in the hip vernacular that gives it a natural payoff quality. "You'll Always Be The One I Love" (Sands*) is a soft nd caressing ballad in a typical Sinatra style.*

CONNIE FRANCIS ..... MANY TEARS AGO
(MGM) ..... Senza Mamma

Connie Francis' "Many Tears Ago" (Roosevelt) is sung out with a blues beat that's surefire for a big payoff. "Senza Mamma" (Francon*) follows her weepy "Mamma" groove and it too will rack up important spins.*

LLOYD PRICE ..... KNOW WHAT YOU'RE DOIN'
(ABC-Paramount) ..... That's Why Tears Come And Go

Lloyd Price's "(You Better) Know What You're Doin'" (Lloyd-Logan†) is a power-packed rhythm side that will ride the spinning circuit for a big takeoff. "That's Why Tears Come And Go" (Pri-Gan†) flows in a big ballad groove and is put forth in a persuasive manner.

FERRANTE & TEICHER ..... EXODUS
(United Artists) ..... Twilight

Ferrante & Teicher's "Exodus" (Chappell) follows their clicko "Apartment" theme with a rich and attractive melodic rendition that should build as an important exploitation tool for the Otto Preminger pic. "Twilight" (Malin*) has a neat melodic flair that makes it a good programming bet.*

JERRY MURAD'S HARMONICATS ..... LONELY LOVE
(Columbia) ..... Cherry Pink & Apple Blossom White

Jerry Murad's Harmonicats' "Lonely Love" (Robbins) is a pretty instrumental with a strong chance to win over turntable time and develop clicko side. "Cherry Pink & Apple Blossom White" (Chappell*) gets a lively interpretation that's tailor-made for the programmers.*

Mathis Revue, Jamal Trio Set for Chicago Stands

Chicago, Nov. 1.

Frank Fried's Triangle Theatrical Productions, picking up momentum in its second season, is bringing in the Johnny Mathis revue for a week at the Medinah Temple starting Nov. 28.

Also set for Orchestra Hall concerts are the Ahmad Jamal Trio, Dec. 30, and classic guitarist Carlos Montoya, Jan. 20. A recent Pete Seegar concert there, which Triangle auspiced, was a sellout.

Dan Terry on Location At Meadows in Mass.

Dan Terry is bringing his new band into the Meadows, Framingham, Mass., Nov. 11 for an indefinite stay with a pitch towards the colleges in the area. Terry is billing his group as "Big Band On Campus" and will feature special collegiate nights during the week as well as a jazz show Sunday matinees.

Joe Derise has been set to handle the vocals and Terry is currently scouting for a thrush to add to the group.

Album Reviews

"Tenderloin" (Capitol). In its original Broadway cast album form, "Tenderloin" emerges as a choice item. The Jerry Bock-Sheldon Harnick score is bright and tuneful and Maurice Evans, Ron Husmann and Eileen Rodgers handle the major vocal assignments with zest and exuberance. Among the song winners are "Artificial Flowers," although it's done by Husmann in an entirely different manner from Bobby Darin's single click version, "Good Clean Fun" by Evans and "My Gentle Johnny" by Miss Rodgers. Another plus is the packaging which at no additional cost gives the showbuff a souvenir program to dwell over.

Sir John Gielgud: "One Man In His Time" (Columbia). This is the second part of Shakespeare's "Ages of Man," and here, too, Gielgud shows that he's one of the best delineators of the spoken word on disks today. In all, it's a stirring recitation that deserves an important spot on the disk collector's shelf.

Connie Francis: "More Italian Favorites"—"Sings Jewish Favorites" (MGM): Connie Francis is getting a wide spread in her appeal to different national origins. In these two packages she's at it again and will undoubtedly score with each. In the "Italian" set she hits with such familiars as "Summertime Venice," "Funicull, Funicula," "Senza Mamma" and "That's Amore" while in the "Jewish" package she gets lots of mileage out of "My Yiddishe Momme, "Mom-e-le," "Oifen Pripetchick" and "Tzena Tzena."

Ralph Bellamy: "Voices Toward Peace" (Decca). The story of the United Nations is turned into an effective packaging job. Produced by Saul Carson with Ralph Bellamy acting as narrator, the UN story is told via tapings of the voices of Roosevelt, Truman, Khrushchev, Eisenhower, Ralph Bunche, Mrs. Roosevelt and many others. There are also impressive photos to complement the voices. It adds up to an important educational item.

The Ames Bros.: "The Best of the Bands" (RCA Victor). The bands of the 1930s and '40s came up with some swinging sides and the Ames Bros. recapture the spirit of those days with an attractive vocal package. With Sid Ramin's orch backing the boys work over the likes of "Heartaches," "Cherokee" and "And the Angels Sing."

Fabian - Avalon: (Chancellor): The teeners can have little more to ask for from this disk. They've got Frankie Avalon on one side and Fabian on the flip to keep their phono players busy for a long time. In Avalon's repertoire are "Venus," "Why," "I'll Wait For You" among others while Fabian reprises "Tiger," "Turn Me Loose," "I'm a Man" and "Hound Dog Man" for juve appreciation.

The Tarriers: "Tell the World About This" (Atlantic). The Tarriers are sure to take hold of the folknik trade with this package. Group has a fresh and imaginative styling and a repertoire that hasn't been worked to the ground. Each item gets a particular lift from their original folk flair.

The Clingman Clan: "At the Baboquivari" (Trey). The Clingman Clan, folksinging trio with a sound patterned after the Kingston Trio, have their own comi twist for solid impact. Trio does parody on "Tom Dooley" in addition to amusing takeoffs on other folk songs, such as "Tam Pierce." There's also some good bawdy materi ! In "Hey Lolly" and one fine straight rendition of "Barbara Allen."

Mundell Lowe & All-Stars: "Mr. Lucky — The Untouchables" (RCA Camden). This is a swinging wrap-up of the flock of jazz themes being used to underscore the top tv crime shows. Guitarist Mundell Lowe has arranged the music for a 10-man combo with a contemporary jazz flavor while retaining the dramatic thrust of the heavy beat. The set moves consistently over motifs from "Hawaiian Eye," "Tightrope," "Johnny Staccato" and others, including the two title numbers.

"Golden Encores" (Cadence). This is a firstrate rundown of some of the top and best songs of recent years by various performers. Included are numbers by the basic group of ex-Arthur Godfrey performers who launched this label under Archie Bleyer's aegis. Julius LaRosa's "Three Coins In The Fountain," is impressive; Marion Marlowe delivers "The Man In The Raincoat" effectively; and The Chordettes do their "Mr. Sandman" hit. This set reprises a couple of Andy Williams' hits and also includes numbers by Alfred Drake, Genevieve and Stephen Douglass.

Bob Luman: "Let's Think About Livin'" (Warner Bros.). Bob Luman has struck it big in the single field with the title song of this set and registers as a solid performer in this full set. This is a teen-slanted package in which Luman backed by a chorus and a rhythm combo, swings infectiously and skillfully through country and rocking numbers like "Bad, Bad Day," "Jealous Heart," "Oh, Lonesome Me," "Dreamy Doll" and others.

Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers: "Paris Concert" (Epic). Art Blakey is a flashy and persuasive percussionist when caught in the act. This package is the next best thing because the diskers caught him when he was pounding away at the Olympia in Paris performances there in late 1958. Working with Blakey are Lee Morgan on trtumpet. Benny Golson on tenor sax, Bobby Timmons on piano and Jimmy Merrittt on bass. Gros.

Longplay Shorts

Decca and Coral Records are pushing a fall promotion of 14 packages around the tag of "Personalities Plus" with LPs by Jackie Wilson, Pete Fountain, Billy Williams and others . . . New LPs by Harry Belafonte, Della Reese and Carlos Montoya will highlight Victor's November release. Belafonte is being featured in a double-LP set recorded during a benefit concert last May and will include numbers by Miriam Makeba and Odetta. Title is "Belafonte Returns To Carnegie Hall."

Columbia Records has 28 albums on its November release. Heading the 13-album pop category is the soundtrack of "The Alamo" . . . Epic Records has scheduled four classical, two popular and one jazz package for its November drive . . . The new George Russell Sextet has just recorded an album for Riverside from which a single will be released, "Kentucky Oysters," a tune written by Russell's trombonist Dave Baker . . . Capitol Records will unveil 16 pop albums plus six LP additions to the Starline series for November . . . The Herbie Mann Afro-Jazz Sextet, which opens at Chicago's Birdhouse for one week beginning Nov. 1, has a new Atlantic album, "The Common Ground," due early in the month . . . Larry (Mr. Custer) Verne, back on the Coast after a series of one-man shows, cutting the final sides for his forthcoming Era album . . . Roulette will issue Billy Eckstine's new LP, "No Cover, No Minimum," during singer's three-weeker at the Cloisters, L. A., which begins Nov. 17.

Artist-Disk Deals

United Artists: Autry Inman

United Artists made its first step into the country & western field last week with the signing of Autry Inman. According to Art Talmadge, UA veep-general manager, more c&w artists will be added to the label in the near future. Inman's first single is scheduled for early November release.

Decca: Honeydreamers

On the basis of a "goose-Latin" master recorded independently by the Honeydreamers, group has been etched to a Decca deal. The first sides for the vocal combo are "Jingle Bells" and "Show Me The Way To Go Home." In the group are Marion Bye, Bob Davis, Susan Hunter, Bob Hartman and Lew Anderson. The group is now apearing at the Rooster Tail, Detroit.

Argo: Buddy Rich

Drummer Buddy Rich has joined the Argo label. Rich, who has been working with a sextet in jazz clubs recently, will use the group for his first Argo session. Included in the unit are vibist Mike Mainieri, who was also pacted by Argo as a leader in his own right, and flutist Sam Most.

Warner Bros.: Bill Doggett

Bill Doggett has joined the Warner Bros. label. For the past several years Doggett has been putting his Hammond organ into the groove for King Records.

Band Reviews

QUINCY JONES ORCH (18)
Pep's Bar, Philadelphia

The shouting, 18-piece Quincy Jones has the guts to make it in a big way—if the public is ready to support a really big band as it did years ago.

Jones is a 27-year-old ex-trumpeter who formerly wrote arrangements for the Lionel Hampton and Dizzy Gillespie big bands. The Jones band has much of the drive and excitement of both those groups with musicianship plus.

Although its recent date at Pep's in Philadelphia was the band's U.S. premiere, the group actually was born overseas when it went to Europe as the pit band for the short-lived and ill-fated musical, "Free and Easy." When the show died, Jones kept the band together for a 10-month tour of 14 countries, including Yugoslavia.

The current Jones crew, which opens at Basin Street East this week, includes many of the musicians who made the European tour —and the rundown reads like an all-star orchestra.

Unusual features include two women "sidemen," trombonist Melba Liston, formerly with the Gillespie band, and pianist Patti Bown. And both girls contribute arrangements to the excellent Jones library, which also includes charts by the leader, Ernie Wilkins, Al Cohn, Bill Potts and others.

Outstanding soloists in the band include trumpeter Benny Bailey, back in the U.S. after 10 years in Europe; alto saxman Phil Woods; trombonist Curtis Fuller; and Julius Watkins on French horn, the best instrumentalist on the horn usually associated with symphony music. An unusual doubler is Les Spann, playing both guitar and flute.

With so many arrangers contributing to the band's "book," it hasn't acquired a sound of its own. But it sounds like no other band around today. It hasn't the subtlety of the Count Basie band, the brilliance of Stan Kenton, the color of Duke Ellington's group, but yet has an individuality without yet fitting into any mold. The band has a modern sound but swings like few bands today.

For a new band, the section work is exceptional. But this isn't really surprising, considering the caliber of the musicians. The trombone section, for example, includes ex-Ellington sidemen Quentin Jackson and Britt Woodman, along with Miss Liston and Fuller.

With several records already out on the Mercury label and with handling by the Willard Alexander agency, there is reason to feel that this could be a band that can be around for a long time. It has the musicianship. All it needs is following. Bitt.

GIL EVANS BAND (12)
Jazz Gallery, N.Y.

Big jazz bands are a perilous enterprise. They are economically, and often physically, too much for the hip digs where the music is foremost. But there's still a restlessness among jazz leaders to break from the small combo tradition for the challenge, creative range and gratifying sound of the big ensemble. Among the experimenters who have recently tried to put a big band on the road are baritone saxman Jerry Mulligan, Guitarist Sal Salvadore and trombonist Slide Hampton.

Add to the troops composer-arranger Gil Evans. He's been heard fronting big groups on LP's (mainly behind a featured jazz soloist) and via a brief stand at Birdland New York. But the current six-week exposure at the Jazz Gallery is the first real chance for the public to pick up on this musicians' musician.

So far John Q. Jazzbuff has remained relatively aloof, but boniface Joe Termini, who talked Evans into assembling the band for the engagement, is a determined man. He's returning two of the Gallery's topdraw headliners in support of Evans, hoping the faithful will go away with a new allegiance. Diz Gillespie comes in tomorrow (Thurs.) for two frames, followed by Thelonius Monk for the final two weeks of Evans' stand.

By all standards of the popular arts, Termini's double-headliner gambit should work, because the Evans band is the freshest sound on the jazz scene since Ornette Coleman busted the formula barrier at the Gallery's sister club, the Five Spot. Evans' catalog, due to his own progressive arrangements, has the excitement of a new era. A set is a concert in itself, and Evans, at the piano, directs with an intensity remindful of Stan Kenton in his burning days. In spite of the progressive approach, the scores cover th full range of jazz, and the familiar is worked in in fresh and tasteful ways. Execution is perfect, which is a boost to the band's commercial value.

AFM Tops MGA At U-I Studios

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

American Federation of Musicians won out over the Musicians Guild of America as collective bargaining agent for tooters working at Universay-International. In results of a National Labor Relation Board election held in September count of 97 to 85 favored the AFM with 12 challenged votes.

A recount of the challenged ballots by NLRB brought a closer race but still proclaimed the AFM victor over MGA by a 98-to-96 tally. AFM previously scored a unanimous win over the rival union in the major studios election.

Despite MGA's loss to the AFM in major studios, however, th Guild still maintains its hold over five recording companies—Verve, Essex, Contemporary, Disney and Allied—and the Alliance of TV Producers. Latter consists of Desilu, Four Star, Ziv, Marterto and the Andy Griffith Show.

Bo Diddley Faces Suit For Memphis No-Show

Memphis, Nov. 1.

Bo Diddley, rock 'n' roller performer disappointed more than 1,500 screaming fans when he failed to appear at the Clearpool nitery here last week. Ray Brown, local deejay who heads Showcase Promotions which engineered the deal with the Shaw agency in New York, said he was going "to file suit for our loss in this matter."

The Memphis promoter said h was also filing charges against Diddley through the American Federation of Musicians.

Inside Stuff—Music

The survey of Presidential campaign songs, past and present, in the Oct. 12 issue of VARIETY, was prefaced with a statement that it was meant to be representative, rather than all-inclusive. However, it may be well to mention a few more politico numbers, for completeness' sake, as the 1960 campaign shorts to its finale.

On the Democratic side, "Walking Down to Washington (To Shake Hands With President Kennedy)" remains the leading contender. A pro-GOP anthem not previously mentioned is "We're Voting for Nixon (To Keep the Country Strong)," written by Walt Marsh and Dav Thornton and issued by Marsh Music, of Belleville, Ill.

Correspondents have called attention to a few overlooked bygone opuses. There was, one points out, the "President Harding March" composed by Paul Crane. The late Carson Robison gently satirized two statesmen still going strong. One side of an MGM record contained "Ike's Letter to Harry" and the other, "Harry's Reply to Ike's Letter." Yogi Yorgesson recorded a Capitol platter of "I Yust Got a Letter From Harry." Yorgesson also waxed in 1952 a disk that allowed the prospective voter to pay his money and take his choice. One side announced "I'm Gonna Vote Republican" and the flip, "I'm Gonna Vote for a Democrat." In 1923 Will Rogers made a Victor record facetiously nominating Henry Ford for President and expressing a conviction that Ford's big mistake in launching his "peace ship" in World War I was is not filling it with Follies girls. "If he had done that," the gum-chewing comic drawled, "he wouldn't have had any trouble getting the boys out of the trenches by Christmas."

Apparently the most comprehensive collection of campaign and presidential songs is RCA's "Presidential Bandwagon" series of transcriptions. The compilers have dug out such unheard of and, until their series came along, such unheard compositions as "Get On the Raft With Taft," "Oh, Mr. Harding," "Keep Cool and Keep Coolidge," "Goodbye, Cal, Hello, Al" and "Hail Herbert Hoover."

fication system. We changed it because of complaints and because of internal and external pressures. He said if the Society were forced to adopt a system without regard for seniority on longrange performance averages, the crops in income would be "frightening" for those members who could no longer maintain current activity.

Reporting for ASCAP's executive committee, Jack Yellen asked two questions: "Wha hoppen?" and "Who got the money." Yellen's explanation for the broad income drops was that a good slice of ASCAP's income was being diverted to writers with special angles on racking up performance points. Without naming names, he said that one writer for special service agencies, who use tv extensively, amassed 463,000 performance credits in one year and got a $13,000 quarterly dividend. One background music composer earned 220,000 credits while one band-leader-composer, with tv time, racked up 265,000 performance credits.

Yellen said this was "perfectly legal" but it was "morally wrong." Defending the board of self-seeking, Yellen said that nine out of the 12 board members suffered cuts along with almost every other writer in the topmost ranks. Yellen said if the Society went to a 100% performance basis, ASCAP would become a "paradise for the sharpie, the finagler and the racketeer."

Yellen also reported that several of ASCAP's writer board members attended a meeting last week of the council of the American Guild of Authors & Composers which is considering intervention into ASCAP in behalf of its membership. Yellen reported he told AGAC that "if you don't have confidence in us, throw us out."

Yellen's report on the meeting with AGAC's execs brought a protest from AGAC prexy Burton Lane who said it was improper for Yellen to make such disclosure at an ASCAP meeting. When Lane stated that Yellen attended the AGAC meeting without an invitation, Yellen angrily interrupted Lane's remarks to insist that he had been invited and besides he was an honorary member of AGAC's council and hence automatically invited to attend their deliberations.

Howard Millman, of the law firm of Sullivan & Cromwell which handled the consent decree negotiations with the Department of Justice, also explained the operation of the new distribution plan. He covered the same ground as Adams as did Gerald Marks, who reported on the meeting of the Writers Advisory Committee the day before.

With one exception, the comments from the floor were strikingly restrained. The only rough spot in the meeting was caused by writer Louis Bellin who refused to relinquish the microphone after being ordered to by Adams. A half hour of wrangling, which almost ended in Bellin's forcible removal by some self-appointed sergeant-at-arms, was necessary before the discussion got underway again. Bellin's big point was that the Society should stage three, instead of two membership meetings each year.

Speaking in behalf of the Current Writers Group, which has obtained wide support in recent weeks due to its original opposition to the new payoff plan, Sherman Edwards made a measured criticism of the Society, stating that he "wants to keep this business within ASCAP." Edwards focussed his criticism on the 30% "recognized works" category, but otherwise refrained from offering any solution to the problems before the Society.

Pinky Herman and Sammy Gallup also criticized the results of the new consent order while Irving Caesar made a plea for the Society to close ranks.

One of the best attended meetings in years, writers like Harold Arlen, Richard Rodgers and Jimmy McHugh were on hand. Latter two were recently named to the Society's board to fill the vacancies created by the deaths of Oscar Hammerstein 2d and Paul Cunningham. From the Coast were Harry Ruby, member of the Writers Advisory Committee which met last Wednesday (26), Ned Washington and L. Wolfe Gilbert.

SEZ DARIUS MILHAUD: 'FILM MUSIC PAYS WELL'

San Francisco, Nov. 1.

Darius Milhaud says it isn't demeaning for a serious composer to write film music. "It's important," he adds, "because it's one of the very rare sides of our profession in which money is present."

Milhaud, currently teaching composition at Mills College in Oakland, made the crack about money with a twinkle in his eye. But he also had some serious remarks to make about music and films between sessions of judging scores and sound tracks at the Frisco Film Festival.

"I love films," he said. "They are my great distraction. I go often."

Film composing is valuable for a musician, he remarked, "because of the lesson of discipline—the necessity for close timing—and it is a very good lesson in humility. If they tell you afterward, 'I didn't notice your music,' that's the best compliment of all."

Of course, he added, blending in a film score so that it underlines and illustrates the action without becoming obtrusive is just one part of the "lesson." Sometimes the composer downgrades the music so far that "the music just gets lost."

"I remember I did two tv scores for CBS, one on Argentina under Peron and one on the Burma Road (for the '20th Century' series).

"In the Argentina one, there were so many sound effects I didn't hear one note of my score. But CBS liked it and asked me to do the other one."

Milhaud feels too-quick success in Hollywood be bad for young composers. "If a young composer does too much too fast," he said, "he may be trapped in a facility that will debilitate his classical works—well, I don't like the word 'classical'; let's say concert works."

Milhaud has written one U. S. film score ("The Affairs of Bel Ami"), 19 European ones, starting with Jean Renoir's "Madame Bovary." He says there are only "slight" differences between working methods.

He hasn't done a film score for five years now because he finds it too tiring. At 68, he's confined to a wheelchair most of his waking hours—he has the painful kind of arthritis.

that the "fiscal survey year" should be changed to April 1, 1959 to March 31, 1960 as the first payoff basis under the consent decree. The payoff basis for subsequent periods, it was advocated, should be moved up to July 1, 1959 to June 30, 1960, etc. By this means, Scopp and Dreyfus pointed out the inherent deficiencies of the 1958-59 period would be minimized and ultimately eliminated.

Threat was reportedly made at the ASCAP board meeting that unless the remedy is handled promptly, not only serious losses would be suffered by many publishers, but that "defections" from ASCAP will follow. This statement from the publishers runs parallel to the sentiment of some ASCAP writers whose income dropped this quarter despite the fact that they had several recent top hits.

Justin, and director Jack Garfein. This factor of creative freedom, will stimulate the creation of a whole new spectrum of musical ideas to intensify the dramatic impact of the film medium, Feldman said.

Feldman, who recently signed a writing pact with Broadcast Music Inc., made his initial big critical splash with the release by Columbia Records of his "New Perspectives" album. Since then, he has done the background music for an upcoming art film, "The Sin of Jesus," directed by Robert Frank for Off-Broadway Productions. He has been commissioned to do the music the 20th-Fox Records album version of the video dramatization of the Sacco-Vanzetti story.

Frank Sennes Expanding Vegas Talent Buys; Eyes Broadway for 'Lido' Shows

Las Vegas, Nov. 1.

Frank Sennes, as talent booker for the Stardust, Desert Inn, and most recently the Riviera, is perhaps now the No. 1 talent buyer on the American cafe scene. His recent activity in behalf of the latter spot might indicate that the Wilbur Clark syndicate (DI and Stardust) also now has a financial stake in Ben Goffstein's Riviera operation.

Sennes meantime has been in New York eyeing the possible purchase of a Broadway theatre, a house like the Warner (nee Strand), or perhaps one of the ex-legiters on West 42d St. (now showing grind films) with a view to presenting the Lido de Paris revues as a legit attraction. By nature of these imported shows' spectacular requirements (icerink, swimmingpool and elevator stage equipment) it would have to be a theatre with elaborate backstage facilities.

The RKO Palace had been under discussion last year but it is a question whether this former two-a-day vaudeville flagship has the depth and size of stage required.

Dallas' Century Signs Soph for March Stand

Dallas, Nov. 1.

Joe Reichman has scheduled Sophie Tucker for the Century Room here March 9, to be followed by a new "Century's Ahead" revue. The latter show will run for 12 weeks.

The American Guild of Variety Artists is planning a dinner dance in honor of Miss Tucker during her local engagement. Tony Zoppi, Dallas News columnist, will serve as chairman of the affair.

New Paris Lido Show Bowing In Dec.; Few Changes

Paris, Nov. 1.

A new edition of the Lido show goes into rehearsal Nov. 12 for Dec. 12 debut. It requires little refurbishing since the show is still socko—biz ditto—and is not to be changed other than some new turns, such as The Nitwits, a second-time here; a replacement for the Kessler Twins, slated to return to Germany for a film; the re-importation of the new Bluebell line of girls (16) after almost two seasons in Las Vegas.

Duke Morrel, American juvenile singer, will also be added, as will Gino Donati & Partner, the operatic-comedy act, making its Paris debut; the return of juggler Eric Brenn; the addition of U.S. ice-skater Arnold Shoda, first time here; and Eddie Seifert & Co., triple contorionists who do their stuff in unison, and who are being groomed here with an eye to being reexported to Vegas next year.

American stager Don Arden is due here to refurbish the show. Rene Fraday, who brought over the new Vegas show to the States, is also coming back here to supervise the production as he usually does, along with Pierre Louis-Guerin.

Tillstrom's Kuklapolitans Pitch Witty Puppetry In B'way Bow at $5.90 Top

Puppeteer Burr Tillstrom, who's Kuklapolitans emerged from the salad days of Chicago video 13 years ago to a decade of prominence in national tv, opened on Broadway Monday night (31).

Mainstem setting for Tillstrom production of "Kukla, Burr & Ollie" is the old Emerald room of the Astor Hotel, rigged with 208 straight-back chairs, piano and puppet stage a little more elaborate than the one familiar to the Kuklapolitan's tv following. Show is set to run Wednesdays through Sundays with Saturday and Sunday matinees for the kids. Scale for Wednesday and Thursday nights is $4.80 and $3.35, Friday through Sunday, $5.90 and $3.95; and matinees, $3.35 and $2.50.

There's a question whether the adult following of the Kuklapolitans is large enough to sustain the sophisticated, but nonetheless light, entertainment of the spread at the steep price scale. There's less doubt about the matinees—parents should be dragging the kids in.

The premiere clearly indicates that Kukla, Oliver J. Dragon and the rest of Tillstrom's puppet clan have lost none of the charm and warm wit that carried them for a tv decade. Two-hour show is much like the tv outings (a 15-minute ABC-TV strip in the last days), with possibly less free wheeling ad lib and a touch more sophistication. Featured besides Kukla and Ollie are all the old hands exhibiting all the old personality traits: Mme. Ophelia Oogleplus, Fletcher Rabbit, Mr. Cecil Bill, Beulah Witch, Dolores Dragon, Col. R. H. Crackle and Prown Crince.

In the first of two acts, the puppets are re-introduced in familiar bits and songs. Second act is a zaney presentation of "St. George and the Dragon" as the Kuklapolitans would be expected to lay it out.

Actress Claiborn Cary has ably replaced Fran Allison, the Kuklapolitans outfront foil and song stress. Her appearance in the preem were relatively brief.

Show's musical director is George Bauer with songs (old and new) by Jack Fascinato and Caesar Giovannini. Decor is by William Ritman. Bill.

Cleveland B.O. Slump Cues Windup Of Show Policy at Hilton Statler Room

Cleveland, Nov. 1.

Hilton Statler hotel is dropping its dance band and stage show policy Saturday (5) when Sammy Watkins' orch cuts short its scheduled winter engagement in the Terrace Room.

Final acts in room were Lauri Franks and Bill Boehm, teamed up in a series of show-tune pop concerts. They closed Saturday (29) after nearly a two month experiment that did not jell.

Hotel's general manager Fletcher Brumit said retrenchment policy was necessary in dropping entertainment and turning the room into a straight dining operation. When biz recovers from current nosedive, which is hitting most hotels, theatres and niteries here, it was hinted that the Hilton-Statler would reinstate live music plus intimate acts.

Only downtown Cleveland club now making a good showing with variety revues is Herman Pirchner's Alpine Village. It still showcases two-to-three act revues with Gene Riddle's six piece orch. Currently headlining is La Plata Sextet and Bob McFadden. Pirchner is inking such names as Nelson Eddy and Gayle Sherwood for Feb. 20 week.

Unless Censor Relents, Folies May Skip Mexico

Mexico City, Nov. 1.

Plans to bring the Folies Bergeres here may founder over the nudity question. Local censors have turned thumbs down on exposure of French showgirls' charms from the waist up.

Meantime, a rep of the Folies is trying to convince authorities that nudity is a necessary adjunct of the extravaganza. When the girls cover up, he claims, the show loses 75% of its "zest and appeal."

If the Mexican officials insist upon a "cover up" ukase the show may bypass Mexico. Original plans called for theatre, tv and film work during the unit's run here.

Danny Thomas On Benefit Bills In Memph, Dallas

Memphis, Nov. 1.

Danny Thomas and an all-star amateur talent show wrapped up a convention held here last week by ALSAC (American Lebanese Syrian Associated Charities) for the primary benefit of the St. Jude hospital now under construction. Thomas had the audience of 2,500 at the Auditorium in his palm with a 20-minute stint from his nitery repertoire.

Joe Karem, a Louisville singer, copped top honors in the Thomas talent show with "Fascination." Elizabeth Bedree, 14-year-old songstress from Fort Wayne, Ind., was runner-up with "Why I Am Happy." Doug Johns, a Lansing, Mich., singer-drummer-dancer, finished third.

Several pros worked cuffo for the benefit. They were headed by tv performer Toby David who planed here from Detroit to emcee the three-hour show. His was a masterful chore. Banjoist Eddie Collins scored with his strumming. Walter Popp, Thomas' music director for his weekly tv stint, briskly led the local Nate Evans pit band. Matt.

Thomas' Dallas Benefit

Dallas, Nov. 1.

Danny Thomas performs here Saturday (5) at the Statler-Hilton ballroom, at $25 per head, in a fund-raising benefit for his pet charity, the new St. Jude Hospital in Memphis, Tenn. The $4,000,000 hospital is now under construction and Thomas is making several personal appearances to ease the cost.

He's expected to have assistance on his show by personal appearances of Linda Darnell, Joe E. Lewis and Shelley Berman, all playing here at the same time.

Marlene's 57G, Toronto

Toronto, Nov. 1.

Marlene Dietrich's International Revue did a solid $57,000 at the O'Keefe Theatre here last week. Theatre has a $65,000 potential.

Biz picked up at the end of the week, going 95% capacity Saturday night (29).

Manager Builds Stable

Chicago, Nov. 1.

Frank Fried, who manages the Gateway Singers, has set two other musical groups for personal management—the Three Reeds, a jazz harmonica trio, and Ernie Sheldon and the Villagers, latter recently pacted by Columbia Records.

Sheldon formerly sang with the Gateways.

Ben-Hur Horses, Rodeo Events Put K.C. Livestock Show $21,000 in Black

Kansas City, Nov. 1.

The American Royal Livestock & Horse Show, a modified mardi gras for mid-America farmers, socialites and in betweens, broke turnstile records this year in its weeklong run, recently completed here.

According to Jay B. Dillingham, president, paid attendance hit the 121,000 mark, some 8,000 more than previously recorded. The fall extravaganza expects to clean up its books somewhere in the neighborhood of $21,000 to the good.

Fresh entertainment attractions were credited with providing a big part of the boost. The "Ben-Hur" horses were a notable draw as were Lynn Randall and dressage horse, "Top Hat." The Culver Black Horse Lancers did well as did the Osage-Pawnee Indian Dancers, the Wilson Clydesdale Horses and several other annual events including the Rodeo Kids, special pony classes, a cutting horse contest and cowgirl barrel races.

Herb Shriner Extends 'Pops Americana' Tour

"Pops Americana," a unit headed by Herb Shriner which has been touring the south in one-night stands, may make periodic appearances throughout the country in the next few years. Shriner's decision to prolong the original 30-day swing was prompted by fancy biz in the group's initial dates.

Show comprises the Concert Orchestra Americana, directed by Gustave Haenschen; balladeer George Alexander, the New World Singers, and Shriner who acts as host, narrator and monologist. Tour opened in Jacksonville, N.C., then played Pensacola, Fla.; El Dorado, Ark.; Shreveport, La., and Austin, Tex.

Woodbury Joins Comics' Swing To Concert Trail

Cleveland, Nov. 1.

Woody Woodbury, nitery comedian, is making the leap to concert stages a la Shelley Berman and Mort Sahl with the help of a couple of Clevelanders. Promoters of one-man concert show at Public Music Hall are Scane Bowler and Richard Lezius, owners of Bahama Hotel in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., where Woodbury has been its top drawing-card for four years.

Bowler, an attorney, and Lezius, a printing company exec, previously arranged several engagements here for the comic. He played a couple of two-week stands at local Tudor Arms Hotel's Empress Room in last two seasons, as well as private shows at Cleveland Athletic Club. They all pulled such boffo crowds that backers figured he was strong enough for a concert bow.

Singing pianist-satirist usually wears red wool shirt, unpressed slacks and an old Marine fatigue cap.

His live nitery shows were taped by StereOddities label in disk albums that landed on best-selling charts.

Judy Mops Up Again in Paris

Paris, Nov. 1.

Judy Garland, who scored in two concerts at the outsize Palais De Chaillot Oct. 7-8, came back for a return engagement at the Olympia Music Hall Oct. 28 and 29. She paid off in top biz in a house pegged to a more wieldy $2 minimum and $5 top as compared to the $10 top before.

Miss Garland was more at ease in the better acoustics and warmer atmosphere of the Olympia. Musical pix are limited here and her disks are know mainly to specialists so her success was strictly on her boff talents which overcome lingo differences. She was previ usly to do a week with vaude acts at the Olympia but this changed to one-man concerts. Harry Rubenstein and Bruno Coquatrix handled her stay here.

MEX UNIONS PROTEST BAN ON ACTS, TOOTERS

Mexico City, Nov. 1.

A recent unexpected decree by the Office of Public Entertainments and city licensing authorities prohibiting presentation of variety acts and musicians in bars and restaurants is unpopular in entertainment circles.

Both the Mexican Musicians Union and the National Assn. of Actors are studying the matter. They argue that the city's suppression causes "hardship" to artists and musicians who have specialized in the bar-restaurant circuit.

The Entertainments Office issued the ban because of an upsurge of variety into bars and restaurants, with these not having night club licensing. But there may be an about face, with officials permitting at least piano and musical duos.

Portland Preems New 9,000-Seat Coliseum; Ice Show as Kickoffer

Portland, Ore., Nov. 1.

Portland's new multi-million dollar Memorial Coliseum will preem on schedule Thurs. (3) with "Holiday On Ice of 1961." Ultra modern plant is designed for large and small events. Structure has a huge arena with many varied size halls with glass exterior walls.

The entire building is air-conditioned and installed with the latest lighting, sound, stage and kitchen equipment. Much needed layout puts this town in a position to grab conventions, shows, rodeos, etc. Arena facility includes 9,000 permanent theatre seats with risers and ramps swelling the seating to 13,500 for certain events.

On a 22-acre site five minutes from the city center, the Coliseum has parking for 2,000 cars. Manager Don Jewell has already inked "Holiday On Ice." Home Show, "Ice Follies," Shrine Circus, Scout Circus, Kennel Club Show, Motor Show, Sports & Beat Show, Ringling Bros. Circus, Golden Gloves Tournament, and many conventions.

U. of Portland will use the spot for its home basketball games. Portland Ice Hockey Club games will also be held there. Many different attractions can be working at the same time without interfering with each other. With the Portland-Sheraton completed and the new 23 story Hilton Hotel under construction, there will be adequate housing facilities in the area.

The City will continue to operat the 3,600 seat Auditorium for plays, stage shows, symphony, ballet, and more intimate type outings. The 3,400 seat Paramount Theatre also houses stage shows, vauders, and concerts. The Memorial Coliseum opening only after a long drawn out hassle regarding its location.

Study Cal.'s 'No-Mixing' Law at AGVA Meeting

Hollywood, Nov. 1.

The local branch of the American Guild of Variety Artists has invited representatives from the Alcohol Beverage Control, Sheriff's Dept. and L.A. Police Dept. to attend and their Nov. 9 membership meeting to discuss the "no-mixing" law between nitery entertainers and patrons.

Each of the law enforcement speakers will define the "no-mixing" ordinance from their individual departments' viewpoint and will discuss the consequences that violators are subject to. AGVA earlier this month tightened its original ruling on "no-mixing" by injecting a more stringent by-law into its charter.

Ringling Biz Off in Milw.; Show Balks at Parade Fee, Tiger Rips Handler

Milwaukee, Nov. 1.

Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus stand here last week was marred by an accident when animal handler Roy E. Smith was mauled by a tiger. He's in serious condition at a local hospital suffering from a mangled arm.

Prior to the show's opening, city police refused to grant Ringling officials a permit to march the elephants and horses through the streets in the daytime on grounds that such a movement constituted a parade which required a $750 license. When circus brass balked at the fee, the pachyderms and menageri were marched after midnight.

First two performances on Wed. (26) pulled 2,138 patrons according to Ringling spokesmen. Biz improved at the weekend. However,

Berman Big in Denver

Denver, Nov. 1.

Shelley Berman pulled solid business here in his two-night stand at the Denver Municipal Auditorium over the weekend (29-30). It was a near advance sellout for both performances despite the fact that he was bucking a locally organized folk music festival.

In Minneapolis, on Oct. 21, Berman played the 3,509 seat Auditorium Concert Bowl and grossed $8,600, considered very good because of the lowered seat prices for university students ($3 as against $4 top).

New Acts

MARGARITA & CLARK ALLEN
Songs, Dancing
30 Mins.
Downstairs at the Upstairs, N. Y.

Guitarist-balladeer Clark Allen is personable and his wife, actress-dancer Margarita Cordova, is a looker. That's a good combination for any act. Both are also okay at their jobs. But, although likeable in their current New York debut at Julius Monk's Downstairs at the Upstairs, they're not particularly outstanding.

It could be that Allen's folksong selection lacks a powerhouse item. The numbers offered are pleasant and nicely executed and the introductory patter for the songs contributes to establishing a friendly climate. Included in the variety of tunes delivered by Allen is "John Henry," which is one of the ballads sung by him on the road and on Broadway while appearing in the recently-closed "World of Carl Sandburg."

About the first 20 minutes of the act are taken up by Allen alone. Then his wife comes on with the accent switching from song to dance. The terp segment includes a couple of flamenco numbers and a gypsy routine, in which the distaffer shows up well, especially considering the limitations of the thumbnail stage.

The Allens have previously appeared in Frisco and other locations, including Paris. The program for the Downstairs engagement was staged by Monk. Incidentally, Allen is occasionally abetted in his guitar-vocal delivery by piano accompanist. Besides the Downstairs presentation, Monk is continuing to pack 'em in on the floor above for the latest in his series of Upstairs revues, "Dressed to the Mines." Jess.

CHICO RANDALL TRIO
Vocal, Instrumental
25 Mins.
Composer-East, N. Y.

In the relationship of talent to experience, young pianist Chico Randall and his ryhthm backers are well ahead of the game. Randall graduated from college in New Jersey last spring and has spent the summer months touring the stix lounges and niteries. Holding the second spot on the new Composer-East bill, they are showing enough polish in their pop and semi-jazz offerings to stay in business for a good while, especially with the demand for piano-bass-drum groups for between-acts fill.

Randall's vocals are hampered by imitation, both style and arrangement. He's from the Si tra school of phrasing, and mimics (with credit) the arrangements behind current disclick vocals. Aud seems to dig the famili swipes, however, and the kids can probably take their time about working up an original style and book. Ronald Naspo is on drums, John Dentz on bass. Bill.

JACK JONES
Songs
20 Mins.
Ye Little Club, BevHills

Along came Jones (Jack) to headline current show with holdover Sally (Jones) at this boite. The young baritone looks to be a good bet for legit musicals. He has the voice, looks, physique and natural ease while performing. Further, he has poise and pro-manship.

With his mother (Irene Harvey) ringside, the son of Allan Jones warbled "Welcome To The Club," a medley from "Guys And Dolls," "Start of Something Big" and "Joey." Even in this early stage of career Jones exhibits a potential that can escalator him to the bigtime.

Miss Jones (no relation), offbeat chirp with pixie hairdo and contagious smile, warbles such as "Beat Of My Heart." She looks a good jazz bet for some disk label. Show holds weeks, with options. Kafa.

DONALD VAN WERT & PHILIP HERBERT
Songs
40 Mins.
Black Angus, Boston

Donald Van Wart, an '88'er of note in the cocktail lounge and intimery circuit from the Cape to Bermuda, is comboing with Philip Herbert, calypso specialist and drum man, in an act that proves islandic rhythms are still capable of drawing good audiences. Van Wart plays to a room holding 70, skillfully setting a mood with showtunes done in chacha, meringue and similar tempos, and brings on his Virgin Islands discovery, Herbert, for duets. Most notable of these are "Chico's Choo-Choo," humorous tale in chacha of a hip locomotive engineer, and an offbeat version of "Mary Ann," reprising the hit of three years back. Van Wart, a musico-raconteur in the Fiskian tradition, turns it over to Herbert vocally.

Herbert roams the room with Belafonte-styled pieces, "Jamaica Farewell," "I Have Never Seen Snow." His voice has a husky timbre and he a sensitive approach identifying himself with i timer aud by placing hand on shoulder of various habitues of the piano bar for good effect. Act is geared for theatre-restaurant situations. Guy.

rounded up by th L. A. police. Two of the three have records of arrests for narcotics battery, burglary, assault with deadly weapon and grand theft auto. No arrests were made and the "troopers" were released and sent home.

Davis' second night was marked by a number of phone threats made to the theatre manager. Unknown callers said: "Heil Hitler, we're going to blow up the place." The L. A. police department was again alerted. No pickets showed. Ironically most of the house was bought out by a mental health organization.

House Reviews

Apollo, N. Y.

Jewel Box Revue, "25 Men and a Girl," Reuben Phillips Band; "House Haunted Hill (AA).

This abundant package of femme impersonators, is having another phenomenal run at Harlem's lone vaudery signaled by a current holdover frame. Show is in after a tour of niteries around the country and will move soon into Ben Maksik's Town & Country, Brooklyn, where it's had several smash engagements.

This reviewer would have to consult a psychiatrist before trying to figure out the repeat appeal of the drag spread. From a show biz standpoint, it has several routine production numbers made flashy by lavish costuming and chorus-boy terp skill. But the singles, with two notable exceptions, couldn't make it outside the tomboy hangouts. Exceptions are headliner Lynn Carter's excellent impresh of Pearl Bailey, and the he-she billed as Billy Day, who does an unusually accurate takeoff on blues singer Billie Holiday.

Otherwise the falsetto chirpers are flat in more than one respect, and the terp solos are hardly spectacular. Chorus line has a tendency to mincing even when doing the masculine bit.

There's occasional vulgarity in speech and gestures (a Charlestoning chick's pants fall off, and so on) that's strictly for rednecks. It may knock 'em out in Yucksville, however.

Apollo aud at show caught reacted warmly to talent displays and enthusiastically to some of the better production numbers, including a colorful "Can-Can" and "Six Bullfighters and a Lady."

Reuben Phillip's band, playing the pit this time, shows versatility beyond the usual pop jazz and r&r backing, with fine interpretations of some of the big production scores.

The one girl in the show turns out to be emcee-vocalist, "Stormy," who's appeared throughout with a confounding man's haircut, three-button suit, and very masculine set of pipes. Bill

Bobino, Paris

Paris, Oct. 22.

Colette Renard, Claude Vega, Silvana Blasi, Al Kemble & Partner; Sid Plummer, Roger Marino, Bernard Stephane, Steve Hawkins; $1.50 top.

Colette Renard has a sharp, bright face and a solidly planted chassis and gives out street songs and laments with directness, feeling and power. There is no levity in her routine but an innate earthy awareness. Humor sometimes bubbles up to create pathos, depth and solidity in her act aided by her expertly chosen songs.

Edith Piaf is now much improved and is soon to sing again, but it is apparent that Miss Renard will be her eventual successor. In fact, Miss Piaf has named her so. Miss Renard's voice is not as big, but has the same true, piercing timbre which gives all her songs an insight and understanding that slant her ready for Yank chances.

Miss Renard is ably assisted by Raymond Legrand's fine arrangements and ability to baton an ordinary house orch into a good accomp setup. She looms the most national, and therefore a probable international, dramatic chantoosy to come from France since the war. This two-week program is in for biz.

Claude Vega is a good mimic of noted personalities, with good material to match, but somewhat strains his impressions of grumpy grandfathers, Mexican singers, etc. Sid Plummer has a breakaway xylophone and a breezy aplomb that make this oldtime act natural in this nabe house and he is for big mitts.

Silvana Blasi moans torchy and naughty songs in an offkey forced voice, and her quaint and cute mugging does not help. She is strictly filler fare, if that.

Al Kemble & Partner essay a deft, comic interlude of pratfalls, clowning and fine acrobatics and unicycle riding. Steve Hawkins is an expert balancer on a large ball with a stick affixed. Both exceptional fillers.

Roger Marino does a mime bit as a conductor of an imaginary classical orch. Mugging and timing are perfect and this is a fine offbeater in for yocks.

Bernard Stephane is a new singer with okay poise and a pleasant voice. But he needs plenty of roadwork and more mike presence, plus more meaty songs. As is, he displays a good voice and could emerge a good orch singer or filler. Mosk.

One-Man Show

An Evening With Sammy Davis Jr.

Hollywood, Oct. 25.

Will Mastin Trio presentation of a revue starring Sammy Davis Jr. Features Bob Melvin, Hal Loman Dancers. Supervised by Will Mastin; staged by Macklin Megley; choreography, Hal Loman; musical arrangements, Morton Stevens; conductor, George Rhodes. Opened Oct. 25 at Huntington Hartford Theatre, Hollywood. $6.50 top.

Having conquered every entertainment media but the concert stage and perhaps rodeos, Sammy Davis Jr. must look to the horsey set for his next theatrical breakthrough. The concert stage, taken for the first time Tuesday (25) in "An Evening With Sammy Davis Jr.," is his. It is one of the Huntington Hartford's strongest bookings in years.

It was clear to the "in" crowd on opening night that Davis had looked forward to this evening. Maybe it was the first time in front of an audience that he didn't have to stick to the lines, do two shows or hustle off so the gamblers could return to the tables.

He reflected several times on the length of the show ("we'll try to trim, but I don't think we'll succeed") but the first night trickled only 15 minutes beyond the proposed 11:15 deadline. Davis need not worry so much about time; no one was about to leave, and it's doubtful anyone wanted to.

Show is built around a joke, a small lie about Davis doing a one-man show. It would be just that were it not for 23 musicians, 10 dancers and an excellent comic, Bob Melvin, all of whom are integrated tastefully. The dancers are fine looking youngsters who add zest both with the star and without him, and the musicians provide a strong swinging sound. Melvin, who works with Davis on the nitery circuit, is a master comedian, a classy comic with top material and delivery.

Davis has to prove his talent to no one, and he comes across the footlights with the same excitement as he does across the ringside tables. His voice, feet sense of humor and timing, his ability to do the right thing at the right time, his audience contact and sustaining power all boil into stunning entertainment. He's an unbeatable, indefatigable performer with a giant talent.

Twenty songs, a half dozen dances and impersonations and here-and-there remarks constitute the well-balanced show. Second half is gleaned from any of Davis' five night club acts. First half contains some that is familiar, much that's new. Performer is fine in a Levi'd, tee-shirted audition routine and strong with "Ol' Man River," a selection which won him long applause from all and a standing ovation from many.

Macklin Megley staged the show and has added some fine effects. Hal Loman's choreography is tops, as are Morton Stevens' musical arrangements and George Rhodes' conducting. Production is supervised by Will Mastin and presented by the Will Mastin Trio.

"An Evening With Sammy Davis Jr., a well spent affair if ever there was one, remains at the Huntington Hartford for three weeks, then moves to San Francisco for a fortnight. It's a winner. Ron.

'18 and Anxious'

Pittsburgh, Nov. 1.

Beverly Aadland, now 18 and able to work in bistros, opened last night (Mon.) at the Town House here to fill an engagement she had signed for last year before she got in trouble with California courts.

She is in on her original contract.

Teresa Brewer, Larry Daniels, Freddy Martin orch (17); $2.50-$3 cover.

If the Cocoanut Grove doesn't pull in a steady flow of spenders during current two-week engagement of Teresa Brewer, blame it on the seasonal slump. Certainly not on this petite singer.

Miss Brewer has a sparkling act that's ship-shape from the moment she uncorks her turn with a good "Ridin' High" vocal to a finale of kicking up her heels like one of the Rockettes. This little gal's vocal sound is strictly big league calibre. She can belt loud or soft. This, along with some nifty terping while physically appearing to be a pixieish 16-year-old, adds up to the ingredients of a multiple-vitamin. She's certainly energetic.

Singer's turn is a natural-for the tourists who throng this spot. She pleases with a medley of old tunes that gives the oldsters their moment of nostalgia: "Light of the Silvery Moon," "Harvest Moon," "Robert E. Lee," "Last Night On Back Porch."

Her act is enhanced by several costume changes that uncover a cute colleen warbling "Rosie O'Grady" to a cut at being a shapely sailor. Chirp is abetted by four young men (Terrytones) who give her act vocal and pedal backing.

Sub-billed, Larry Daniels is standup funnyman who won't ring bells with the hipsters but comes across okay for the general public. His material, though limited for yocks, at least is clean. Lines like "Dick Clark is to teenagers what Jimmy Hoffa is to the teamsters" were baited properly, to draw response. His gimmick of employing a soundtrack is good, as he thus can turn on canned laughs and applause.

Freddy Martin's orch (17), per usual, was tempo'd to keep the floor busy and the acts moving.

Next: Jane Morgan and Myron Cohen, Nov. 9. Kaia.

Statler Hilton, Boston

Boston, Oct. 27.

"Salute to Oscar Hammerstein," Roy Newman production; directed by Lee Daniels; with Show Toppers (8); Ron Brandt, Mary Bradley, Gene Bigelow, Lorie Walsh, Roberto Sorbello, Frank Schultz, Sammy Dale Orch (10), Jay White Quartet; $2 cover.

This salute to the late Oscar Hammerstein 2d comes up with some of the less known of his works. The talented Show Toppers, three lads and three femmes, give out with things like "Dat's Love," "Dere's a Cafe," and "Stand Up and Fight," which he did for "Carmen Jones." Also they have integrated some Kern melodies, "Sunny," "Last Time I Saw Paris," "I've Told Every Little Star." Bulk of the warbling, however, falls on the Richard Rodgers tunes, and Lee Daniels has made their presentation different by having duets sung where solos usually are.

For instance, he has "I Can't Say No" sung as a duet by pert soprano Lorie Walsh and contralto Roberto Sorbello. Group runs through 10 numbers in a snazzily presented 40-minute stint, winding up with "Shall We Dance" in which they waltz around the stage for nice effect. In the numbers, both male and femme are posted around the room, singing from the corners and posts for intimate effect. Ron Brandt is a versatile baritone; Gene Bigelow, a lyric baritone, and Ron Brandt is a versatile baritone. The three get together with fine vocal effects on "There's Nothing Like a Dame." This continues the Terrace Room's salutes to various composers format.

Copa Lounge, N. Y.

Joanie, Johnny & Hal, Glen Covington Trio; no cover or minimum.

Joanie, Johnny and Hal, the new trio at the Copa Lounge, make a visit to Jules Podell's upstairs emporium well worthwhile. This is an energetic and talented group, equally at home with smooth ballads, jump tunes, and novelty numbers. And the gal and two guys perform as if they're enjoying what they are doing. Too often lounge performers, not sure if the bar-and-table imbibers are listening, tend to be lackadaisical.

But such is not the case with Joanie, Johnny & Hal. The lads, one at the electric guitar and the other at the piano, provide the accompaniment and also take turns at singing. Each member of the group gets a chance to solo. At other moments, they join for duets or for ensemble numbers. There is also a non-singing drummer with the team.

Joanie is a vivacious and pert lass who contributes notably even when she's not singing. She's a bundle of energy with her rhythmic handclapping and stomping. All have good voice and give each tune the proper shading. There's not a dull moment in their 45-minute stint.

Alternating with Joanie, Johnny & Hal is the Glen Covington trio. Covington is practically a perennial at the Lounge and he continues to make a strong impression with his singing and '88ing.

Eddys', K. C.

Kansas City, Oct. 28.

Buddy Lester, Linda Merrill, Billy Williams Orch (6); $1.50-$2 cover.

Funnyman Buddy Lester is back at Eddys' after a lapse of several years, and is making an amusing evening of it. With him is Chi thrush Linda Merrill to help round out a bill that runs 75 minutes, most of it Lester's.

It's possibly a bit long at this rate, but should sift out to a better packed hour for the rest of the date. Miss Merrill's songs set up the house for Lester's line of laughs, and the combo proves entertaining throughout.

In her songalong Miss Merrill displays a fine voice on a folio of standards, some sh w biz impressions, a special bit or two and a closing spiritual. Personable and attractive, she paces her songs well. Tunes are also suitably varied to hold the house on her signal throughout her quarter hour.

Lester covers most everything in the textbook of comedy chatter, with a few appendices of his own. His chatter hits pointedly upon "Ocean's 11," Vegas, tv, Bea Lillie, and a chance ringsider gets a buss in the proceedings. Lester's hat bit makes for a flock of quick take one-liners, as well as some chuckle rousing imitations.

As a song and dance man he gets off a fine bit of vaude nostalgia in an applause-winning soft shoe, and his "musical treat" on the cornet is effective for closing on the laugh note. The whole hour is a chain of laughs, much to the liking of patrons and owners.

Show holds through Nov. 10. Quig.

Imperial, Atlanta

Atlanta, Oct. 11.

Tokye Trio, Lynn Gordon, Frankie St. Claire, Kandy Kane, Ray Binney, Vegas Corer Girls (4), Rayettes (5), Freddie Azar orch (4); $4 minimum, plus tax.

For years Ray Binney has been bringing his dancing Rayettes, a line of shapely, nimble gals, to Chick Hedrick's Domino Lounge in the Imperial Hotel. Now he's built a unit around them and they are pleasing the customers at this spot.

Billed as "Night in Vegas," the revue is given a gambling setting, such as huge playing cards, built to revolve and studded with electric bulbs. It's a tight squeeze to get all the props on Domino's tiny stage, but the performers manage to get on and off without casualties.

Binney's company of 12 includes Kandy Kane, who is an "added attraction." Her somewhat silly strip adds little to the show. Domino's clientele is accustomed to at least one exotic per bill and Hedrick is following style.

Binney's revue is a swifty. It runs 55 minutes with something going on at all times, ranging from production numbers with Japanese motif to a jazz specialty by all girls in the show with torso twisting for good measure.

Frankie St. Claire, who records under Calico label (an erstwhile Mercury disker under name of Frankie Castro) sings five tunes opening with "The Way You Looked Tonight." Youngster has a pleasing, strong voice and merits the applause he gets.

Binney put this show together four months ago in St. Petersburg, Fla. It's a well mounted unit and strong on the talent side. His stint is a terp turn with Lynn Gordon, a blonde looker.

Most of the music for the session is original tunes by Lindsay Meehan. Lucc.

Flame Room, Mpls.

Minneapolis, Oct. 24.

Jan Morgan with Laurence Stith and Bob Alberti, Clair Perreau orch (7); $2-$2.50 cover.

Platinum-blond Jane Morgan looks and sounds like pure gold for Guy Lombardo, Flame Room boniface, this session. She can add class to the toniest nitery, and she supplies it in ample quantity for the Hotel Radisson bistro which is plenty classy in its own right.

It's hard to see how a performer could pack more entertainment into a night club routine than Miss Morgan does. Whether she's singing her own specialty numbers, warbling in French or harmonizing on Gay '90s melodies with her husband, tenor Laurence Stith, Miss Morgan dishes out good, solid fun. Her looks and gowns are strictly on the plus side, too.

Most appealing is her medley of Parisian ballads. These contrast nicely with several strictly-American tunes, such as "Yellow Rose of Texas" and "Davey Crockett," which she also sings in French. Her takeoff on Lillian Russell, teaming with Stith in a medley of oldtime faves, draws more heavy mitting as do "The Day That the Rains Came Down" and "Fascination," two of her Kapp record hits.

Pianist-director Bob Alberti gets more attention than most accompanists and does a nifty job, particularly with an interlude of ragtime piano. Clair Perreau's orchestra is also adept backing the vocalists.

Miss Morgan and company continue here through Nov. 5 with Betty Johnson following for two weeks. Rees.

Sovereign Club, Dallas

Dallas, Oct. 14.

"Sticks 'n' Stones" revue, co-produced by Breck Wall and Joe Peterson; choreography, John Waldrop; costumes, Meredee; musical arrangements, Tom Merrim; sketches and lyrics by Bill Fanning, Jerry Herman, Elisse Boyd, Edward Redding, Bob Bernstein; music by Rich Bono Trio; features Wall, Fanning, Gerry Johnson, Angie Procter, Jo Seiwert; no cover or minimum.

Success of locally-produced intime revues is established and this new one by producers Breck Wall and Joe Peterson is no exception. Smart, topical sketches breathe life into this setup and the able cast plays it for top response.

First act of the risible show embraces skeiches, including "Follow the Leader," with Wall and Misses Procter and Seiwert; "Maria," by Gerry Johnson; the three lovely distaffers in a hilarious song-and-dance bit, "Three Famous Queens of the Nile," and Fanning in a man-about-town bit, "Miss Williams, It's Time to Go Home."

Second act has the girl trio, in colorful costumes, doing "Salesmanship." Fanning, as a rube in overalls, checks with his comedy song and dance, "Ready Tied Tie." The entire cast of the swiftly-paced revue is on with a solid clincher, "Jefferson Davis Tyler's General Store" for lusty applause.

There's a parody of a tv interview show, with overtones not for kids, followed by a slick segment, "where Are Your Children Tonight?". The revue winds with Miss Seiwert's fine impression of a tipsy Cinderella.

Revue, neatly backed by the Rich Bono Trio, is in for six weeks. Bark.

Leb's Pigalle, Atlanta

Atlanta, Oct. 26.

Elie Barsion, Can-Can Girls (3), Johnny Carnes, Helen Green, Loretta Warren; Kenny Mason, Ruby Russell; $2.50 minimum.

Located in a veritable cave under Charlie Leb's Restaurant in downtown Atlanta, this spot, to the uninitiate, comes close to being an authentic bit of Gay Paree in the heart of the city. Elie Barsion, Greek-born and raised in Italy, has captured the atmosphere of the French capital's Pigalle sector, with Montparnasse and Montmartre overtones.

In this setting Barsion has assembled a swift, 40-minute "French Revue." Despite its title the production also includes an Irish tenor singing "A Little Bit of Heaven," and "Danny Boy" while the Can-Can Girls double as hula dancers. It adds up to strictly informal entertainment, with Barsion as emcee and the customers getting into the show.

Barsion and tenor Johnny Carnes (who doubles as drummer) get the bill underway with English and French versions of "Pigalle." Chanteuse Helen Green chirps "Poor People of Paris" while Loretta Warren follows with a solo ballet to Chopin's "Nocturne."

Miss Green and Barsion return to warble several Continental airs. Bassist Kenny Mason and pianist Ruby Russell handle the musical chores. Finale has performers and patrons marching around the room to "McNamara's Band"—a fitting (?) finish for a French revue. Lucc.

Chi Chi, Palm Springs

Mary Meade French, Ray Hastin, Paul & Paulette, Bill Alexander's Orch (5); $2.50 minimum.

After being closed all summ for alterations, the Starlite Room opened a month ago but the opening is still a greater secret than the drop of American prestige abroad. On the evening the current bill was caught there were 32 paying customers in a room that holds 750. This sort of beating has been going on night after night. There is no cover charge but a $2.50 minimum. On a cover charge the performers would be starving.

They're good performers, too. Not the best but good. Mary Meade French who splits star billing with Ray Hastings, a comic, is a gorgeous thrush. Her figure, costuming, voice and choice of material would be par for any course. She has a cute parody of "Halo, Everybody, Halo." She also does all right in French with "Pigalle" but her giggles and comedy involving a falling hair-do knocked several points off her performance.

As for Hastings, billed as eight times on the Jack Paar show, maybe it's a matter of timing. Maybe he isn't so good at 10 p.m. but is a riot at midnight. Maybe a full house would show him at his best. He tries hard, has a lively variety of material but he might have got more laughs among the grave diggers of Forest Lawn, for the simple reason there are more of them any night in the cemetery than there were live customers at the Chi Chi.

Show opens with Paul & Paulette, a trampoline act, and very good. Bill Alexander's band backstops okay. Scul.

Dorch'ter Hotel, London

London, Oct. 25.

Vic Oliver, Trio Capricho Espanol, Tommy Whittle and Albert Marland orchs; $6.50 minimum.

Though one of Britain's vet entertainers, Vic Oliver rarely treads the nitery circuit. His current outing at the Dorchester Hotel, where he's in for a four-week season, attracted a capacity audience on his opening night and he received a modest reception for his 20-minute stint.

Most of Oliver's act consists of comedy patter, but many of his jokes are oldies. Normally, his own personality is strong enough to rise above his material, but this time, despite an air of confidence, he is rather bogged down by it. His performance only comes to life when he brings out his fiddle and gives snippets of his own version of commercial jingles.

By far the liveliest part of the layout is the colorful and exotic dancing by the Trio Capricho Espanol, two girls and a boy from Spain, whose footwork is magnificent and whose castanets add to the exciting rhythm. Tony Whittle's dance orch gives the necessary backing to the performance, and takes excellent care of the extended dance time sessions, alternating on the dais with Albert Marland. Myro.

Eckstine Gets Repeat Booking at Basin St.

Billy Eckstine, currently headlining at Basin St. East, N. Y., has been signed for two repeats at that spot first of which is likely to occur during the Easter Holidays. Current stand is his first Manhattan cafe appearance in four years.

Eckstine is slated to follow this date with Gallaghers, Milwaukee, Nov. 4; Cloisters, Hollywood, Nov. 17. He recently signed for 16 weeks in three years for the Dunes, Las Vegas.

Living Room, N. Y.

James Komack, The Wanderers (4), Bobby Cole Trio, Bob Ferro Trio; $5.50 minimum.

The Living Room, that different type eastside spot, continues in the pop groove with this new lineup. Just how much it is clicking was attested to by the lines waiting to get in after the first show Thursday (27). Part of the layout was forced to work sans microphones (they went temporarily dead), but still managed to come through without too much straining. In fact, it gave Bobby Cole an opportunity to point up his versatility as a pianist in a jam ses

James Komack, given stellar billing, had no mike until his finale song, "You Gotta Have Heart." Des ite his protestations about not having the be efit of an amplifier, his gags and songs came off well. Comic does best with his Japanese routine about eastern type Westerner which he tabs "Maverlick."

Komack also clicks with his beatnik impersonations and gags. Could be built further. His fine voice, of course, helps him with his comedy bits. "House on 64th Street" song got a bit lost because of heckling from a tipsy patron.

Back here after absence of six months or more in Las Vegas and elsewhere on the Coast, the Bobby Cole Trio obviously is geared for future dates if only on Cole's piano gymnastics. Cole and his bass viol pl yer, Joe Senzo, both sing, but absence of workable mikes prompted Cole to fill in with more work on the 88's. This was all to the good.

The Wanderers, Negro quartet comprising Ray Pollard, Frank Joyner, Sheppard Grant and Robert Yarbrough, score solidly here. Somewhat reminiscent of the Mills Bros. and Ink Spots, this foursome is happiest when doing rousing tunes like "Saints Go Marching," "Fascination" or "Shadrack." Combo goes in for individual solos by the tenor and baritone to overshadow their close harmony. While this clicks nicely with this crowd, the quartet seems to be making a mistake with too much of it.

The combo fail treasure up with a Hebrew religioso number and "Whiffenpoof Song." However, thate's merely a matter of picking a repertoire. The four boys are great with "Autumn Leaves," and "Birth of Blues," latter built up with all stops out. Wear.

Interlude, Scottsdale

Scottsdale, Ariz., Oct. 29.

Arthur Blake with Russell Harding, Sid White, Lou Gardino Orch (7); $3 minimum.

This marks a first for Arthur Blake in these environs and a host of AWOL car salesmen, shingle hustlers and assorted other lammisters from L.A. now living in this vicinity, recalling his club dates at Hollywood's old Bar Of Music and Macombo, queued up precm night (28) to make his opener more than a moderate success. And they got their minimums worth.

The woods are full of impressionists but few are as inventive or dedicated to their trade as Blake. Whether scathingly satiring Louella Parsons or gently joshing Eleanor Roosevelt, the mime's stint displays balance and a snappy pace. Encoring his turn on established hallmarks, Blake impeccabley carbons Bette Davis, Barbara Stanwyck, Tallulah Bankhead, Jimmie Stewart, Alfred Hitchock, etc.

A go-for-broke experimenter, he updates his catalog with topical items. This is evident in his take-off of Bette Davis's treatment of Carl Sandberg's "Fog," ditto of Roz Russell's "Ant Mame," carbon of Katherine Hepburn emoting "Suddenly Last Summer" and young Russell Harding tenoring an offkey "You Stepped Out Of A Dream" to Blake's burlesque of a washed-up peeler.

His efforts earn yocks and potent palming aplenty but he fails in one respect—his stint tends to be too "inside show-biz." Many of his subtleties the hip Coastites and easterners would easily field but soar over the heads of the provincialites. Blake has a three-week date at Reve White's bistro.

Sid White opens the bill with a fine songalog. Lou Gardino's crew, having little to do during the show, are on hand supplying music for the ter s. Show closes Nov. 18. O'haf.

Harrah's, Lake Tahoe

Lake Tahoe, Oct. 24.

McGuire Sisters (3), with Burt Farber conducting, Jay Marshall, Dorben Dancers & Singers (16), Leighton Noble Orch (14), produced by Russ Hall; minimum.

After a two-year absence from the south shore of Lake Tahoe and Harrah's the McGuires are back with a top-league show that includes only a couple of titles from their past offerings, but gives the threesome a neat vehicle to display their click and varied song styling.

Manager-arranger Murray Kane has done a class job with the entire act, and proof is in the auditor reaction. With intro number a specially scripted "Together" to show the trio's togetherness, the 30-minute plus stint is off to an up-tempo beat, and holds the command for complete turn.

Girls do a short biog initialed with "Side By Side" that leads from a cute video audition in the subteen years to current date. Routine gives perfect chance for a bit of clowning, with Phyllis taking the initiative. She's also up front on a commendable impresh of Satchmo that displays a hard-to-belive carbon of Armstrong's husky pipes.

Other clicks include mimics of Rosemary Clooney and Eartha Kitt. Trio rate well for such "Hold That Tiger," "Muskrat Ramble," "Sincerely" and their identifiable Coke commercial. Also on the positive side is an impressive "Danny Boy."

For a part of the turn the sisters share the spot with the cute 12-year-old Kane Sisters, dressed and rehearsed as McGuire shadows—and they do the job to perfection. Younger three show much show biz savvy and the piping is more than okay. For a diversity in the McGuir book, they're a natural. And delightful.

Jay Marshall, not familiar to the local nitery set, scores immediately with his easy but effective chatter while making with the tricks with five metal interlocking rings and a large accordion-pleated sheet of colored paper he shapes into a variety of items. delivery is polished and the lines are clever. The breakaway golf club used in the opening minutes is unnecessary enhancement to Marshall's act, as the chit-chat at that point comes across strongly. Comic also wins approval with his gloved rabbit hand responding his ventriloquism.

The Dorothy Dorben Dancers and Singers (1 femmes, 4 fellows) open with a rousing football scene embellished with imaginative choreography and tasteful staging. As per usual, Leighton Noble and rch capably backstop entire show, and maitre d' Leon Harbert and crew provide the smooth service.

Town Casino, Buff

Buffalo, Oct. 28.

The Crosby Boys, Wells & 4 Fays, Heller & Helen, Everett E. Everett, Adorables (5), Moe Balsam orch (10); $1.50 minimum.

If this town's not wild about Harry—Harry Altman, that is—it certainly ught to be. In a time which is being euphemistically referred to as one of economic slippage, he has reopened th Town Casino for its 14th season with a projected lineu of lass ttractions.

For 14 years he's been in there pitching top talent across the hom plates. It has taken plenty of fortitude, but the spot has flourished notably. It's now generally recognized as one of the leading niteries and Altman is regarded as one of the foremost talent buyers of the nation, an achievement especially outstanding in this town where live stage offerings of any kind are practically ancient history.

When you consider that among the Casino's advertised upcoming attractions between now and Christmas are Andy Williams, Tony Bennett, Frankie Avalon, Connie Francis and Alan King, and that added to these are strong surrounding shows, a house chorus line, a 12 piece orchestra, organ, dancing and an excellent cuisine, the character of this operation is revealed.

Currently the Crosby Boys are in for their first local appearance. Their premiere performance was greeted by an enthusiastic audience which left the boys, the management and the patrons in a bright afterglow. These youngsters have warm personalized appeal from the nitery floor which is far more effective than their television showings where as of now they are perhaps better known. The fact augurs well for a solid future.

Interesting and attractive in appearance and demeanor, the Crosby clan background certainly does them no harm, although it may be remarked in passing that they are hardly dependent on it for their registering power. So far as poise and professional competence are concerned, they need no apologies from anyone because with growing experience they bid fair to be up there with the best.

The Crosby routines are admirably adapted to their fresh and youthful personalities. "Lovely Way to Spend an Evening" takes an ideal opener. Their harmonizing with "Grand Group You Are" and "Mam'selle," as well as a self-spoof, "We Ought to Dance," are both par excellence.

The peak of the evening is the finale comprising a nostalgic pastiche of Bing's better known numbers through the years. Withal, the Crosbys project a warm and gracious performance in the best of taste. Even the clow ing is sure-footed and on target.

The ballroomology of Heller & Helene is distinctly above average, the Wells and the 4 Fays contribute some spectacular acrobatics, and Everett E. Everett, although sometimes rough, works up to a loud reception with a zany pantomimic operatic stunt accompanied by recordings. The house line is attractively although sometimes scantily clad and the band Moe Balsam band is still on its longtime high beam.

Berns, Stockholm

Stockholm, Oct. 4.

Les Mains Joly (4), Jovita Luna (2), Original Binders (3), Berns' orchestra conducted by Bosse Rosendahl; $1 minimum.

French marionette turn of Les Mains Joly tops the October bill in this class Stockholm restaurant-cabaret. However, in using umbrellas instead of the customary dolls, th act fails to achieve the audience impact it should have gained. Gallic import unquestionably has a highly artistic routine, but it seems more suitable for showcasing in one of the city's small legit houses.

Jovita Luna, accomped by a guitarist, scores with a medley of South American A native of Buenos Aires, she came to Europe nine years ago on a two-months' tour and has been touring the Continent since then. Original Binders, a of Hungarians, click handily with their teeterboard routines. They're slated to play Las Vegas after their booking here.

Show is backed competently by th Berns orchestra, batoned by guest conductor Bosse Rosendahl. Wmq.

Riviera, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Oct. 25.

Patti Page, Rowan & Martin, Riviera Dancers (16), Jack Cathcart Orch (17); produced by Sammy Lewis; $4 minimum.

Patti Page, with Dan Rowan and Dick Martin extra added, provide a strong double-barreled attraction here, skedded for a li ited engagement.

Miss Page was in fine voice opening night when in her distinctive styling she offered such numbers as "Rolling Along," "Darktown Strutters Ball," "Hawaiian Wedding Song" and a medley of her discliсks. During part of the medley, she strolls through audience with a portable mike to good effect. Jack Elliott neatly guides the Jack Cathcart orch (17) during Miss Page's turn.

Rowan and Martin at first seemed overwhelmed by this room, which is twice as large as their usual Vegas showcase at the Sands. However, within seconds they had the packed first-night house with them; and held their audience securely all the way to bowoff. Fresh material has supplemented some of their classic routines, and with this the boys leave no doubt but they have arrived as one of the best comedy teams in the biz. Duke.

Palmer House, Chi

Chicago, Oct. 27.

Ken Murray, Marie Wilson, Leo Diamond, Rod Lauren, Ben Arden Orch (10); $2.50 cover.

The Ken Murray-Marie Wilson antics, second time around this swankery, are a virtual carbon of last year's, save for the addition of RCA-Victor disker Rod Lauren for his Chi bow.

Layout continues to play like a one-ring circus, with Murray as the smooth ringmaster, and if in all its parts there's no big kick, the sum nevertheless is a reasonable amusing hour or so. That Murray's humor is ancient and obvious is part of the charm, supposedly, though he come perilously close once or twice to downright crude purple. His amply-exposed inspiration, Miss Wilson, is a sort of saving grace thanks to the special innocent kookiness that's her stock in trade.

The pair rib Louis Prima and Keely Smith in a record and lip sync numoer that's a nice bit of absurd clowning; and Murray's show-opening kidding of the t spectrum via film clips is still a dependable laugh-getter.

Harmonicist Leo Diamond delivers some flashy effects and does some good-natured instrumental fracasing with the star. Lauren, a handsome youngster, displays a fine voice and considerable understanding, though he's not yet evolved his own style. Ben Arden's crew showbacks with usual flair.

Ann Marie Alberghetti opens Dec. 1. Pit.

Ciro's, Los Angeles

Miriam Makeba, Tommy Roberts, Evelyn Freeman Trio, Brian Farnon orch (6); $2.50 cover, no minimum.

There's a novelty appeal to Miriam Makeba, sepia singer from South Africa, but she appears to be a better entry for the intimate rooms than for th large rooms like Ciro's.

She's very slim, wears her hair tight against her head—making her look boyish—and was dressed opening night in a tasteful costume resembling a sari. Most startling vocal characteristic is what linguists call a glottal stop—a popping or clicking sound made in the throat—which is apparently a peculiarity of the Xoso dialect in which she sings. (The "X" in that word is the English representation of the sound our alphabet can't spell).

Harry Belafonte's protege, and also a Victor recording pactee, Miss Makeba shows the effects of the calypso master's training, possibly to the detriment of the African material, but it may help in adding commercial variety.

Certainly the most entertaining tunes sh did included an Xoso wedding song and the other African material, whereas she seemed somewhat uncertain in the precise rhythms of th Latin-influenced numbers. That may have been partly because the Brian Farnon orchestra, fine for fox trots, did little as a musical frame for her.

Organist Evelyn Freeman's tri joins Farnon for dance and dinner music and Tommy Roberts sings between acts.

Miss Makeba, though not a crowd-puller for Ciro's, will doubtless be a great asset to Belafonte's touring company which she joins Nov. 12.

She's booked at Ciro's for weeks. Glen.

Ritz Carlton, Montreal

Montreal, Oct. 21.

Vicky Autier, Johnny Gallant, Paul Notar Trio; $1.50-$2 cover.

A solid fave in the handsom Ritz Cafe of this inn, songstress-pianist Vicky Autier is currently making her annual appearance and reception is as good as ever.

This time around, thrush intros an almost entirely new songalog while still retaining usual show format of alternating between the piano and touring the floor.

Best of new offerings is her interp of the theme from the film, "Never On Sunday" and the English version of "Give Me You" which had been a Gallic hit with songstress last season. As per, Miss Autier is firm and forthright with the ringsiders without being overbearing and she had a good chance to exhibit her diplomacy on night caught with several gabbers who thought their efforts better than hers. Miss Autier won each round with ease. Chanteuse is glib and chirpy in several languages which gives showmanship a definite plus and she manages to work in last-minute requests without upsetting overall pacing. Her piano antics, which at one time were a big part of her act, have been trimmed and routining as now offered makes for a much improved cafe session.

Backing Miss Autier, who is in until Nov. 8, is the capable music of house 88'er Johnny Gallant and the Paul Notar combo. Between shows, Gallant and Notar alternate to make this one of the most popular dansapation spots in town. Newt.

Composer East, N. Y.

Barbara Carroll Trio, Chico Randall Trio; $4 minimum

This far-east 52d St. room, which was once the Diplomat Restaurant and River Club East and shuttered both times after liquor license troubles, has opened again as the Composer East.

Backers have retained boniface Willie Shore for this try. He managed the old Composer where subtle jazz piano stylist Barbara Carroll was often featured, and he's brought her in for the Composer East opening.

The old room, small and dark, was better suited to Miss Carroll's articulate and often sotto keyboard technique, which calls for an attentive aud. In the new setting, she has play over noisy outfronters, who are possibly prompted to chatter by the bigger and brighter layout.

While chancing only one of her soft and sophisticated vocals during the two opening sets, she sticks to the sock, upbeat instrumentals in the trio's (bass and brush drums) catalog.

Even on the less delicate stuff, Miss Carroll has a most distinctive sound, and she augments her sleek good looks with a projection of cheerful absorption throughout for those who care to dig. Her only drawback is a rigidity of style and arrangements, which, however fine execution, have provided few fresh ideas over the years. But this is an act that's still way ahead of the general run of small groups playing the intimate clubs.

Alternate is Chico Randall Trio (see New Act). Bill.

Statler-Hilton, Dallas

Linda Darnell, Thomas Hayward (with Bob Kroll); Earl Humpreys Orch (9); $2-$2.50 cover.

Localite Linda Darnell is home with her new supper club act and it's good. Paired with Met Opera tenor Thomas Hayward, the film star scores with sock material, special music by Bob Kroll and lines by Eli Basse—abetted by adroit staging by Vic Griffin. She left high school here at age 15 for a film career, and was naturally nervous at opening (27) before a hometown cr wd at the plush Empire Room with her nitery act.

Show has been revamped since her June opening in Pittsburgh, and now it's a clincher for any top room. Hayward opens the sh w with an Italian medley of fine airs, introduces Miss Darnell and works easily in-and-out of the show with her. She comes on with a mink stole, discarding it with the line: "That's as phony as I'm going to get; gee, I'm home."

She delivers her fine material in a husky, talky manner and the patter songs meet the people. "I'm Learning" honest admissianent her new forte and she has some slick one-liners—"There are two guys you can't top in a night club, Haig & Haig."

Neatly sheathed in a black and gold gown, Miss Darnell tells of hairdos and makeup with a m sical background of "Anvil Chorus" which she laughs. Nearest to a straight vocal is her rendition of "I Enjoy Being a Girl." She brings on Hayward again and he clicks with "Vesti la Giubba" and swings into "Mack the Knife."

Pair engages in song and comedy sketches for lusty mitting. She ends the 45-minute click bit with a philosophical bit, "We May Never Pass This Way Again," and the serioso bit scores. Bob Kroll, conducting, gets expert assist from the Humphreys band. This crew, with the maestro adding fine vocals, loads the floor with terp addicts.

Show runs to Nov. 9. Freddy Martin's band and revue takes over Nov. 10 for a three-week date. Bark.

Riverside, Reno

Reno, Oct. 27.

Phil Ford & Mimi Hines, Patrice Wymore, Starlets (8), Eddie Fitzpatrick Orch (10); $3 minimum.

Ford & Hines clicked solidly here several seasons back when they were still comparative unknowns to the plush niteries—and in this annual repeat they're selling with still greater authority. Format has changed little (there's no good reason to edit the proven stuff), but staging is somewhat tighter and the two include enough new routines and sock lines to keep the complete turn varied from the last time around.

And there's that natural empathy with the couple that reaches the tablers to good and full advantage. In the stage-side things, Miss Hines is infectious with both material and mannerisms, and in tandem with spouse Ford, the comedics come across in superior fashion.

Billed with the duo is Patrice Wymore, who for this Reno-ing, has not only changed clubs (from the Mapes to the Riverside) but has almost completely revamped her entire offering. She's strong on the vocaling and light on the terping for this Reno trek, and commands full attention.

There's less display of the Wymore leg (which causes some speculation) than in prior dates. Decision could result in some toss to the act, what with Miss Wymore in full cover losing some natural appeal by failing to exhibit her beautiful (by any standard) stems.

The comic pair intro with Miss Hines' mimi of a mouse on a bar room floor eating cheese—and be it trite phrasing, she rates the superlatives. Facial contortions are done to perfection, and the vocal impreshes are impressive. On the vocal side, as in the past, she fails to do enough straight stuff—albeit from half-done titles, it's obvious she's in full command of a much-beter-than-average set of pipes.

She proves it on such as "Till There Was You" and "Misty," but declines to go all the way on the serious side. Phil Ford complements in creditable fashion on vocal duos, in the trademarked "Sayonara" offering, and from the piano. And he neatly keeps the pace, be it on the vocal or instrumental. As in the Reno debut, the two work with tablers their obvious first consideration, and it pays handsomely in aud response.

Miss Wymore, in teasing slit gowning, shows more exuberance than in the last time around, and act suggests more thought and rehearsal. It's varied by titles, the chatter is brief but informative, and there seems to be more command of the situation. But, as aforementionel, there is a shortage of display of the terp ability.

On vocal, Miss Wymore is effective with "Gonna Live Till I Die," "Sunny Side of the Street," and "London Town." And she scores well with a sensitive "Scarlet Ribbon" (done to only the accompaniment of an electric music box held in hand), then again with a blues number. It's indicative Miss Wymore is carving herself a notable niche in saloon listings. And justifiably.

Full show is bracketed by the Riverside Starlets in Moro-Landis productions and backed in capably manner by the Eddie Fitzpatrick Orch.

New names due in on Nov. 10. Long.

Drake Hotel, Chi

Chicago, Oct. 21.

Joanne Wheatley with Hal Kanner, Jimmy Blade Orch (6); $2 cover.

Flushy Camellia House, which for this season has winnowed some chantoosies from its roster in a diversification move, is finding it can still make hay with certain of its tested chirpers, among them Joanne Wheatley. Her opener packed the room.

It comes out a reasonably diverting turn, thanks to a hefty assist from 88er-arranger (and hubby) Hal Kanner. He's particularly effective on the floor with her, warbling a nice romantic counterpoint.

Miss Wheatley is given to a coyish manner and patter, but combination of her big trained voice and a catalog of standard l'amour titles, mainly, nails desired reaction in this spa. Kanner, however, could rearrange one or two of the tunes with more discretion.

Jimmy Blade's crew, as usual, is plenty efficient backstopping, and cueing tabler dancing. Vicky Autier opens Nov. 11. Pit.

Invitation to a March

Theatre Guild presentation of three-act comedy by Arthur Laurents. Staged by Laurents; settings, William Pitkin; lighting, Paul Morrison; costumes, Lucinda Ballard; incidental music, Stephen Sondheim. Stars Celeste Holm; features Eileen Heckart, Madeleine Sherwood, Richard Derr, Jane Fonda, James MacArthur. Opened Oct. 29, '60, at the Music Box Theatre, N.Y.; $7.50 top Friday and Saturday nights, $6.90 weeknights.

Camilla Jablonski	Celeste Holm

Tucker Grogan	Richard Derr

Late in the third act of "Invitation to a March," which opened at the Music Box Theatre last Saturday night (29), Celeste Holm comes downstage and delivers playwright Arthur Laurents' message directly to the audience. It's an appeal for non-conformity, and we're back approximately 30 years with Hope Williams in that playroom-refuge in Philip Barry's "Holiday."

Well, not quite. For although "Invitation to a March" is tilting at pretty much the same windmill as Barry did, Laurents has tricked up his comedy a bit, not only with bright lines in something of the Barry manner, but also with a few novel touches, notably having the characters address the audience directly, at the same time being audible to each other. The gimmick simplifies the problem of exposition and also enables the author to comment on situations or have the characters express their motivations.

Of course there's nothing wrong with non-conformity as the theme of a play. There never has been. However, attacks on conformity have become practically a major industry, like General Motors, or a popular fad, like Mah Jong. You might almost say, in fact, that deploring conformity is the modern conformity.

But although its theme is a bromide, "Invitation to a March" is a fairly amusing, if slightly lopsided, play. It has three moderately interesting characters, several mettlesome situations, a good many adroit laugh lines and four skillful performances. It's questionable whether that's enough for Broadway success, but there's probably picture material in the play.

"Invitation" is the Theatre Guild production from which Shelley Winters withdrew during the try-out tour. Miss Holm has taken over the starring role of the unconventional woman who has lived what the author seems to regard a full life, and he's anxious to have us believe that she's enjoyed every minute of it, including having an illegitimate son.

The locale of the yarn is a couple of beach houses on the south shore of Long Island. There are several plot threads. The focal one is apparently supposed to be whether a spirited girl, with an orthodox upbringing but an urge for adventure, will marry the stuffy fiance who invariably puts her to sleep, or chooses romance with the illegitimate, independent-minded lad who kisses her awake.

A secondary story thread involves the unconventional woman's sentimental relationship with the stuffy fiance's father, who sired her illegitimate child in a sand dune seduction on that same stretch of beach 21 summers before. A wrinkle of this situation is the gentleman's still-bitterly jealous wife, who's apparently supposed to be an unsympathetic figure but has most of the laugh lines.

In an ending disconcertingly reminiscent of the old Ginger Rogers picture, "Tom, Dick and Harry," even to the use of a "cute" musical effect, the girl chooses to dance, representing romance and adventure, rather than to march, representing marriage and security, or conformity. And as his own director, Laurents has her actually dance offstage with her young lover—in bare feet, no less. There's also a device of having characters toss handfuls of torn-up multicolored paper in the air, seemingly as an expression of gay abandon.

If that sounds a bit on the whimsy side, let it go at that. But if the ideas in "Invitation" are banal, the dialog is witty and neatly tailored, and the trick of having the characters address the audience is readily acceptable and effective.

Miss Holm is frankly unbelievable as a woman no man ever looked at until the errant husband came upon her taking a sunbath in the nude among the dunes, and she cannot hide a sense of style, even in a shredded strawhat and shapeless beachrobe or the Mother Earth gown she wears in the super-solemn third act. But her expert comedy technique and the contagious gleam in her eye makes the part disarming.

Eileen Heckart plays the corrosively unhappy wife who, ashamed of being seen pregnant in public that eventful summer on Long Island, lurked on a screened porch and spied on the lovers through field glasses, but learns about the illegitimate child in the third act, shortly after her husband does. The part is a break from the usual for Miss Heckart, as she has most of the dryly funny lines, which she whacks unerringly. Possibly because it's supposed to be significant in terms of character, she has to wear a succession of progressively grotesque costumes.

Madeleine Sherwood gives a skillful performance as the girl's ambitious, sweetly acid mother, and Jane Fonda is expressive in a traditional, if ample and rewarding, ingenue role. None of the male characters has much dimension or reality. Richard Derr seems unnecessarily bloodless as the fiance's rich father who supposedly once had vigor enough to sire an illegitimate son.

James MacArthur is acceptable as the youth who turns down a father-come-lately and prefers the ingenue without marriage, but Tom Hatcher is almost pure cardboard as the hidebound fiance. There is also one of those appallingly precocious little boys found only on the stage, this time armed with a drum and played with awesome assurance by Jeffrey Rowland.

The dearth of direction gives the impression that Laurents, in his debut as a stager, lacked not only experience and possibly objectivity, but may have been understandably preoccupied with rewriting, not to mention the recasting of the star role and the necessarily hectic rehearsals.

William Pitkin's two beach house settings are atmospheric and roomy, with an expansive platform on the forestage. Lucinda Ballard's costumes vary from appropriate to hideous. Stephen Sondheim has supplied moody incidental music.

The 49th Cousin

Theatre Guild & George Kondolf presentation of three-act (four scenes) comedy by Florence Lowe & Caroline Francke. Staged by Jack Smight; settings and lighting, Stewart Chaney; costumes, Gene Coffin. Stars Menasha Skulnik, Martha Scott; features Marian Winters, Evans Evans, John Boruff, Paul Tripp, Eli Mintz, Gerald Hiken. Opened Oct. 27, '60, at the Ambassador Theatre, N.Y.; $6.90 top.

Fanny Lowe	Martha Scott
Moishe Golub	Gerald Hiken
Carrie Lowe	Evans Evnas
Tracy Lowe	Marian Winters
Isaac Lowe	Menasha Skulnik
Simon Lowe	Eli Mintz
Rabbi Ansbacher	John Boruff
Mr. Miller	Alfred Leberfeld
Mr. Kronfeld	David Kurlan
Mr. Cronyn	Paul Tripp

Possibly if "The 49th Cousin" were translated into Yiddish, you might almost say back into Yiddish, it might do for Second Ave. Come to think of it, maybe the Florence Lowe and Caroline Francke comedy would be too incredibly hokey even for Second Ave., for it could be argued that it's because of plays like this that there is virtually no Yiddish theatre any more.

In any case, "The 49th Cousin" was presented by the Theatre Guild and George Kondolf last Thursday night (27) at the Ambassador Theatre, which is on Broadway, and therefore hopelessly, embarrassingly unsuitable for such a show. Menasha Skulnik, a noted refugee from Second Ave., is starred in this incredibly corny yarn about an insufferably dictatorial, bigoted, self-righteous, egomanical German Jewish widower and the three spinster daughters he terrorizes.

The former Yiddish actor, with the look of a woebegone, undersized caribou and his uncanny sense of timing, gets a good many scattered laughs with his exaggerated comedy style, but it's all too familiar. Martha Scott is costarred, giving a skillfully straight performance of the oldest daughter who manages her father a bit when she can, helping out her sisters but still remaining dutifully devoted.

Assisting as ably as circumstances allow are Marian Winters and Evans Evans as the younger daughters, Gerald Hiken as an ardent peddlar who captures the youngest girl despite the fact that the old man scorns him as a Russian Jew, John Boruff as a admirably patient rabbi, Eli Mintz as the old tyrant's somewhat resigned younger brother, and Paul Tripp as Harvard-educated school principal who wins the second daughter even though he's a Gentile.

Jack Smight has staged the production with what appears to be routine proficiency. Stewart Chaney has designed a brightly lighted turn-of-the-century interior and Gene Coffin has provided suitable period costumes. Under the title "Sweet and Sour," the script was strawhat-tested a couple of summers ago with Melvyn Douglas as star. Since then, Miss Francke died and Leonard Spiegelgass was brought in to doctor the script, but his name was taken off the show last week, reportedly at his request.

According to one of the advance feature stories about the play in the Sunday drama pages, the character of the tyrannical patriarch is based on Miss Loewe's own father. Things are tough all over.

The Library Raid

Houston, Oct. 13.

Alley Theatre presentation of three-act drama by Frank Gagliano. Staged by Nina Vance; settings, Paul Tremaine; lighting, Harris Milam. Features Wayne Maxwell, Eleanor Wilson. Opened Oct. 12, '60, at the Alley Theatre, Houston; $3.50 top Friday and Saturday nights, $3 top week nights.

Malcolm Seedy	John Wylie
Gerry LaMossa	Ann Williams
David Byron	Robert Wuarry
Smiling Young Man	Wayne Maxwell
Mr. Kupreef	Hal Burdick
Miss MacVicers	leanor Wilson
Mister Crawley	Tom Toner
Connie	Donald W. Janeck

As the third play by New York author Frank Gagliane, "The Library Raid" shows promise. It is a symbolic drama about a hoodlum gang's attempt to seize and destroy the branch of a library in a large city. While motivations are thin and the characterizations inconsistent at times, the author creates terror and shock by the use of small incidents and bits of business.

Wayne Maxwell is outstanding as the always-smiling soft-spoken young hoodlum, one of the two who appear in the library while their gang remains outside in the fog. Eleanor Wilson is excellent as the head librarian who at first opposes violence in dealing with the hoodlums. Hal Burdick is believable as an elderly library patron with most of the comedy lines, although his part seems a bit broad, as does that of Ann Williams, the unknowingly sexy assistant librarian.

John Wylie as a prissy librarian, Robert Quarry as a glib advertising copywriter and Tom Toner as the janitor who has had experience with young delinquents, are well cast. Donald W. Janeck does well in his less demanding role of an expressionless hoodlum.

Nina Vance, producer at the Alley, has done a superb staving job.

Wildcat

Michael idd & N. Richard Nash presentation of two-act musical comedy; book, N. Richard Nash; music, Cy Coleman; lyrics, Carolyn Leigh. Staged and choreographed by Michael Kidd; settings, Peter Larkin; costumes, Alvin Colt; lighting, Charles Elson; musical direction, dance and vocal arrangements, John Morris; other arrangements and orchestrations, Robert Ginzler and Sid Ramin. Stars Lucille Ball; features Keith Andes, Edith King, Paula Stewart, Clifford David, Don Tomkins, Howard Fischer, Swen Swenson, Charles Braswell. Opened Oct. 29, '60, at the Erlanger Theatre, Philadelphia; $7.50 top Friday and Saturday nights, $5.40 weeknights.

Lucille Ball, making a long-delayed return to legit, has a robust, bouncing musical vehicle in "Wildcat." Playwright N. Richard Nash makes his musical debut as the author of the unusual book, which not so incidentally provides the tv and film comedienne with a knockout role. Nash is also co-producer of the show.

The Cy Coleman tunes and Carolyn Leigh lyrics are an important asset, with standout songs in the catchy "Give a Little Whistle and I'll Be There," the nostalgic "Tall Hope" and "Far From Home" (both male numbers), and "What Takes My Fancy," "The Liar Song" and "That's What I Want for Janie" (all with Miss Ball taking an effective part).

Another likely hit is "Someday We Dance" (by Clifford David and Paula Stewart). Most of the tunes are in the first act, but there's a rousing dance number, "El Sombrero," boomed over by the star and full chorus in the second act.

Although it's Miss Ball's show, she has major support, notably from Keith Andes as a virile, full-voiced leading man, as well as from David as his resonant pal. Miss Stewart as the heroine's retiring sister, Edith King as a picturesque local character, Don Tomkins as a colorful localite and Howard Fisher as an opportunist sheriff. Co-producer Michael Kidd has staged the show with a fine sense of pace and his choreography is outstanding. Peter Larkin's sets are colorful and ingenious.

The story, located in the southwest in the 1920s, involves a rambunctious gal who's out to find an oil well so she can provide for her younger, partly-crippled sister. The romantic lead is a drilling-gang foreman, whose pal conveniently falls for the sister. The discovery of oil provides an exciting finale.

The main problem with "Wildcat" is cutting—the break-in performance ran over three hours—so prospects for Broadway are bright.

Under the Yum-Yum Tree

New Haven, Oct. 27.

Frederick Brisson & Roger L. Stevens presentation of two-act comedy by Lawrence Roman. Staged by Joseph Anthony; settings, Oliver Smith; lighting, Peggy Clark; costumes, Ray Diffen. Features Gig Young, Sandra Church, Nan Martin, Dean Jones. Opened Oct. 28 '60, at the Shubert Theatre, New Haven.

Irene Wilson	Nan Martin
Robin Austin	Sandra Church
Dave Manning	Dean Jones
Hogan	Gig Young
Cab Driver	John McKay

"Under the Yum-Yum Tree" should have the ticket brokers of Broadway smacking their lips for a while to come. Its theme is old hat, but is embellished with bright dialog and expert acting that should score handily.

Something old, something new, something borrowed, plenty blue sums up the play's contents. There's ample of the sort of frank chatter that was once taboo but is now accepted. In this case, it's not only not offensive, but quite funny.

When a girl wants to engage in pre-marital experiment to determine compatibility—or lack of it—the outcome can be either poignant or amusing. In this instance the humor lies in the girl's insistence that the experiment be platonic.

A generally racy pace gives way occasionally to sagging sectors, which can probably be bolstered. Joseph Anthony's staging has artfully correlated dialog with amusing visual bits. The dialog, besides being funny, is incisively observant. As a maiden Broadway legit effort for radio and film scrivener Lawrence Roman, "Yum-Yum" is encouraging.

The playing is excellent. Gig Young registers neatly as a lovable louse who collects rent from hi femme tenants and returns it in philandering trade. Sandra Church is attractive and effective as the experimental bride-to-be.

Nan Martin gives a capital characterization as one of the landlord-wolf's transients and Dean Jones makes a personable may-become husband.

A handsome multi-level setting of a San Francisco Telegraph Hill attic apartment, designed by Oliver Smith and lighted by Peggy Clark, affords interesting playing areas, and there is femme finery designed by Ray Diffen.

The Frederick Brisson & Roger L. Stevens production has a general stamp of quality.

Little Moon of Alban

Philadelphia, Oct. 29.

Mildred Freed Alberg presentation of drama by James Costigan. Staged by Herman Shumlin; settings and lighting, Jo Mielziner; costumes, Noel Taylor. Stars Julie Harris; features John Justin, Barbara O'Neil, Robert Redford, Nora O'Mahony, Stefan Gierasch, Liam Clancy, Helena Carroll, Eric Christmas, Neil Fitzgerald, Norman Barrs, Beulah Garrick. Opened Oct. 28, '60, at the Forrest Theatre, Philadelphia; $4.80 top.

Sister Barbara	Joyce Sullivan
Doctor Clive	Eric Christmas
Black and Tan	Roy Pritchard
Convalescent Soldier	James Duncan
Sisters	Sadie McCollum, Susan McClintock, Mary Ann Hoxworth

Adapted by James Costigan from his own television script, "Little Moon of Alban" is reminiscent of such early Sean O'Casey dramas as "The Shadow of a Gunman," "Juno and the Paycock" and "The Plough and the Stars." It has the same locale and subject matter, somewhat similar style and feeling and possibly comparable limitations.

The story, set in Dublin during the "trouble" in 1922, involves a bitter-sweet, abortive romance between a saintly Irish girl and the wounded British officer whom she nurses and who, she doesn't at first realize, killed her sweetheart. Although she loves him, the girl decides to devote her life to God, possibly as a nun.

Herman Shumlin's direction is sensitive and sympathetic, and Jo Mielziner has designed an eloquent setting of foggy Dublin streets. Julie Harris gives an exquisitely touching performance as the heroine who first rejects religion upon the killing of her father and brother and then her sweetheart, but finds solace in a renewed faith.

John Justin, an import from London, is outstanding as the Brit-

English Stratford Signing Actors On 3-Year Options for 2 Groups

London, Nov. 1.

Peter Hall, managing director of the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre, Stratford-on-Avon, is offering contracts to 35 actors on whose services he will have first call for three years. They will be the nucleus of two permanent companies.

One troupe presents the annual Shakespeare season at Stratford-on-Avon, the other will do classical and new plays at the Aldwych Theatre, which will be the Stratford Memorial Theatre's location in London, starting in December.

Already 16 have signed up with Hall. They are artists of all levels, and include Peggy Ashcroft, Dorothy Tuti , Max Adrian, Peter O'Toole, Richard Johnson, Ian Bannen, Eric Porter, Patrick Wymark and Patsy Byrne.

Hall says, "Of , we shall continue to hire many other players, including stars, to appear with the companies on the usual short-term contracts." Contract players will be able to take other work up to 18 months in the three years, when not required by Hall. They will be paid a weekly retainer when not employed by other people.

No details of salaries have been disclosed, but it's thought that the top names will get around $168 a week. Reason for Stratford-on-Avon being able to make this costly splash is partly due to a grant made to the Stratford Memorial Theatre by the Gulbenkian Trust.

Merrick's Page 2 Times 'Amusement Guide' Plug Ousted by 'Official' Bid

David Merrick advertised his six current Broadway productions on page 2 of the N.Y. Times last week under a special "Amusement Guide" heading. The advertisement, set up in the style and type of the regular alphabetical listing in the amusement section, had other Broadway producers burning, on the ground that it tended to give the impression that Merrick's shows were the only entries running.

In counter-move, producer-pressagent Arthur Cantor attempted to place a similar ad in the Times last Monday (31) under an "Official Amusement Guide" heading. The shows he wanted listed were "Tenth Man," of which he's co-producer, and "Miracle Worker," for which he's press-agent. The list was also to include the upcoming "All the Way Home," in which Cantor is involved as both associate producer and pressagent.

The purpose of Cantor's ad order was to carry Merrick' "Amusement Guide" idea to such an extreme that the Times' ad acceptance department would have to refuse both his and Merrick's insertions, which it did. It's also understood that Robert E. Griffith and Harold S. Prince, represented on Broadway currently by "Tenderloi ," "Fiorello" and "West Side Story," intended taking out their own ad under a "Hit Musical Guide" heading.

The six shows given the page 2 promotion by Merrick last week were also included in the other Broadway productions in the regular alphabetical listing on the

To Quiz Angus Duncan In Stork-Equity Action

Angus Duncan, executive secretary of Actors Equity, is scheduled to be exai ined before trial Nov. 15 concerning the $5,000,000 suit which Sherman Billingsley, owner of the Stork Club, has filed against the union.

The action stems from a wire sent by Duncan in connection with a pre-"Tony" Awards cocktail party April 10. The wire, sent to about 30 Equity members, read, "Wish to make you aware of labor controversy at Stork Club. Prestige of theatre will suffer if our allegiance to labor movement is open to question. Urge you weigh Stork Club invitation most carefully."

Only two of 96 legit players—past Tony winners and the 1960 nominees—attended the party. The labor controversy referred to by Duncan involves Billingsley and the waiters and chefs unions.

Albery to Do 'Miracle' In London This Winter

London, Nov. 1.

Donald Albery, who recently returned from a three-week visit to New York, will produce "The Miracle Worker" in London this season. He plans to send William Gibson's Broadway hit on a tryout tour starting immediately after Christmas, and to bring it to the West End in January. Auditions started last week.

During his New York stay, Albery attended the Broadway openings of three of his London hi , "Irma La Douce," "A Taste of Honey" and "The Hostage." Two others of his West End successes, "Oliver" and "A Passage to India," are scheduled for Broadway production, either this season or next.

Big BTA Season In N'west, Dallas

Portland, Nov. 1.

A record for a legit subscription series in the Pacific Northwest has been set by the Broadway Theatre Leagues of Portland, Yakima, Spokane and Tacoma. A subscription total of 8,528 for the four towns includes 1,559 in Yakima, 2,319 in Spokane, 1,650 Tacoma and 3,000 here.

Tickets for the series, which includes "Pleasure of His Company," "Once Upon a Mattress," "Anderson Trial" and "Fiorello," range from $8-$17.

Dallas' 4 Shows

Dallas, Nov. 1.

Dallas Broadway Theatre League has a four-show season set for the 1,700-seat midtown Memorial Auditorium Theatre. A season-ticket discount sale is in progress, with single seats also being offered now.

The schedule includes "The Andersonville Trial," with Brian Donlevy and Martin Brooks, Nov. 11-13; "Once Upon a Mattress," with Imogene Coca and Edward Everett Horton, Dec. 9-11; "The Pleasure of His Company," with Joan Bennett and Donald Cook, Jan. 27-29 and "J. B.," with John Carradine, Shepperd Strudwick and Frederic Worlock, Feb. 17-19.

The Dallas Broadway Theatre League shows are booked by the Broadway Theatre Alliance, of New York, a subsidiary of Columbia Artists Management.

Mundelein College Bans Meredith 'Ulysses' Bit

Chicago, Nov. 1.

Burgess Meredith nearly called off a scheduled three-performance engagement at Mundelein College here because the Catholic institution objected to the inclusion of James Joyce's "Ulysses" (actually, excerpts from the stage adaptation, "Ulysses In Nightgown") in a program of readings. The conflict was resolved, however, when Mundelein officials agreed to Meredith's compromise, whereby it would state clearly in the printed program that selections from the Joyce work have been "expurgated" by the college.

"An Evening with Burgess Meredith," with Nancy Wickwire and Basil Langton featured, will be presented at the school, as scheduled, Nov. 18-20. A fourth performance has been booked by the Shaw Society, for its membership, Nov. 22 at the Happy Medium Theatre Club here.

TCU Little Theatre Sets Austrian 'Joan of Arc'

Fort Worth, Tex., Nov.1.

"Joan of Arc," by Austrian author Max Mell, will have its U. S. premiere in the Little Theatre at Texas Christian Univ. here next fall. Dr. Walther R. Volbach, chairman of the college's department of theatre arts, has arranged the presentation.

Mrs. Raiberto Cominl, of Southern Methodist Univ. is preparing the English translation.

What'd He Say?

London, Nov. 1.

Department of pending apology? The following item appeared in The Stage, British entertainment weekly.

"Nat Jackley will star in Emile Littler's 'all-laughter' pantomime at Leeds Empire this year, 'Babes In The Wood,' after which the future of the Empire is uncertain."

Fonda May Have 'Choice' Cleanup; No Screen Deal

"Critic's Choice" looms as a potential goldmine for its star, Henry Fonda. He's in for a maximum 15% of the gross, plus 20% of the profits. The profit participation setup includes 10% off the top for his services as star and another 10% as an investor, with a $31,250 stake.

Fonda is guaranteed a weekly salary of $2,500 against 10% of the first $20,000 gross, 12½% of the take between $20,000 and $30,000 and 15% of the weekly gross over $30,000. His deal also stipulates that the show must play a house with a minimum potential capacity of $40,000, which means his weekly salary, if the play were to sellout, would be at least $6,000.

The Otto Preminger production of Ira Levin's play is capitalized at $125,000, with provision for 20% overcall. The backers are in for a 40% cut of the profits, which means a 1% investment is equal to $3,125. The show, which begins its tryout tour Nov. 10 at the Playhouse, Wilmington, is scheduled to open Dec. 14 at the Barrymore Theatre, N.Y.

Preminger reportedly has been trying to purchase the film rights to the play, offering $250,000, plus a percentage. No deal has been set, however.

Joshua Logan had previously owned the legit and film rights to the vehicle, but his busy schedule prompted him to release the property. Preminger picked up the legit rights, but apparently wasn't in position to insist on the inclusion of the film rights.

Legit, Concert, Agents, TV-Radio Production's $290,832,000 in '58

Washington, Nov. 1.

Theatrical presentations, including legit, live radio and tv productions, plus concert and talent ticket agencies, were a $290,832,000 business in 1958, with a total payroll of about $110,000,000, according to the Dept. of Commerce. The figures show a 40.5% increase over 1954, when the last business census was taken.

The Commerce Dept. total includes receipts for Broadway, the road, repertory and stock, live tv and radio production, concert bureaus and talent agencies, ticket brokers and theatre equipment and design revenue, but excluding films, tv and radio sponsorship and cabaret receipts. The census report includes the following categories of total incomes.

Producers of New York and road shows: receipts of $101,040,000 by 392 producers, with an annual payroll of $45,081,000.

Producers of live shows for radio and tv: receipts of $78,385,000 by 557 producers, with an annual payroll of $33,778,000.

Stock and repertory companies: receipts of $14,168,000 by 197 companies, with an annual payroll of $6,694,000.

Talent managers and agents and concert bureaus: income of $48,727,000 by 1,311 individuals and firms, with an annual payroll of $16,140,000.

Ticket agencies: income of $12,703,000 by 179 agencies, with an annual payroll of $4,150,000.

Theatrical and radio-tv employment agencies: income of $5,745,000 by 101 agencies, with annual income of $2,514,000.

Theatrical equipment rental and design: receipts of $3,060,000 by 62 firms, with an annual payroll of $1,070,000.

Dr. Leo Michel, Broadway Figure, Closes Out Colorful Career at 85

By ABEL GREEN

Dr. Leo Michel, the retired "Dr. Broadway," who died at 85 last Saturday (29) in the Flushing (Queens) Manor Nursing Home, New York, was not only medical advisor but friend and confidante of a range of personalities that included Al Jolson, Vincent Youmans (who, while a patient, literally lived with him), Vernon Duke, Lorenz Hart, George M. Cohan, Paul Whiteman, the Gershwins, Con Conrad (who wrote "The Continental" in Dr. Michel's home), among others.

The famed Baldwin piano, long in his apartment either in The Wyoming on West 54th St. or at 171 West 57th St., Manhattan, now reposes in Jennie Grossinger's personal bungalow at the Catskill resort. It is unique because of the many famed signatures on it, chiefly songsmiths, who not only entertained at Dr. Michel's soirees but actually wrote their songs on it, as witness the Youmans and Conrad instances, among others.

Besides being a legendary Broadway figure, he was a practical physician to the famed and less renowned, and especially the lesser.

He was notably touched when the late George M. Cohan who, upon hearing that Dr. Michel was considering a move to Hollywood in line with the 1929 "Gold Rush" to filmusicals, came to the medico, with a blank check, fully signatured, and told Dr. Michel. "You fill in your own figure, but I don't

Shelagh Delaney's 'Lion' Reprieved for London

Shelagh Delaney's "A Lion In Love," which folded Oct. 15 in a pre-London tryout in Bristol, will be reprieved in a new production by The English Stage Co. The play will be recast and restaged, probably by George Devine, for a Dec. 21 opening at the Royal Court Theatre, London.

Wolf Mankowitz, who produced the recently-closed presentation, will have an interest in the new edition. Miss Delaney's previous play, "A Taste of Honey," was a hit in London and is currently on Broadway.

'Taffy' Producers Stuck for Loss

Unless a deal is worked out for a new management to take over the production of "Taffy," the four coproducers who originally launched the project will be on the hook for all money thus far spent. The Anne Marie Barlow play, in which Kim Stanley was to have starred, was suspended Oct. 20 while in rehearsal, and tryout dates in Philadelphia and Boston were cancelled.

The management attributed the suspension to an incomplete budget, explaining that $50,000, which had been due in October from the settlement of an estate, was held up by a court order. The venture, which was being co-produced by George Hamlin and Malcolm Wells, in association with John W. Caldwell and Don La Susa, was budgeted at $125,000, with provision for 20% overcall.

The backers, who invested in the show (the exact amount raised has not been disclosed) are not responsible for management's expenditures for production and rehearsal. The amount already sunk into the venture also hasn't been divulged.

According to Hamlin, there's a possibility of a new management taking over the project. A decision on the matter is expected within a week or so. The rights to the play have reverted to the author, but it's figured a deal could be worked out for a new management to acquire any sets and costumes already turned out. That would reduce the original producers' monetary obligation.

The legal complications of the matter are being studied and there's a possibility that if a new management takes over the property an arrangement may be worked out whereby the investment coin, already raised, may be transferred to the new project.

N'western Univ. Testing Robinson-Allen 'America'

Chicago, Nov. 1.

Earl Robinson and Lewis Allen, who previously collaborated on "The House I Live In," have co-authored a musical intended for Broadway, "One Foot In America." It is having an eight-day tryout at Northwestern Univ., opening last Sunday (30) and continuing through next Sunday (6).

The Northwestern drama school had previously done a production of Robinson's folk opera, "Sandhog." Among Robinson's other credits is "The Ballad For Americans."

Yale Drama School Will Open Season With 'Peach'

New Haven, Nov. 1.

The Yale Drama School will open its 1960-61 major production schedule tomorrow (Wed.) through Saturday (5) with "The Flowering Peach." The Clifford Odets play swill be staged by Nikes Psacharopoulos, assistant professor play directing on the Ell faculty.

The Yale Dramatic Assn. will open its season Nov. 25-26 with "Camino Real." The Tennessee Williams drama will be staged by Leland Starnes.

Kerz Won't Sue Lewis On 'Rhinoceros' Advance; Assumes Any Damages

Leo Kerz does not intend bringing any legal action to recover $1,000 advanced to Robert Lewis as a down payment on a $5,000 fee for directing the upcoming Broadway production of "Rhinoceros." Lewis withdrew from the staging assignment when the start of rehearsals, originally scheduled for Oct. 17, was postponed until Dec. 1.

The producer says that if Lewis doesn't return the $1,000, he will reimburse the partnership for that amount rather than allow it to be absorbed by the show. Regarding a report that Lewis intends suing for the balance of the $5,000 fee he was to have received, Kerz has notified VARIETY, "If there should be any action instituted by Lewis against the partnership I shall hold the partnership free from any damages whatsoever, and I personally take over any and all liabilities as a result of such action."

Anent the statement in VARIETY last week that Lewis was to have received a 7½% cut of the net profit on the venture, Kerz explains that 2½% of that was to have been in return for his raising capital. His slice of the profit as director was to have been 5%, in addition to 3% of the gross and the $5,000 fee. Joseph Anthony, who's succeeded Lewis as stager, is getting the same deal as hi predecessor exclusive of the 2½% financing arrangement.

Last week's VARIETY story also erroneously stated that Anthony is contracted to direct "White Alice" this season. That play is scheduled to be staged by Norman Corwin. Anthony, who's director of the incoming "Under the Yum-Yum Tree," has been tagged to stage "Mary, Mary," the Jean Kerr play, which Roger L. Stevens intends producing.

"Rhinoceros" is scheduled to open Jan. 5 at an undesignated Broadway theatre with Eli Wallach, Anne Jackson (Mrs. Wallach), Zero Mostel, Morris Carnovsky and E. G. Marshall heading the cast.

English Group in Rome To Produce 'Third Day'

John Byrne, producer-director of the Play Guild of Rome, is planning a season of productions in the English and Italian languages. The offerings will be presented at the Teatro Servi, Rome, beginning Nov. 25.

Set thus far for the program is "Third Day Comes a Frost," by English playwright Rodney Croome.

Yes, It's True the Lady Nudges; She Likes Him, That Crazy Girl

It may be all right for a producer to snap back at a critic but he'd better leave wives out of it. Walter Kerr, aisle-sitter for the N.Y. Herald Tribune, illustrated the point last Sunday (30) in devoting his regular drama page column to ridiculing Broadway producer Merrick's contention that his reviews are influenced by his wife, author-playwright Jean Kerr, who usually with him at the openings.

Merrick, in an interview with Hollywood columnist Sheilah Graham, was quoted as saying of Kerr's reviews, "I feel his wife is responsible for them. There she is, nudging him, making her comments. I know what she's saying, because my friends are sitting next to them and it's odd that her views coincide with his reviews. How can you not be influenced by someone next to you being so vocal?"

The by-line piece was headlined, True, Sir—She Nudges," into a detailed rebuttal of Merrick's charge, including such comments as, "First, she nudges me all the time. Do you know why? She's that crazy girl. Surely, not everyone, somewhere has well enough to give you a dig in the elbow. Not the subject of nudges, strong in all my years a newspaper I found myself [illegible] to Brooks Atkinson, who has so recently surrendered his claim to an aisle-seat. In my delight at seeing him, and in what may have been an excess of sparkling good humor, I leaned over and said, wry fellow that I am, 'Nudge me if you see anything you like.' Is it possible that one of Mr. Merrick's friends mistook my wife for Brooks Atkinson? Mr. Atkinson is on the slight side, and wears a mustache; my wife is tall, and does not."

As for his wife being vocal, "Inside the theatre, and once the curtain is up, she is rather a tyrant about whispers; one peep out of any of Mr. Merrick's closely packed friends and she whirls on them with a stare that makes me glad I am the quiet type, and her husband. Oh, I don't say she's never been guilty of a whisper herself . . . During the premiere of 'Tenderloin,' for instance, she pressed toward me and, in as soft a voice as was consonant with a certain fierceness, said 'Stop biting your fingernails.' She does look after me."

About whether he and his wife agree on the merits of a show, the critic remarked, "Mr. Merrick, I don't doubt for a minute that you have friends, and that you station them next to the reviewers. But they are not earning their money, Mr. Merrick. They are playing you false and you'd better look into them." Adding that he didn't think his wife's opinions "have any place in this column," Kerr went on to give a rundown of both his and his wife's reactions to the four productions Merrick has presented on Broadway thus far this season.

Regarding the first show, "Vintage '60," he thought it could be dismissed "since almost everyone seems to have disliked it, including Mr. Merrick, who is reported to have posted the closing notice before he'd had time to discover whether anyone wanted to buy tickets or not."

As for "Irma La Douce," although he and Mrs. Kerr "thought it a fine business." Next, "Becket," in which Kerr "expressed considerable confidence," took a beating in a quote attributed to his wife. That was followed by a lengthy report about his wife's dislike of "Taste of Honey," a play Kerr had found to be touching."

In closing Kerr commented "But Mr. Merrick leaves me no choice. I am forced to defend that nice girl from the scurrilous charge that she thinks like a critic. Laud.

'Masterpiece' for London, Then Probably Broadway

"Masterpiece," a drama by Gordon Russell and Larry Ward, is due for presentation the week of Jan. 23 at the Royalty Theatre London, with Anton Walbrook as star. The West End firm of Stephen Mitchell and Richard Friedman will present the show, in association with Broadway producers Carroll and Harris Masterson and David Ellis.

Assuming the West End showing is satisfactory, a subsequent Broadway presentation is planned, with Walbrook slated to repeat his starring role.

Opera Review

Met's New 'Carmen'

She's Swedish, she's dark-haired and she's Kirsten Meyer, pronounced Mayer, and she's a new and provocative Metropolitan Opera "Carmen." That's the verdict on the Royal Stockholm Opera import who debutted Saturday matinee (29) in Bizet's standard bread-and-butter work.

The new [illegible] an pretty good actress, [illegible] than operatic standards. It is possible to argue that she has a certain Nordic way of handling her body and that her shoulders suggest a ski jumper. But she is the role warm, and acts it "relatedness" than typically is [illegible] jected by American mezz who are rather too elegant for the Spanish tramp.

If Miss [illegible] scored her debut, and this seems clear, the new Met Don Jose, J. Vickers, was perhaps even more of an audience favorite. The burly tenor has been upcoming in a variety of roles at the house the past couple of seasons. Vocally he registers, sometimes he fails to look at the woman with whom he is playing the scene. As for the difficult pants of the Spanish constabulary of the era he wears them as well as most and manages, unlike Richard Tucker, not to look like Napoleon Bonaparte. Land.

Are Drama Critics Dramatic?

On the old journalistic theory that two is a coincidence and three is a trend, it may be notable that this may be the Broadway season of plays about critics. If that's not remarkable, it's at least a switch from two seasons ago, when there was a glut of show with Oriental characters.

First of the upcoming plays about aisle-sitters is "Critic's Choice," the Ira Levin comedy, said to contain thinly veiled portraits of N. Y. Herald Tribune reviewer and stage director Walter Kerr and his playwright-author wife, Jean Kerr. It's being staged and produced by Otto Preminger, and is due Dec. 14 at the Barrymore, N. Y., with Henry Fonda, Gene Rowlands, Virginia Gilmore, Mildred Matwick and Eddie Hodges as principals.

Also scheduled for this season is "Julia, Jake and Uncle Joe," Howard Teichmann's farce adaptation of the Oriana Atkinson book, "Over at Uncle Joe's," dealing with the experiences of the authoress and her husband, N. Y. Times columnist and former drama critic Brooks Atkinson. It is located in Moscow during World War II, when Atkinson was Times correspondent there. Claudette Colbert is to star in the play, but the actor who will portray Atkinson hasn't been set. John Shubert is producing, and Albert Marre is mentioned as possible stager.

Incidentally, Metro's film edition of Mrs. Kerr's bestseller collection of humorous autobiographical sketches, "Please Don't Eat the Daisies," contained characters based to some extent on those in the book, but according to acquaintances of the couple, the similarity was almost non-existent. Mrs. Kerr has written a new play, "Mary, Mary," to be produced this season by Roger L. Stevens, with Joseph Anthony directing and Barbara Bel Geddes starring, but the authoress having been bitten by the "Daisies" picture, none of the characters is a critic.

Obviously by coincidence, the Cunard Steamship Line is also getting into the critical act, having just put a new line into transatlantic service. The line's ship is the S.S. Oriana. Actually, the name is from English historical legend, presumably refers to the present Queen Elizabeth.

Possibly because critics are not considered dramatic figures here have been comparitively few plays with legit reviewers as prominent characters. Notable examples were Samson Raphaelson's "Jason," a failure of the 1941-42 season on Broadway, and "Arsenic and Old Lace," Joseph Kesselring's (with an unbilled assist by Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse) smash farce-melodrama of 1940-41.

In the classic field, of course, is Richard Brinsley Sheridan's comedy, "The Critic," last presented on Broadway by the Old Vic, during the 1945-46 season, with Laurence Olivier as the satirically-drawn character Puff.

Platonov

London, Oct.

[illegible] Stage Co. Ltd. presentation of three-act Give Scenes drama by Anton Chekhov. English version by Dmitri Makaroff. Staged by George Devine and John Blatchley; decor, Richard Negri; lighting, Richard Pilborow; assistants to directors, Kenneth Cavander; music specially composed by Dudley Moore. Stars Rex Harrison. Opened Oct. 13, '60, at the Royal Court Theatre, London, $1.75 top.

Apparently even the best dramatists write bad plays and Chekhov's "Platonov," his earliest attempt at stage writing, is at best no more than a promising beginning to a distinguished career. Yet, as presented for the first time in London, it turns out to provide a fascinating theatrical evening with its odd mixture of tragedy, comedy, farce and melodrama.

With Rex Harrison starring in the title role, it's a cinch to be a sellout in the small capacity Royal Court Theatre, and a transfer for a regular West End run, providing the star is available, should yield handsome returns. Broadway, too, could accept a production of comparable stature.

According to a program note, "Platonov" was written by Chekhov in his early 20's, but was not produced. It remained forgotten until 1920, when the Chekhov family papers were handed over to the Central State Literary Archives in Moscow. Previous printed versions of the play omitted the first act, but it is included in the substantially cut Royal Court production.

Though the author's immaturity as a writer is evident, it is easy to understand why Harrison chose this as the vehicle to mark his return to the West End stage. Stripped of all its trimmings, "Platonov" is nothing more than the portrait of a heel, a schoolmaster as fond of women as he is of vodka. Though married with a child of h[illegible] wh[illegible] h[illegible] is readily tempted by widow and a ried woman, and plans to run off with each.

The atmosphere changes constantly and with breath-taking rapidity. One moment it appears to be developing into profound social satire, but changes suddenly to comedy, then to drama, and frequently to farce. Oddly enough, the hanges of mood able nd almost logical.

An outstandi g feature of th English Stage Co. production the handsome and striking decor by Richard Negri, and the skilful lighting by Richard Pilborow. Of the five different sets, the most effective is a railway track that provides a melodramatic setting for Platonov's wife's suicide attempt. George Devine and John Blatchley share the credit for the bold, vigorous staging.

Whatever the reservations [illegible] be about the play itself, there can be little doubt about Harrison's personal success. Although beard and pincenez glasses fail to make him look authentically Russian, the star skilfully keeps pace with the changing style of the play and never misses a trick. It is not a dominating role, but an important one, and he shares the acting credits with other members of a big cast.

Of the three principal women, Rachel Roberts, as the widow, gives the most impressive performance. Mary Watson has more limited opportunities as the long suffering wife, but Elvi Hale is thoroughly acceptable as the married woman left in the lurch. Notable in the large cast are Graham Crowden as a cuckolded husband and George Murcell as a petty thief. Myro.

Abelard and Heloise

London, Oct. 25.

Arts Theatre Club (in association with A. H. Enterprises Ltd.) presentation of a drama in two acts, by Ronald Duncan. Stars Virginia Maskell and Iain Cuthbertson. Staged by Hugh Hunt; settings, John Piper; music, Thomas Eastwood. Opened Oct. 24, '60, at the Arts Theatre Club, London; $1.75 top.

Heloise	Virginia Maskell
[illegible] elard	Iain Cuthbertson

Two character plays are rarely an easy proposition, but "Abelard and Heloise" is one of the toughest to endure. Though Ronald Duncan has brought some poetry to the writing, it is heavy going from the start, unrelieved in style and occasionally pretentious. It is unlikely to be considered as a commercial prospect for transfer.

The stage is bare apart from two praying stools in the centre and two writing desks on each side. There is, however, a vivid blackcloth, designed by John Piper, which helps to relieve the gloomy scene. It is from the writing desks that the two characters read the letters that passed between them after Heloise went to a nunnery and her husband, Abelard, to a monastery.

Peter Abelard, an Eleventh Century poet and philosopher, was the tutor to Heloise, but after her

Germans Going All-Out On New Legit Musicals; Even Adapt 'Krapp's Tape'

Frankfurt, Nov. 1.

Germany, which generally has Beethoven, Brahms, Mozart, Wagner and Richard Strauss coming out of the rafters of its government-subsidized opera houses, is going on a modern opera kick. During the new season, German theatres are stressing modern opera in the buffo style recently revived by such local names as Werner Egk and Rolf Liebermann.

The Essen Theatre has scheduled Bohuslav Martinu's "Mirandolina" and the Dusseldorf Opera is staging Jan Janus' "Servant of Two Masters." Benjamin Britten's "Midsummer Night's Dream" will have its first performance in Hamburg, and Dusseldorf is making plans for the first performance of a new version of Cherubini's "Ali Baba."

Hans Werner Henze's new opera, "Der Prinz von Homburg," has been scheduled for performances this winter in Frankfurt, Darmstadt and Muenster. Other contemporary composers have chosen unusual librettos for their operas. Boris Blacher is staging George Kaiser's "Rosamunde Floris" as a musical, with libretto by Gerhart von Westermann, and the first performance is set for the City Opera in Berlin.

Samuel Beckett's "Krapp's Last Tape" has been turned into an opera by Marcel Mihalovici, and will be done at Bielefeld. Theodor Holtersdorf has picked Friedrich Forster's "Alexander" for adaptation as a musical, with its first performance in Bremen, and Heinrich Riethmueller is making a modern opera of Goethe's "Mitschuldige" "Also Guilty", to be done in Wuerzburg.

Zoltan Kodaly's "Adventures of Hary Janos" will be done in Frankfurt, Bohuslav Martinu's "Ariadne" in Gelsenkirchen, Ikuma Dan's Japanese one-act opera, "The Silver Heron," in Kiel, and the German premiere of Kurt Weill's "Down in the Valley" is set for Karlsruhe.

Why Ad Execs Get Ulcers

Budweiser in a Brothel? Horrors!—Camel Spieler Smoking Philip Morris? Never!

Broadway has been getting a taste of Madison Ave. bugaboos.

In "Tenderloin," current at the 46th St. Theatre, N.Y., identifiable bottles of Budweiser beer were displayed onstage and served to customers in a bordello. A tieup for the use of the product had been made by the beer firm, but an executive of the company caught the show in New York and, fearing that the appearance of the suds in such a place was bad public relations, he had the ad agency cancel the tieup.

In another instance, the public relations firm of Philip Morris cigarettes turned down a request to supply cigarettes for "Period of Adjustment," which opens Nov. 10 at the Helen Hayes Theatre, N.Y. The reason for the refusal was that James Daly, who's costarred in the play, has for several years been plugging a rival brand, Camel cigarettes, on television and radio. The actor is not identified by name in either the tv or radio spots.

The Philip Morris nix of the "Period of Adjustment" tieup presumably averted a future case of apoplexy when some executive of R. J. Reynolds, which makes Camels, should attend a performance of "Period of Adjustment" and see Daly publicly smoking a rival make, with progr credit for the brand name.

want to see you leave all the boys and girls, especially those who can't afford it, behind you." Dr. Michel never left, nor did he cash the check.

His pet cure for singers was "vaseline in the nose," as much psychosomatic as realistic, and he noted that "it always worked with Caruso, who was the biggest baby of all, but so long as I prescribed the vaseline for the nasal tract the great tenor was able always to open at the Met."

Elaine Malbin, the opera singer, was Dr. Michel's niece, but otherwise he played no favorites nor indulged in any protegees.

While in th Flushing nursing home he kept telling Paul Cousmer, the Grossinger's p.a., that "when anything happens to me you must make sure to get VARIETY to thank everybody for having been so nice to me with all those remembrances and thoughts." Dr. Michel was a heart victim and the angina pains, at the last, were quite severe, according to intimates.

Harold Rouse, of Steiner, Rouse & Co., the brokers, is his executor. Dr. Michel's financial position was secure. Although retired the last 10 years he was regular at Grossinger's, where the Michel Cup is an annual trophy. In November 1958 he was the guest of honor at a huge testimonial at the Hotel Astor, on the occasion of his 50th anniversary as a medico, with celebrities in attendance.

Three years ago Dr. Michel's brother, Joseph, 70, and Mrs. Edith Hallock, 63, a wealthy Brooklyn widow, disappeared in Acapulco, Mexico. He assisted the police in proving that it a robbery-murder.

Road Good; 'Advise' $52,533, Wash.; 'Tree' $21,300, N.H.; 'Sun' $41,627, Det.; 'Finger' $37,324, 'Rape' $7,200, Bost.

Business was generally good on the road last week, although there were some weak entries. "Under the Yum-Yum Tree" began its tryout tour nicely in New Haven and "Little Moon of Alban" got off to a fair start in its first three performances in Philadelphi

B'way Sags, But Some Shows Climb; 'Cousin' $20,011 in 6, 'Hero' $31,863; 'Hostage' $28,404, 'March' $9,091 (2)

Business dived last week for most shows, with the drop running as high as nearly $16,800 for one musical. The downward trend was reversed by "Bye Bye Birdie," "Face of a Hero," "Hostage" and "Taste of Honey," all registering substantial increases. Although "Birdie" climbed above its capacity take of the previous week at the Martin Beck Theatre, it failed to go clean at the 54th St. Theatre.

The sellouts last week were "Becket," "An Evening with Nichols and May," "Fiorello," "Sound of Music" and "Tenderloin." Theatre party commissions reduced the "Becket" and "Tenderloin" grosses.

The League of N.Y. Theatres decided last week to end the experimental 7:30 Wednesday night curtain and all Broadway shows, except for the Nichols & May offering, which starts at 9 p.m., will ring up at either 8:30 p.m. or 8:40 p.m. tonight (Wed.).

The downtown Phoenix Theatre, however, will continue the Wednesday night 7:30 curtain.

CASTING NEWS

Following are available parts in upcoming Broadway, off-Broadway, and touring shows, as well as ballet, films, industrial and television shows. All information has been obtained directly by the VARIETY Casting Department by telephone calls, and has been rechecked as of noon yesterday (Tues.).

The available roles will be repeated weekly until filled, and additions to the list will be made only when information is secured from responsible parties. The intention is to service performers with leads provided by the managements of the shows involved rather than to run a will o' the wisp marathon. This information is published without charge.

In addition to the available parts listed, the tabulation includes productions announced for later this season, but, for which, the managements, as yet, aren't holding open casting calls. Parenthetical designations are as follows: (C) Comedy, (D) Drama, (MC) Musical Comedy, (MD) Musical Drama, (R) Revue, (Rep) Repertory, (DR) Dramatic Reading.

uncle, a pillar of the church, discovered they had married secretly, he had the husband castrated and the couple retired from the world. The correspondence, freely translated by the author from the Latin, describes in searching and overdramatic terms the frustrations experienced by their separation, until Heloise eventually found solace in God.

As if overawed by the occasion, both Virginia Maskell and Iain Cuthbertson overdo the dramatics their recitation of the letters. From a theatrical point of view, at least, they are fighting a losing battle, as the treatment prohibits any intimacy between them and each in turn delivering monologs, some running more than 10 minutes.

There is occasional relief provided between the monologs by Thomas Eastwood's music, played by a string trio. Productions of this character offer the minimum of scope for the director, but within the limitations Hugh Hunt has done an acceptable job. Myro.

Genousie

Paris, Oct. 2.

Theatre National Populaire presentation of comedy in two acts (17 scenes) by Rene De Obaldia. Staged by Roger Mollien; sets and costumes, Raymond Guerrier; music, Georges Delerue. Features Maria Mauban, Roger Mollien, Zanie Campan, Jean Rochefort. Opened Oct. 1, '60, at the Theatre Recamier, Paris; $1.80 top.

Irene	Maria Mauban
Christian	Roger Mollien
Philippe	Jean Rochefort
Tubereuse	Zanie Campan
Yvier	Geo. Wallery
Suff	Georges Audoubert

A new playwright with a flair for satire and offbeat fancy is revealed in this play at the experimental, state-subsidized Recamier Theatre, under the aegis of Jean Vilar's Theatre National Populaire. "Genousie" is too slight and mannered for export, except possibly for off-Broadway, although it may have an okay reduced prices here.

The story involves a young poet and a playwright's wife, and their wish-fulfillment dream-sequence romance. When the scene reverts to reality the couple exchange a look indicating the dream could come true. The play's title refers to the heroine's mythical homeland.

The satire of the intelligentsia is good, and there are winning shafts of tenderness, but the play lacks substance, although it is neatly directed and acted. Mosk.

Un Mandarino per Teo

Rome, Oct. 11.

Garinei-Giovannini presentation of a two-act musical comedy, by Pietro Garinei and Sandro Giovannini, songs by Kramer. Staged by the authors; sets and costumes, Coltellacci; choreography, Donald Saddler. Stars Walter Chiari, Sandra Mondaini, Ava Ninchi, Alberto Bonnucci, Riccardo Billi; features Carlo delle Piane, Annie Gorassini, Chum Kem, Anne Marie Delos, Corrado Olmi, Wells Twins, Alfredo Censi, Angelo Pericet. Opened Oct. 10, '60, at the Sistina Theatre, Rome; $6 top.

Teo Broscl	Walter Chiari
Rosanella	Sandra Mondaini
Aunt Gaspara	Ava Ninchi
Lucio Feri	Alberto Bonnucci
Ignazio Fumoni	Riccardo Billi
Man in white	Corrado Olmi
Man in black	Angelo Pericet
Fracassoni	Alfredo Censi
Nita Ceervolet	Anne Marie Delos
Plumber	Carlo delle Piane
Chinaman	Chum Kem
Blond Angel	Annie Gorassini

Dancers: Maureen Lesley, Norma Day, Elizabeth Roland, Gill Verne, Belle Kelly, Brigitte Kirfel, Liane Wells, Rosemarie Wells, Anneleine Witkamp, Beverly Fuller, Ottavio Possidoni, Ennio Sammartino, Alberto Uzan, Renzo Marra, Gildo Fossati, Sergio Fadini, Livio Ceserani, Luciano Tacconi, Germano Moruzzo, Renato de Montis.

Pietro Garinei and Sandro Giovannini have another hit, and so does comedian Walter Chiari, in "Mandarin for Teo." The show is a decisive step forward in the authors' attempt to sell the difficult Italo public, long doting on banal and empty, if extravagant and superficially dazzling revues, the concept of Yank-styled story-lined musical comedies. This is the producer-author team's smoothest and most accomplished effort to date, an example of intelligent writing and production teamwork, with acting, music, dances, sets, costumes and lighting all first-rate.

The Faustian plot involves a film studio extra who is given a chance by two mysterious visitors to become a millionaire merely by pressing a button on a box. The catch is, or so he's told, that the act will kill a Chinese mandarin who will then turn over his fortune to the extra.

Chiari is his usual buoyant self in knitting together the plot skeins as the extra, while Sandra Mondaini is fine as femme lead, also putting across several Kramer songs winningly. Riccardo Billi, Alberto Bonnucci, and Ava Nichi give the couple solid backing, especially Miss Ninchy, who has some of the best lines as a retired chorus gal. The femme line, all imports, is a stunning array.

Kramer's songs are likeable and functional, with "Svegliati, Amore" ("Wake up, Love") perhaps the catchiest. There are fewer dances in this show than most, but Donald Saddler makes the most of these opportunities. Coltellacci's sets nd costumes confirm his top rank in this country. Hawk.

Christobal de Lugo

Paris, Oct. 1.

Roger Dornes presentation of drama in two acts, by Louis Masson. Staged by Bernard Jenny; sets and costumes, Christiane Coste. Features Alain Saury, Anne Caprile, Alain Mottet. Opened Sept. 28, '60, Christobal ..... Alain Saury
Antonia ..... Anne Caprile
Ganchoso ..... Alain Mottet
Peralta ..... Emilio Carrer
Urrac ..... Gabrielle Doulcet

This is a medieval morality play in format, about damnation and salvation. However, it is overcharged in writing and execution and it lacks the true violence and dedication that might make its period acceptable. It rarely achieves a true symbolic flair and seems a shaky entry here, with foreign chances dubious.

In the first part the title character, a carousing Spanish nobleman, who has driven a friend to suicide, takes up with riffraff and betrays a woman who loves him. He is suddenly inspired to become a priest after accidentally killing an old crone who has snatched a crucifix his mother had given him as a child.

In the second part the holy man is called to the bedside of the woman he defiled, now a leper doomed to damnation. He takes her disease upon himself and later dies at peace, while his skeptical follower is killed by a mysteriously silent man with a dog's head, apparently the Devil's representative.

Loys Masson has written this as a raucous picaresque, blasphemous and violent yarn, but the words, acting and production fail to convey the aura of the middle ages. The first part is overwritten and loses force, but the second is more plausible. Tatty scenery is a drawback. Mosk.

La Logeuse

(The Landlady)

Paris, Oct. 7.

Georges Herbert & Pierre Franck presentation of a comedy in three acts, by Jacques Audiberti. Staged by Pierre Valde; sets and costumes, Daniel Lourdour. Features Lila Kedrova, Jean-Roger Caussimon, Vera Norman, Jacques Duby, Rene Dary. Opened Oct. 6, '60 at the Theatre De L'Oeuvre, Paris; $3 top.

Cirque	Lila Kedrova
Tienne	Jean-Roger Caussimon

Jacques Audiberti, who has a flair for unusual plays, has come up with a comedy of satirical symbolism. Though sustained by good acting and production, it appears somewhat obscure and strained for Broadway, but could be an off-Broadway novelty.

The piece is about a forceful boarding housekeeper who bewitches her family and roomers into following her advice. She has turned her husband, a promising diplomat, into a ladies' hatmaker, her daughter into a suicidal madcap and her son-in-law into a thief.

A psychiatrist has sent her away, but she returns to demonstrate that all her victims missed her and wanted to be the helpless, pathetic people she made them. Even the psychiatrist enters the menage as a housekeeper.

Various meanings can be read into the play, but it is at best mordantly effective. Lila Kedrova does a fine job as the monstrous yet almost appealing landlady, and crisp direction and simple suggestive sets also help. Mosk.

Len Waylan has discontinued production of "Fair Sex," which he was to have brought to Broadway this season.

Off-B'way Review

Don Juan in Hell

William Gyimes presentation of the epilogue from George Bernard Shaw's "Man and Superman." Directed by Hugh Whitfield; scenery and lighting, Margorie Schaper. Opened Oct. 3, '60, at the Jan Hus House, N.Y.; $3.90 top Friday and Saturday nights, $2.50 weeknights.

Ana	Gladys Holland
Don Juan	James Forster
Devil	Bill Zuckert
Statue	Carl Low

Hugh Whitfield, the director who earlier this season set a record of some sort by demolishing all the wit and energy of Shaw's "Man and Superman," has outdone himself with an inept, obtuse edition of "Don Juan in Hell."

Not that the director deserves entire rap for this fiasco. His accomplices include a whipped-cream Ana who accomplishes the difficult transition from old age to youth by simply ignoring it, a faceless Statue, a Devil who thinks that acting consists of grimacing and beating his chest, and shouting exhortations at the audience, and a Don Juan who misreads and stumbles over so many of his lines (with the script right in front of him) that he seems to have no idea what he's saying. Ster.

Ballets Africains $10,000 Despite Raves in Pitt

Pittsburgh, Nov. 1.

Les Ballets Africains played to a meagre $10,000 gross last week at the 1,760-seat Nixon Theatre here.

The presentation, scaled to a $4.50 top for a potential capacity take of $42,000, opened Oct. 24 to two raves (Monahan, Press; Steinfust, Post-Gazette).

Canadian Opera $22,700 In Third Week, Toronto

Toronto, Nov. 1.

The Canadian Opera Co. grossed an okay $22,700 last week in the final frame of its three-week stand at the 1,525-seat Royal Alexandra Theatre here. The potential gross capacity at the house, scaled to $4.50 weeknights and $5 weekends, was $39,000. The previous week's take was $27,356.

The company presented a repertory of "Otello" in Italian and "Marriage of Figaro" and "Night in Venice" in English.

McGraw-Hill Corrects

McGraw-Hill corrects Hollywood agent "Red" Hershon's misinformation to VARIETY anent his deal in behalf of Robert Lewis Taylor's novel, "A Journey to Matecumbe." The correction has to do with terms and details attendant thereto, although the basic $40,000 advance paid by McGraw-Hill for the new novel is correct, as of course are the title and author's name.

However, says Edward Kuhn Jr., editor-in-chief of the publishing house (not "senior editor" as stated), the story erred (1) on no guaranteed 50,000-copy first printing; no $25,000 ad budget (although over the phone Kuhn admits there is an ad budget commitment but "much more modest"); and McGraw-Hill has not waived paperback and does control reprint and bookclub rights. Kuhn volunteers that negotiations for the book were carried on by himself and also with John P. R. Budlong, general manager of the trade department.

Taylor's agent, Hershon, had originally mentioned a $50,000 advance which Kuhn had corrected to 40G. Presumably adhering to company "policy to regard contract terms as exclusively the business of the author and publisher," he proffered no enlightenment on the agent's claims until after the VARIETY story appeared.

Frisco's Smut Drive

Seven persons have been indicted by the Alameda County (Oakland) Grand Jury on charges of conspiring to violate the California pornography law against publishing, writing or selling obscene literatiure. Conviction could mean up to three years in prison and a $1,000 fine.

District Attorney J. Frank Coakley asked for the indictments after the Frisco News-Call Bulletin exposed what it called a Frisco-Fresno "smut mill," publishing hundreds of thousands of pornographic paperbacks a year.

Indicted were Sanford E. Aday and Wallace de Ortega Maxey, owner-operators of Mid-Town Publishing Co., Fresno; Mid-Towner's circulation boss, Matthew Meehan; Mid-Tower's editor, Jack Lindsay; authors of two of Mid-Tower's books, Joe D. Kinney and William R. Brantley, and Louis R. Swift, Frisco-Oakland paperback distributor.

All but the two authors, who live out of California, surrendered at week's end and were freed on bail of $2,625 apiece.

The Federal Government already has obtained indictments against Aday, Maxey and their Fresno assistants in Arizona, Michigan and Hawaii.

Ivan Obolensky's Remarriage

Ivan Obolensky, publisher-son of Serge Obolensky, the hotelier, is getting married today (Wed.) one year—and one baby—after his civil mariage to Mary Elizabeth Morris, TWA stewardess-supervisor (who had 4,500,000 flight miles background). This afternoon's ceremony at the Russian Orthodox Church, in Manhattan, will be attended by publishing, socialite and theatrical personalities.

Obolensky, who heads the book publishing house bearing his name (until recently it was McDowell, Obolensky Inc.) "was too busy to get to a church wedding (they now have a three-months-old daughter) but we finally decided to also get married in the Russian Orthodox Church." He explains that under Russian custom "you can get married three times in church but divorced only twice." This is his second marriage.

with Russian, Israeli or Hispano entries. Hurok had intimated a possible dating if a full length program were set up. This explains the two and a half hour "The Sleeping Beauty" which the Cuevas unit opened at the Theatre Champs-Elysees this week (see review in this issue, Thurs. (27).

If this does not go, and Yank aid is not forthcoming, the Marquis will disband his organization. Guerrico stated that U.S. State Dept. via American National Theatre and Academy had been approached many times but always refused aid though the company was intrinsically American even if it had spent most of its time in France—Europe and South America. Originally composed of about 60% U.S. dancers, it is now down to about 30%.

Cuevas managed to attend the showing in spite of his ill health. He received an ovation from a v.i.p. crowd. Reviews were good for this sumptuous ballet and perhaps the Marquis may be in for a series of long show biz farewells. Guerrico opined it was the principle of recognition rather than the money burden that bothered the Marquis.

Invitations to Russia had to be turned down due to the denial of support by ANTA, and now the Marquis feels he can not carry on in the nether world of the American ballet, with an English monicker, doomed to a lack of recognition by its country of origi amusement page. Although this was not the first time Merrick had used page 2 space in the Times to plug his shows under the "Amusement Guide" heading, it had a special irritation value, following as it did the producer's recent action in independently dropping the experimental 7:30 Wednesday night curtain in favor of a return to the traditional 8:30 ring-up.

What made Merrick's lone-wolf desertion of the early curtain particularly galling to other producers was his quoted statement, following the vote of the League of N.Y. Theatre also to go back to the later start, that he had hoped the organization would retain the 7:30 ring-up, so his shows could have the boxoffice advantage of being the only ones available at the 8:30 time.

ish officer, impressing as a prospect for films. Barbara O'Neil is expressive as a nun who befriends the girl, Robert Redford is admirable as the sweetheart, Stefan Gierasch is vivid as the latter's pal who informs her that the wounded Britisher was responsible for the killing. Nora O'Mahony gives a convincing portrayal of vigorous comedy turning to grim tragedy, and Eric Christmas is plausible as an overworked doctor.

Devotees of O'Casey, J. M. Synge and W. B. Yeats, particularly those who remember the visiting Abbey Theatre company, will probably find "Little Moon of Alban" exciting and satisfying, but it may be forbidding and too special for the general public. Waters.

OBITUARIES

PAT BALLARD

Francis Drake (Pat) Ballard, 61, died of a heart attack Wednesday night (Oct. 26) at Medical Arts Hospital, N. Y., where he had been rushed from his Madison Hotel room when he became ill that afternoon. With his wife, the former Hilda Gramlich, he had driven in from their Troy, Pa. home two days before to atend a special meeting of the Writers Advisory Comittee (of which he was a member) at ASCAP.

A classmate of Fred Waring's, Ballard wrote many of the latter's varsity-type shows. He was a prolific author of lyrics and special material from the 1920s on, for radio and tv; was music editor of College Humor; and finally hit a real jackpot standard three years ago with "Mr. Sandman." He also was author of "So Beats My Heart For You," "Variety is the Spice of Life," "Love Is Mine," "Here Is My Heart" and "Bring Me a Bluebird," among other songs.

Born in Troy, Pa., where his family resided for many generations, he wrote two editions of the Mask and Wig varsity shows as an undergraduate at the U. of Pennsylvania.

Not generally known was his penchant for rare violins. He became interested when a "Stradivarious" he had picked up in a pawnshop for $5 was declared by one dealer to be a fake. None the less it led to his writing two books, "The Old Violin Market Survey" and "The Appreciation of Old Violins."

His widow plans to return to her native Kahlsruhr, Germany to be with her mother and brother who have extensive soap and furniture manufacturing businesses and have recently expanded their holdings. They celebrated their 15th anniversary a day before the songwriter's death.

BENJAMIN F. STEIN

Benjamin F. Stein, 65, Broadway general manager and former legit producer, died Oct. 27 in New York. In recent years he had been general manager for Robert Fryer and Lawrence Carr and at the time of his death was employed in that capacity on the producing team's latest venture, "Advise and Consent," currently trying out in Philadelphia.

Stein, who had previously been general manager for Mike Todd, Jed Harris and Lew Brown and Ray Henderson among others, began his association with Broadway legit after overseas service in the army in World War I. While in the army, he won the Croix de Guerr and Distinguished Service Cross.

After peddling tickets at the old Lyric Theatre, N.Y., and working for a number of producers, Stein went into production on his own in the late '20s with "The Jade God." In 1932, he presented "Black Tower" and in 1934 and 1937 produced, respectively, "Invitation to a Murder" and "Bet Your Life." He was also part owner and general manager of "Separate Rooms."

DR. W. R. G. B. BAKER

Dr. W. R. G. B. Baker, 67, pioneer radio and television engineer, died Oct. 30 in Syracuse, N.Y. He played a leading role with national committees that estabilshed engineering standards for the first black-and-white commercial television i 1941, and for color tv in 1953.

Baker, who joined the General Electric Co. in 1916, supervised construction of GE's radio station WGY in Schnectady, which went on the air in 1922. He later held a number of top posts with GE until his retirement in 1957. His title then was v.p. in charge of research.

Baker's initials were chosen by GE for the call letters of its Schenectady television station. He was credited with initiating the first tv relay. WRGB picked up program signals originating in New York and telecast them in the Schenectady area.

His wife survives.

WILBUR PETERSON

Wilbur (Pete) Peterson, 45, part-owner of The Vagabonds nightclub in Miami and for 16 years a comedian-singer with The Vagabonds group, died in Miami Oct. 24.

A native of Hawaii, Peterson began his career as a singing waiter in a restaurant on Telegraph Hill in San Francisco. He formed an instrumental-vocal trio which had a long stand at the old Royal Hawaiian in San Francisco in the latter 1930s, and spent 16 years with The Vagabonds, playing films, tv, nightclubs and vaude. After a falling out with other members of the group, he became a partner in the Miami spot and formed his own trio, which toured as late as last year.

Mother survives.

MERLE A. POTTER

Merle A. Potter, 66, former drama critic and exhib, died Oct. 26 in Los Angeles. He was critic for the Minneapolis Journal before becoming general manager of the Benny Berger Theatre Circuit in Minneapolis prior to World War II. After going to California at the end of World War II, for a time he was a drama columnist for the Valley Times, North Hollywood.

In the late '30s, he founded a motion picture critics' poll which at one time canvassed 1,100 reviewers.

Surviving are his wife and two sons.

HENNY PORTEN

Henny Porten, 71, Germany's first film star who began her cinema career around 1906, died Oct. 15 in Berlin after long illness. One of the queens of the German silent film era, she was one of the few celluloid actresses who managed to retain their star status during the talkies.

Her countless pictures included such hits as "The Marriage of Luise Rohrbach," "Anne Boleyn," "Rose Bernd," "Queen Luise" and "Mother and Child." Her last film success was "Family Buchholz" which the late Carl Froelich directed in 1943.

After World War II, she tried several unsuccessful comebacks in both West and East German films.

EWING C. KELLY

Ewing C. Kelly, 59, owner-operator of KCRA-AM and KRCA-TV, Sacramento, died in Sacramento Oct. 29. A native of Kansas City, he came west and worked in the San Francisco area before becoming national ad director of the Oakland Tribune.

In 1936 Kelly left Oakland and went to Sacramento, where he opened his own ad agency. He started KCRA-AM in 1945 and 10 years later built and developed KCRA-TV—both stations are NBC affiliates.

This man has just heard 229 political speeches on Granada TV.

In a democracy, every candidate, minor as well as major, must have his day (and sometimes his night). Granada gave free TV time to 229 of them in last year's Granada Election Marathon. The effect wasn't always electrifying, but it was reassuring. Particularly now, in a decade when the choice of free elections is not open to everybody.

Jeffrey Hunter Sees Playing Saviour Start, Not End, of Big Acting Roles

Madrid, Nov. 8.

While Hollywood film commentators are questioning th effect Jeffrey Hunter's role as Jesus Christ in "King of Kings" will have on his career, intimates of the young actor ys he never had any misgivings on the subject and feels his optimism is more than justified after receiving a half-dozen offers during the past two months to star in upcoming American productions.

Before he signed with producer Samuel Bronston for the role early in 1960, Hunter was piled with dire forebodings from friends who said H. B. Warner did his career no good via the same role for Cecil B. DeMille's previous "King of Kings."

On the eve of his departure for Culver City and a month of post-production activity, and a month after termination of shooting on "King of Kings" in Spain, Hunter was still unavailable to the press—a policy of his ow choice that isolated him from newsmen, photogs and public appearances since he arrived here last May.

According to "Kings" director Nicholas Ray, Hunter has deflated the bugaboo that certain roles extinguish screen career. "Today," Ray said, "a career depends en-

Too Many Foreign Stars May Be a B.O. Threat To Israel's Native Theatre

By JOSEPH SAPID

Tel Aviv, Nov. 8.

A new kind of invasion that Israel has to tackle is that of foreign entertainers.

Managers of local theatres, all of them repertory groups, have repeatedly demanded that foreign competition should be curtailed. Otherwise, they warned, "foreigners will destroy the Hebrew theatre."

Impresarios, to whom foreign performers mean bread and butter, are trying to fight off this demand.

Tel Aviv, the center of cultural life in this country, has population of 400,000, to support three big and half a dozen small theatre groups, a permanent Opera House and the Israeli Symphonic Orchestra. Though the Israelis really like theatre, and love music, this is too much and the theatres are always on the verge of red ink. Films are tough competition too. As yet there is no tv in Israel.

But all could manage to keep in balance if it were not for imported entertainment. Marlene Dietrich, Harry Belafonte, singers from Milan's La Scala, and Richard Tucker from the Metropolitan, Indian dancer Ram Gopal, the Dutch

Animal Scenes: Horror for Real

Madrid, Nov. 8.

Wild animals took the spotlight away from film players in two low-budget Italo-Spanish film spectacles last week.

At Sevilla Studios, a "shaved" bull took on four would-be gladiators in the arena sequence filmed for "Ursus," and all four were tossed over the barriers and almost off the set. After hospital treatment and observation, four victims were sent home.

An accident of graver consequence took place during the same week at CEA Studios during a lion-taming act for "Goliath and the Giants." Tr iner Joaquin Barranco lost an arm in a savage mauling when one of his four lions mistook the trainer's identity he entered a dungeon-cage set in costume. As horrified onlookers panicked, one of the lions escaped from the stage and studio and raced through the neighborhood, terrifying the natives. Police finally cornered the animal and civil guards machine-gunned it to death.

RESIDUAL CHECKS: UPDATED RAPTURE

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

In the seven years since it distributed its first residual check, Screen Actors Guild has marked a significant increase the cost of sending out the money to its members. One part-time clerk mailed about 16 residual checks per day in 1954; today, SAG has a department head and six full-time clerical employees distributing an average of 6,530 per onth.

According to the Guild, it now costs about $50,000 per year to distribute the residuals. That's about one-seventh of the total annual revenue from members' dues.

Guild reports that 71,829 individual checks were distributed during the past 11 months nd that by the end of October the number of checks for tv re-runs was expected to pass 75,000.

H'WOOD WAVE TOO 'ADULT'?

By JACK PITMAN

Chicago, Nov. 8.

The vaunted "new liberty" of the Hollywood film producers and the resultant flow of "adult" features seems not a matter of appreciation to that segment of American theatredom represented here at the convention of Allied States Assn. Contrariwise, Allied is formulating a denunciation of the "sex and violence" emphasis. With this is expected to go advocacy of what amounts to a volunteer theatre boycott of "offending" producers. Not clear how such a boycott could be pinpointed a shortage-of-product market and by the lesser houses whose leverage is not that of the circuits.

Slap at "liberated" themes and dialog in many admittedly top-grossing releases will be made in proposals which the convention

Big League Ball Prospect Upsets Twin-City Exhibs

Minneapolis, Nov. 8.

Local theatre wners are viewing with mixed emotions the 1961 move of the Washington Senators baseball team to the Twin Cities. Feeling is that the start of major league baseball here bodes ill for exhibitors, but there are some strong opinions to the contrary. All exhibitors agree that a rich supply of top product will be needed to give film showers a chance to compete with the innovation.

Most pessimistic view is that the

Richard Korn's Orchestra of America which opens its second year of recitals at Carnegie Hall, N. Y. on Nov. 16 with Benny Goodman as clarinet soloist is doing its best to be "American" in membership. He will have seven Negro musicians (five a year ago), making the largest colored contingent in any symphony. Equally significant, there are 27 women in the total of 92 players.

In Korn's five string sections, three are headed by concert mistress — to wit, Eugenia Dengwel for the violas, Madeline Foley for the celli, Helen Kwalwasser the second violins.

Another novelty: second violin section includes a Hindu musician, Dominic Vaz.

One Year of 'Ben-Hur' Recalls That MGM's Thanksgiving Was Nov. 18, '59

A year ago on Nov. 18, 1959 "Ben-Hur" was unveiled for its first paid public showing at the Loew's State Theatre, N. Y. The event marked a culmination of a trying period in Metro's history. The company had sucessfully weathered two costly proxy fights. In addition, the company's income record had declined to a dangerous level. In the midst of these misfortunes, prexy Joseph R. Vogel turned on the greenlight for the $15,000,000 production, rated at that time a "go for broke" gesture on the part of M-G.

With "Ben-Hur" ready to mark its first anni next week, the wisdom of Vogel's decision has become more than evident. By Nov. 18 "Ben-Hur" will have had 325 world-wide openings, 55 overseas and 270 in the United States and Canada. The estimated total boxoffice gross is expected to reach $40,000,000 on that date, with $30,000,000 coming from domestic sources and $10,000,000 from abroad. At this pace,

AM-TV Set Sales Hit Peak In Sept.

Washington, Nov. 8.

Retail sales of television and radio sets hit the highest monthly level of the year during September, new statistics from the Electronic Industries Assn. disclose.

Radio sales had the greater jump, vaulting over the million mark for the first time in 1960. Excluding auto radios, they amounted to 1,102,902, a figure 307,484 higher than sales in the month before.

September tv set sales came to 620,810, almost 200,000 above August figures. For the first nine months of the year, tv set sales amounted to 4,100,541, a big climb over the 3,811,754 for the same period of 1959.

Radio sales, not counting auto radios, added up to 6,348,421 during the first three quarters of 1960, compared to 5,285,878 for the same time last year.

Brooklyn, 51st State In the Union, Enjoys Frenetic Cultural Binge

By NAN JOSEPH

Brooklyn, Nov. 8.

Brooklyn, the 51st state in the union, is undergoing a frenzied show biz and intellectual revival. Long regarded as the homebase of Igorot ignoramuses and the utter despair of the avant garde and les fauves, it is presently shedding its medieval strawberry festival behavior pattern in favor of contemporary music, sophisticated drama and abstract expression. The metamorphosis has been brought about, in a large measure, by the 102-year-old Brooklyn Academy of Music, a division of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

This onetime fustian-draped institution and citadel of arch conservatism is today displaying a massive passion for all aspects of the arts and sciences, particularly the former. Social scientists and other students of mass behavior are declaring that Brooklyn is currently far ahead of its hated rival, Manhattan, in numerous respects, notably in the defense of the citizen's right to read any book he so desires. To cite one instance: anyone can go into a Brooklyn public library and get a copy of Puccini's opera based on David Belasco's old pre-William S. Hart western, "Girl of the Golden West," was tentatively set as the season opener for 1961 at the Metropolitan Opera in Manhattan. Leonie Rysanek, Austrian blonde, or Leontyne Price, American Negro, have been considered for lead.

What may complicate the decision of impresario Rudolf Bing is the death of Dimitri Mitroupoulos who was to have conducted. "Girl," out of repertory for years, was once one of Enrico Caruso's many vehicles.

Britain's 'Chatterley' Okay Cues Pronto Sale Of Book & Pic's Reissue

London, Nov. 8.

Some 200,000 paperback copies of the uncut version of "Lady Chatterley's Lover" will be on sale throughout Britain by Thursday (10) following the Old Bailey verdict that D. H. Lawrence's book is not obscene. Penguin Books, which estimates that the case has cost them around $28,000, is geared for swift production of another 300,000 copies selling at 50c.

W. H. Smith's, Britain's largest booksellers, with more than 1,000 branches, announce that the book will not be displayed. Customers will have to ask for it if they want it. This is a policy that many other booksellers intend to follow. Public and school libraries are now making up their minds whether to include the book in their libraries.

Philips will bring out an LP disk of readings from the book. Ready on Nov. 30, it will sell at $5.57 and play for 44 minutes. Pamela Brown will do the readings,

Soho Strip Joints' Self-Regulation

London, Nov. 8.

Voluntary censorship for striptease bistros is behind the formation of the new Theatre Clubs Association and membership will be confined to those clubowners who okay having their shows censored. It's a bold attempt to clean up the sleaziness of much of the Soho entertainment belt. Founder members-clubs are the Nell Gwynn, Panama and Casbah clubs which, between them, claim a membership of over 250,000.

The Rev. Ver Mitchell, London vicar has agreed to join the censorship board, together with Pat Brand and Robert Gaddes, two prominent entertainment

The board will have a full-time paid inspector to see that the code is stuck to. Later they hope to have resentatives of the Home Office, the Lord Chamberlain's department and th Commissioner of Police.

According to Tony Tenser, spokesman for the new association, the code will insist that there be no complete nudity in shows, that strippers should not mix with the customers, and that there would be an agreement to regulate the rice of drinks. Says Tenser: "Striptease is a decent industry. It doesn't deserve the bad nam it's been getting lately. That's the fault of some so-called theatre clubs which have no standards. Som of the things that go on there are shocking. We're dissociating ourselves from these clubs."

TV's Summit Job

Whoever was elected the President of the United States, television's job in literally focusing the national—and global—spotlight on the candidates and the issues was a peak performance well done.

Whether the 65,-69,000,000 American voters had already made up their minds last summer, following the conventions, or whether they were influenced to "cross over" or look with fresh eyes on what Nixon and Kennedy stood for, the prime "image" stemmed from the searching telecameras. The daily press will always have the advantage of the research and the analysis but, in vivid, first-look focus, there is no gainsaying the impact of that video eye the candidates or, for that matter, any issue in the public interest.

More than atoning for whatever when payola and quizlings had put invidious spotlight on broadcasting, the networks did a summit job on public affairs and information programming to the degree, as some captious admen observed, that they wished some of the same imagination and enterprise had gone into the commercial "entertainment" shows.

Time may yet have to tell us whether this type of tele-politico exposure brooks the danger of "popularity contests" at the expense of sounder values; but none will gainsay the overall values that stem from a thoroughly informed nation. This was adult education in the best tradition. The "showmanship" advantages devolving from the paid segments are incidental.

Movies & Mores in the New Japan

By ARTHUR MAYER

Japan, once the Land of the Rising Sun, now a land of rising prices and prosperity and declining motion icture attendance. Hallowed ancient customs are fighting a losing battle against the inroads of modern industrialism and modern advertising techniques. Television aerials bestride the clustered thatched roofs of the village huts and tv cameras grind noisily away even at the tradition-bound Kabuki performances. Hydroelectric power plants are located next door to sacred Shinto shrines. You wash your sukiyaki down with Coca-Cola while peasants in the garb of their forefathers and equipped with their ancient tools chew Spearmint and smoke filtered cigarettes as they toil in the rice paddies.

The Music Hall Rockettes have nothing for precision or pep on a Tokyo dancing line, and the night-club performers have nothing on period. The students who adore American jazz and American beatnik unconventionalities may still demonstrate against a defense treaty with the United States, but under the terms of a new law they must riot in straight lines and not zigzag, at least physically. Instead of stabbing political leaders in the back verbally as is our custom, they actually st them the intestines—with the newsreel cameras advantageously placed to show the assassin posing, sword in hand, in the traditional attitude of a Samuri warrior.

The girls are discarding the richly colored kimonos and obi which make them look so enchanting and replacing them with Western skirts and blouses, which reveal them skinny and under-developed, not a Lollobrigida front or a Marilyn rear in a Ginza busload.)

Industry is booming. New factories, office buildings, apartments and theatres are being constructed

Spanish Count Composes As His Sister Heads For Royal Wedding

Madrid, Nov. 8.

The coming m rriage of King Baudouin of Belgium to Spanish Fabiola Mora, may give birth to a rarity—a Spanish tunemaker for international pop song markets.

The songwriter none other than Jaime, Count of Mora and Aragon, Fabiola's brother who, inspired by his sister's march to a throne, has already penned four timely tunes to mark the royal event.

Biggest hit to date, according to Count, is his "Fabiola Waltz," now in wide release both in Spain and Belgium. The tune is also circulating on wax—a recording by th Madrid String Orchestra under th direction of the Count himself. The "Fabiola Waltz" is a song without words.

Three other tunes ready for lease are "Waltz of the Queen," "Hymn to Brussels" and "Royal Spanish. Last-mentioned is music for ballet as yet unchoreographed.

With the coming royal wedding a big news item in the Continental press, Jaime Mora envisages hefty returns in the Old World, and hopes his U.S. rep. music publisher Robert Mollin, will uncover riches for these exploitation tunes in the New World.

Wall Streeters Tend to Overlook Li'l Fact: Distribs Don't Own All Pix

Many Wall Streeters, in guessing at the potential value of the post-1948 film libraries for television, seem to lose sight of the fact that the major companies do not own many of these picture properties outright.

It was shortly after 1950 that the "participation" era began. Independent producers, stars and others share in the ownership of many of the modern backlog productions. Deals have varied, of course, but in most cases the participant has 50% and in some instances up to 75%.

Oscarcast Moves To Santa Monica

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Board of governors of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences has entered an agreement to stage the 33d annual Oscar show next April in the Santa Monica Civic Auditorium.

Allied Artists president Steve Broidy, who chairs the Awards program committee, in revealing the switch from the RKO-owned Pantages Theatres, stated that all possible locations were scouted in the area and the Auditorium was selected because of seating capacity plus press, parking and staging facilities. He said the full Acad board agreed.

Pantages cut its capacity fr m 2,812 to 1,512 seats for the current run of "Spartacus" and also remodeled in a manner which might impair an Oscar telecast. Santa Monica location seats 2,558, accommodates 1,500 cars and has a large adjacent hall that can be used for the press corps.

Switch has the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce fuming.

BLOODY SCENES OUT. 'SPARTACUS' RATES A-III

Legion of Decency has rated Universal's "Spartacus" A-III (morally unobjectionable for adults). Action follows th previously reported negotiations between th film company and the Catholic reviewing group which resulted in U's cutting two short scenes of violence, one showing a hand being cut off in a battle, and the other showing Laurence Olivier sticking a small coup de grace dagger into the neck of a gladiator, and immediately being doused with the victim's blood.

Legion's announcement of the rating for the film contains no mment on the matter.

Leitzel, Cardoni Articles In New Yorker as Film

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Universal has purchased rights to Robert Lewis Taylor's New Yorker mag series on lives of circus greats Lillian Leitzel and Alfredo Cardoni for a reported $150,000, and handed producer reins to Ross Hunter. William Ludwig is scripting.

Film, planned as a possible Rock Hudson starrer, is slated for next year's filming on a $2,000,000 to $3,000,000 budget in Denmark, Switzerland, Italy and New York.

Rosmarin to Rome

Charles Rosmarin, formerly Continental manager of RKO Pictures in Europe, will succeed Lee Kamrn as Metro's managing director in Italy. The changeover will take place on Jan. 1, effective date of Kamern's exit.

Kamern, once manager of the Astor Theatre on Broadway, has been with Metro since 1945. Rosmarin is a 30-year veteran of the film business.

A Hazy Situation: How Stands Pact With Spaniards?

Madrid, Nov. 8.

Does a film contract exist between Spain and the Motion Picture Export Association? The answer is not an easy one. The one-year pact that was signed last year terminated Oct. 31 and the general feeling in Madrid was that a new one still remained to be negotiated.

MPEA vice president Griffith Johnson, who had talks last week with under-secretary of Information Villar Palasi and director-general for Cinema Munoz Fontan, said shortly prior to his departure for New York that last year's agreement has been automatically renewed.

The difficulty is to determine what constitutes last year's agreement, a tri-part document that has been interpreted and misinterpreted at will. The general agreement, signed by both parties, merely establishes total number of Yank pix allowed into Spain and lists the percentages of blocked and remittance peseta profits.

The rea of controversy, however, still lies in the unpublished unilateral pact annexes in which each party lists and details distinct conceptions of important conditions relating to the pact itself.

Technically, the jointly signed general agreement contains nothing impeding automatic renewal, but says nothing of such major as MPEA right to allocate to its own members, the degree of U. S. co-operation ith the Spanish film industry and many other sore points on which Spain and MPEA still do not see eye to eye.

A major development is the allocation of import licenses to American companies under the Spanish "baremo," which removes jurisdiction from MPEA for allocation to its own member compani This is now a fait accompli. Another certainty is that American companies are basically getting fewer pictures this year than last, with the whole question of bonus licenses completely up in the air until such time as MPEA and Spanish authorities agree on an unequivocal formula of U. S. co-operation with local filmites in relation to bonus licenses.

Plans to Shoot Italo Film in Boston Area

Rome, Nov. 8.

Producer Dino DeLaurentiis revealed plans here to shoot the first all-Italian film ever to be made entirely in the U.S. Project is "Sacco and Vanzetti," which director Mauro Bolognini will shoot in the Boston area.

Vittorio Gassmann will have one of the leads. Most of the other players are expected to be Italians, also.

SUIT COULD HIT BIOGRAPHY TREND

Truth may not only be stranger than fiction but, to the producer of a film biography of a living or not-too-long dead person, it may also be fraught with many more headaches, most of them legal. Just ask the producers of recent pix dealing with such assorted personalities as Al Capone, Leopold-Loeb, Oscar Wilde, Helen Morgan, among others.

Entire situation, however, may be clarified in the not too distant future should attorney Ephraim London successfully defend 20th-Fox, Darryl Zanuck, Meyer Levin, Simon & Schuster, et al in the suit brought against them by Nathan Leopold in connection with "Compulsion." Latter, of course, Levin's "fictionalized" account of the notorious Bobby Franks "thrill killing" of the 1920s, made into a 20th film by Zanuck in 1959.

Plenty of 'Realism'

Importance of the case can be seen from the number of "real life" films now or recently in release—"Inherit The Wind," "Al Capone," "The Purple Gang," "Hell to Eternity," "Murder, Inc.," "The Gallant Hours," "The Nun's Story," "The Inn of The Sixth Happiness," "Pretty Boy Floyd," "Pay or Die," "Oscar Wilde," "The Green Carnation" (The Trials of Oscar Wilde), and the list of upcoming bios: Universal's "The Sixth Man" (Ira Hayes); 20th's "The Night They Burned The Mountain" (Dr. Tom Dooley), "The Wingate Story" (Gen. Ord Wingate), and "The Instant Prince" (Mike Romanoff), and Columbia's "Mad Dog Coll" (Vincent Coll).

While the plaintiff in the "Compulsion" case is a convicted murderer, attorney London feels that the outcome of the suit could set an important precedent for all upcoming "real life" pix, whether or not the central character is "criminally" notorious. London flies to San Juan Nov. 15 to conduct pretrial examination of Leopold, who now lives and works in Puerto Rico.

Leopold's suit against "Compulsion" is based on a "rights of privacy" idea first enunciated in a 1903 New York law later adopted by other states, including Illinois where his suit was originally filed. Leopold is seeking damages for unauthorized use of his personality and of events in his life "for purposes of trade."

In his New York office Friday (4), London said, first off, that there had never been any attempt to disguise idea that "Compulsion" is the Leopold-Loeb story. However, he continued, there is no actual precedent that says one cannot fictionalize events in the public domain—the matter has never been tested in an appellate court. And, he emphasizes, films are a rather special case in this respect, because, even though they may use real life names, the photographed property, unless it is a documentary with persons playing themselves, immediately must be classed as fiction as soon as an actor appears as someone other than himself.

It is London's opinion—and one of the reasons he doesn't favor any out-of-court settlement in the Leopold case—that the film industry

VARIETY

Paramount's release of Alfred Hitchcock's "Psycho" has grossed slightly over $7,000,000 in its first 3,750 dates in terms of United States rentals.

Official sources this week disclosed that the film took in $250,000 in rentals in its first 75 engagements in Canada.

Runs abroad so far strongly indicate that the foreign market (which excludes the U. S. and Canada) will yield a minmum of $6,000,000 in rentals.

There's no telling as of this date as to how far the domestic income will go. (To be stressed is the fact that the revenue referred to is that which has accrued to distributor Par, and not theatre gross.)

But this much is for sure: "Psycho" clearly is the biggest money-maker on the Par books since "Ten Commandments." And co-owner Hitchcock now is likely to gross about $6,000,000 from the entry, or $1,000,000 above VARIETY's previous estimate, which was $5,000,000.

Unknown is how Hitchcock will enter the take on his personal books. But a before-taxes gross of $6,000,000 from an enterprise that involved less than a year's time would seem to establish some sort of show business record.

Key factor, of course, is that "Psycho" was a modest budgeter, as compared with anything like "Commandments."

Jolting Shifts As Hotelmen In Loew's Saddle

As part of a complete realignment of Loew's Theatres operations, Charles E. Kurtzman has been designated executive in complete charge of Loew's out-of-town theatres. This duty was previously in the domain of executive v.p. John F. Murphy. Murphy, it's understood, will now be free to devote more time to buying and booking activities.

At the same time, Loew's in-town (N.Y.) theatre operations have also been revised as part of an economy program instituted by Laurence Tisch, chairman of the board and chief executive officer, and Preston R. (Bob) Tisch, chairman of the executive committee. The Tisches hold the controlling interest in Loew's via a 25% ownership of the outstanding stock.

The entire N.Y. operation will be under the supervision of Murray Lenekoff, assistant to prexy Eugene V. Picker, and James Bruno. The latter will keep an eye on the Broadway and New Jersey theatres while Lenekoff will be supervising head of the rest of the theatres in the N.Y. area. At the same time, three former N.Y. division managers are being sent back to theatres as managers.

Under Kurtzman, the company's out-of-town circuit will be reorganized into three distinct operating areas—to be called the Eastern, Central, and Southern divisions.

William Elder will be the Eastern division manager, with headquarters in Boston and will supervise the company's theatres in Boston, Bridgeport, Hartford, New Haven, Norfolk, Providence, Reading, Richmond, Springfield, Waterbury, Wilmington, and Worcester.

Frank Murphy will supervise the Central division with offices in Cleveland. Cities under Murphy's control are Akron, Buffalo, Canton, Chicago, Cleveland, Columbus, Dayton, Indianapolis, Niagra Falls,

In the Strong-Box, Par's Got 'Em

Paramount is well fixed financially, according to a Wall Street breakdown on valuation of some of the company's securities and assets:

42,200 shares of Fairchild Camera, $7,300,000.
316,000 shares of Ampex, $7,270,000.
888,500 shares of Famous Players Canadian, $17,770,000.
Station KTLA and Los Angeles properties, $5,000,000.
Dot Records, $5,000,000.
Par Building, $5,500,000.
Post-1948 film library, $40,000,000-plus.

In addition there are International Telemeter, Chromatic Laboratories, the Lawrence color television tube and the Autometric Division. Last named, which deals in photographic information processes, this year will gross around $6,000,000 and has a tall backlog of orders from the military.

TOA & Academy's Oscar Team-Play

Theatre Owners of America and the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences have established a new liaison program to bring about a closer relationship between theatres and the annual Oscar event.

Both organizations have named liaison committees and will schedule sessions "to further the joint program." TOA committee consists of M. Spencer Leve as chairman, E. D. Martin, Walter Reade Jr., and Roy Cooper. Academy counterpart consists of Valentine Davies, Steve Broidy, Jack Diamond, John Flinn, Dan Baer and Archie Lee. Diamond is chairman of the Academy group.

Albert M. Pickus, TOA topper, said that the new liaison "could also lead, on a long range basis, to an eventual return of the Academy Award program to industry sponsorship."

Davies, Academy president, said Academy had always done its best to cooperate with TOA. He cited the scheduling of the Oscarcast on a Monday night so that it will have a minimum effect on theatre attendance even though this increases the show's expenses because of the necessity of weekend rehearsals.

DENKER WINS MOVE IN OURSLER-20TH SUIT

Twentieth-Fox' motion to have author Henry Denker's suit re "The Greatest Story Ever Told" dismissed has been denied by New York Supreme Court Justice Vincent Lupiano. Denker's suit seeks to cancel the contract under which Denker and the late Mrs. Fulton Oursler sold the "Greatest Story" to 20th. Mrs. Oursler's portion is now held by two sets of heirs.

A spokesman for 20th said Monday (7) that the film company has not yet decided whether it will appeal Lupiano's decision to the Appellate Court or allow the case to go to trial.

Denker charges that the 20th has not lived up to the original contract terms by failing to complete photography on the pic within five years of the date of the contract, entered into in 1954. Issue comes down to the meaning of the word "contemplates."

Trim Running Time of 'Alamo'; Playoff Strategy Being Weighed

Indications are that "The Alamo" will be shortly offered for non-hardticket showings although a number of reserved-seat engagements may be continued.

Russell Birdwell, star-producer-director John Wayne's personal representative, declared that from the outset there had never been a firm policy "that every date will be a roadshow." Birdwell stressed that there was a necessity to "feel one's way" and on the basis of a number of dates a decision will be made on the release pattern.

In the eight U.S. dates so far, Birdwell said that weekend business was "extremely good," but acknowledged that the mid-week take was off. He attributed the general 70 to 75% capacity to the "soft period" being experienced in film attendance because of interest in the Presidential election.

At the same time, Birdwell confirmed that approximately 25 to 30 minutes will be cut from the picture. The trimming will bring the running time down to about two hours and 40 minutes. This length will be retained for the non-hardticket dates. The sliced version is expected to make its appearance in theatres about a week and a half.

According to Birdwell, Wayne admitted that he was "over-sentimental" about a long sequence (a birthday party) featuring his four-year-old daughter. However, in the interest of tightening the picture, this segment will be eliminated. Also coming out is one of Wayne's big scenes and the prayer sequence of the parson.

The picture is opening in four cities today (Wed.) on hardticket —Tulsa, Oklahoma City, Toronto and Montreal. This will make a total of 13 world-wide dates, 12 in the U.S. and one in London.

Screen Hits—Still Are

Merrill, Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith has joined Wall Street's film investigating fraternity, and concludes that while the tv activity at the studios is fine for cutting the overhead, the big money still is in the big theatricals.

This largest of all brokerage houses made with a qualified upbeat analysis of picture companies, noting business is okay but it's still an unpredictable industry.

Chi Daily News: Films' Best Pal

Chicago, Nov. 8.

All four Chicago dailies have traditionally been very "helpful" to the picture trade in terms of advance yarns, photo layouts, tie-ins, etc., but of late it seems the Chi Daily News has been particularly upbeating the industry.

Moreover, it's noted, gazette has been rallying public interest at a time when the Windy City first-runs are trying to shake off the doldrums. Paper currently is using its truck panels to promote Sam Lesner's film reviews, and recently gave hefty newspage play to the by-liner's prose-and picture spread ticking off the blockbusters due in town this month.

Lesner, it's further noted, was only Chi cinema scribe to make "The Alamo" world preem junket to San Antonio, wrapping it up with a color story just before the pic kicked off here. His review of it, by the way, was the lone favorable judgment it got here.

Woman Sues, Alleging Fraudulent Statements Behind Skiatron Shares

A woman stockholder, claiming to have lost $7,739 on 1,400 shares of Skiatron stock purchased in 1959, has filed suit in N.Y. Federal Court to recover her losses.

Leona Britten, who paid $9,617 for the shares, named Skiatron Electronic & Television Corp., Skiatron of America, Arthur Levey, president of Skiatron Electronics; Matthew Fox, head of Skiatron of America (now Tolvision Inc.), and the brokerage firm of Schweickart & Co. in the suit.

The complainant charges that the defendants issued false statements regarding contracts with the Los Angeles Dodgers, San Francisco Giants, and impresario Sol Hurok.

SCOUTING NEW PLAYS, BUT NOT MUCH TO SEE

It's about this time every autumn that film studio execs trek to New York to see the new plays. Arthur Kramer, exec assistant to Columbia production v.p. Samuel Briskin, is among those currently in town. Also Ray Stark and Hal Wallis. Among other things they all want to oneeover the on-the-boards displays.

But the legit season hardly has been impressive so far. In other words, the Hollywood sleuths had better catch the "living theatre" entries pronto because they don't seem long for this world.

NEEDS HE KNOWS, BUT NOT WHERE TO GET 'EM

Albany, Nov. 8.

S. H. (Si) Fabian told interviewers here that Hollywood needs "more fine, creative artists, even geniuses" but he doesn't have the answer as to where to find them. The head man at Stanley Warner and Fabian Enterprises said college drama and writing sources apparently do not solve the pressing and complex problem. There's a crying need for competent authors, he said in effect.

He stressed that the story is the thing, for the biggest star cannot make a good picture out of a bad one, whereas good films have been made without stars.

In an interview with Ernie Tetrault of WRGB-TV, the exhibition leader came to the defense of Hollywood so far as the "adult" trend is concerned.

Fabian put it this way: "This is an era of greater frankness and motion pictures reflect it. Motion pictures reflect the mores of the time; they do not create the mores. Four-lettered words, once tabo, are now common in books."

Also interviewed was Fabian's son, Edward L. Fabian, who functions in a managerial capacity within the S-W and Fabian circuit operation. He said Hollywood is shaping its product for all ages and classes but he is of the opinion that producers are aiming their better product for the holiday periods.

PATHE-ALPHA'S FIRST STAR: MAUREEN O'HARA

With Theatre Owners of America placing its stamp of approval on the project, Pathe-Alpha Distributing Co., the production-distribution company organized by Pathe Laboratories, is set to proceed with its first production—"The Deadly Companions," starring Maureen O'Hara.

The film, said to be budgeted at over $1,000,000, will be produced by Charles B. FitzSimons from A. S. Fleischman's novel, "Yellowleg."

Under an agreement between TOA and Pathe-Alpha, each of Pathe's proposed productions must be approved by the exhib org's review committee if the new firm wants the support of TOA members on playdates. The initial film, according Pathe-Alpha prexy Budd Rogers, is scheduled to go before the cameras in late December or early January and should be ready for release in the April-May period.

Pathe-Alpha has disclosed plans to produce 12 to 14 pictures annually as a means of easing the product shortage.

American International Handling 3 Overseas But Not Domestically

American International Pictures which, last year, has set up franchise distribution deals in all major territories of the world, has just concluded deals for distribution of three films abroad which will not be handled by AIP domestically. This is first time AIP has branched out in this direction and reflects growth of its foreign operation, James H. Nicholson, prexy, told press lunch New York Thursday (3).

Policy, which has been followed for some by most of the major companies, is designed to bring down per pic distrib costs abroad. American acquisitions include "The Matador," Italo comedy starring Vittorio Gassman, for Latin America and Far East; "Some Like It Cold," another Italo comedy for South America, and "Revolt of the Barbarian," Jack Palance starrer produced by Marty Rackin and John Lee Mahin and originally shown as tv special here as "Rivak the Barbarian." Latter will be handled theatrically by AIP in Far East and South America.

Nicholson, and his veep in charge of foreign distribution, William Reich, also reported that they hoped to handle foreign distribution of Roger Corman's Filmgroup releases which are handled by Corman himself in U.S.

AIP Export Corp. has previously handled only those films produced or acquired initially for U.S. release. However, said prexy, due to coproduction deals in Italy and England, some product distributed by AIP in U.S. is not available on worldwide basis, necessitating acquisition of additional product to keep overseas distribution system busy.

Nicholson said AIP's production budget for 1961 will increase about

Olivier for Toll

Indication of what Paramount is cooking up in the way of new programming for its International Telemeter in West Toronto lies in the report that the company has signed Sir Laurence Olivier to a one-project deal.

He's to star in a live version of stage play, "Bell, Book and Candle" for the home toll system.

Upbeat Report from Rothchild

By GENE ARNEEL

Subscription television probably will become "a primary entertainment medium" whose domestic market revenue eventually could equal or surspass the $1,300,000,000 spent by Americans in film theatre admissions last year.

This is stated by a trio of analysts—M. B. Frankel, R. G. Gutenstein and B. F. Leventhal—in the course of an independent survey of Paramount operations in behalf of L. F. Rothchild & Co., brokers. Par owns the International Telemeter system w in operation i West Toronto.

This is probably the most upbeat appraisal of fee-tv to come from a non-partisan Wall Street outfit, and certainly the first to estimate yearly income at over one billion dollars.

Law of Least Exertion?

"The annoyances of baby-sitters, parking and rainy nights can be replaced by the convenience of the coin box," it's noted by the Rothchild people. They say the subject admittedly is a controversial one, but point up that already questioned the validity behind the argument that home toll will seriously disrupt conventional tv and theatres.

A favorable report from the Federal Communications Commission, w probing the principle of subscription tv will spur investor interes and give impetus to development of the new show business enterprise.

Capital investment is plenty large, considering the $100 per-hom installation cost but this will come down as installations increase. It's figured that a weekly return of $2 per set will be more than adequate. In the case of Par's Telemeter, the franchise operator bears all th expenses and pays Par 4 to 6% of the gross.

Bell Tie-Ins?

Rothchild says that Par management is now negotiating with the Bell Telephone System concerning introduction of Telemeter in the States. As stated in VARIETY previously, talks have been going on for some time but the telephone companies around the country have been moving slowly.

It's noted, too, that various state bodies may try to regulate or even prohibit the wired system.

On the theatrical end, Rothchild has kind words for the Par management. "The business-like and objective approach of present studio personnel should be reflected in second-half operating results, allowing 1960 operating earnings to approach or exceed the $2.62 per share reported in 1959," say the probers. High Par source told VARIETY this week that this year's operating profit will be slightly above last year and extra revenue, via the MCA television deal, will be well ahead.

Par was last of the major companies to sell pre-1948 films to tv interests and is in no rush to dispose of the post-48's. Latter is figured to be worth $50,000,000, or more.

Income from all sources indicates earnings of $5 per share annually for at least the next few years, according to Rothchild.

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Dover Productions, an indie, has been formed by Irving Ravetch and Harriet Frank Jr. Initial pic will be "Charlie Is My Darling," new Joyce Carey novel which pair screenplayed.

Deal has been finalized with Metro for financing and distribution of "Charlie" which rolls at Metro's Elstree Studios in London next spring with Martin Ritt directing. Zeigler, Hellman & Ross negotiated the deal for Dover with Metro chief Sol C. Siegel.

Tune-In-Late-Credit For Toll; Toronto Test Gets Par's 'Psycho'

Alfred Hitchcock's production of "Psycho," Paramount release, is set for a run on Par-owned International Telemeter in the Toronto suburb of Etobicoke with the "admission" policy patterned after that which obtained in theatres. The home toll system is so set up that home viewers will be unable to tune in after the picture starts.

Customers who deposit their coins after a performance begins will find that the money has been credited toward a later showing. They've been told this via the system's program information service and through the mails.

The wired fee-tv is so arranged that the audience may tune in any time within 11 minutes before the feature starts unwinding. Engagement tees off today (Wed.) and continues through next Monday with four shows daily, at 3, 5, 7 and 9 p.m. Viewing charge is $1 per installation.

Apart from the fact that Par is closing the doors on its potential customers after the opening frame of "Psycho," the presentation is regarded as unique in another respect. Film is high on shock thriller content of the type not usually seen on a living-room screen and audience reaction doubtless will be watched closely.

OLD IDEA FOR NEW YEAR'S EVE

As to That Exhibs-Military War: Par Dates Presley's 'G.I. Blues' For Camps Before Theatre Runs

Paramount's Elvis Presley starrer, "G.I. Blues," will receive prior release in military camp theatres, the company has notified Theatre Owners of America. The exhibitor organization, in the forefront in fighting military camp competition with commercial theatres, points out, however, that Par has been the most cooperative company in keeping exhibitors advised on its Army-Air Force releasing problems.

Par told TOA that "G.I. Blues" was made with Army cooperation and because of its Army theme. Par acceded to the request of the military that it be given first-run on the picture. According to TOA, the Army and Air Forces Motion Picture Service will present the picture at higher than normal admissions. The military camps received "G.I. Blues" on Oct. 23 and its expected that all military playdates will be completed by Nov. 23 when the picture is scheduled to reach most commercial theatres.

Two other Par pictures will go to the military before they reach commercial houses because, according to TOA, "of print and associated problems." The pix include "A Breath of Scandal," Par's October release, and "The Savage Innocents," its February, 1961 release.

TOA stresses, however, that Par ill serve commercial theatres first with its two biggest releases—"The World of Suzie Wong," which will play special engagements in the Christmas-New Year's period and go into general release in February, and "Cinderella," the Jerry Lewis entry, which will be Par's regular Christmas release. The military, says TOA, will not get the prints of either of these pix until after most commercial theatres.

Columbia & Par Canadian Merger On the Sprout

Merger of the Paramount and Columbia distribution facilities in Canada has been working out well so far, according to sources at both companies. Paper work was completed only a month ago, and about another five months will be required to determine the specifics in terms of economy and efficiency.

However, so far, so good.

Remaining to be seen is whether the get-together north of the border is to be forerunner to similar mergers in the States. More conclusive results of the Canadian operation will be scrutinized, of course.

Sales exec and lawyers will devote much skull practice to the idea following the first half-year.

PRE-SAMPLES OF DUE-IN FEATURES

At least four major companies are readying one-shot New Year's Eve bookings for pictures that will go into general release shortly after the new year. In almost all cases, the pictures are set in theatres that will play the entries at the later date.

The idea, employed for number of years, serves as hypo for added business on New Year's Eve in that the customers are offered what amounts to a special event. Percentages calculated from the time the boxoffice opens for the special attraction. A cutoff time of 6 p.m. or 7 p.m. is usually set for the previous bill. The New Year's Eve take is thrown in with the results from the regular later run and exhibs pay their bill on the basis of the total engagement.

Comedies predominate in the offerings. United Artists is making available "Facts of Life," the Lucille Ball-Bob Hope starrer. Paramount, following tradition, will probably offer Jerry Lewis' "Cinderfella." For several years Par has come through with a new Lewis picture for New Year's Eve showings. "Double Trouble," the Tommy Noonan-Pete Marshall starrer, will be 20th-Fox's entry. Warner Bros. will buck the comedy lineup with a murder melodrama, "Fever in the Blood," starring Ephraim Zimbalist Jr.

The one-shot showings not only mean substantial extra coin but can also serve as an important word-of-mouth stimulant. This was Universal's experience when it offered "Midnight Lace" for special one-shot Halloween dates recently. According to U's eastern pub-ad manager Philip Gerard, it provides a great pre-selling opportunity through word-of-mouth. "You can't buy this kind of a campaign," Gerard indicated. "Word-of-mouth is the most effective selling gimmick in our business today."

'Salt of Earth' Action Revived; Returned to Trial Court Which Dismissed It 'With Prejudice'

Th "Salt of the Earth" suit, pending since 1958, took a new turn last week when the U.S. Court of Appeals reversed and remanded back to a lower court for trial the dismissal of a $7,500,000 antitrust suit against the major film companies and other defendants filed by the "Salt" producers and distributors.

The film, made by a group of alleged leftwingers and Hollywood blacklistees, has had difficulty in obtaining dates in theatres. The suit, brought by Independent Production Corp. and IPC Distributors against 107 defendants, including the major companies, charged that the defendants had conspired to prevent the production and distribution of "Salt."

In the upsetting of the lower court's action, there was an implied criticism of N.Y. Federal Court Judge Sidney Sugarman for summarily dismissing the case with prejudice. In the lower court proceedings, the defendants sought to examine the plaintiff corporation by taking a pre-trial examination of Herbert Biberman, a so-called member of the "Hollywood 10" who was involved with "Salt." Judge Sugarman ordered the plaintiffs to appear through Biberman, but Independent Production Corp. disclaimed Biberman as its managing agent.

At the court's order, Biberman appeared, but during the examination he refused to answer certain questions, relying on personal constitutional privilege. The defendants then obtained a show cause order to compel Biberman to answer the questions. At this hearing the counsel for Independent Productions disclaimed Biberman as managing agent for the company. On the basis of this disclaimer, the lower court entered the motion to dismiss the complaint and granted it with prejudice on the ground that the plaintiff corporation willfully failed to appear as ordered by the court.

The Appeals Court, in reversing the dismissal, upheld Independent Production Corp.'s contention that it had fully appeared and complied with the court order. In addition, the higher court added that the defendants had full opportunity to examine the witness for the purpose of preparing their defenses.

The higher court indicated, too, that the lower tribunal should have dealt with issues pertinent to the motion "to compel answers by specific procedures instead of ignoring these procedures and summarily dismissing the complaint even though this precipitate action is sought to be justified as being within the court's inherent powers." The Court of Appeals said that the lower court "need not and should not have resorted to the use of its inherent powers."

Paramount Will Stick With Its 50c Quarter Div

Paramount will continue its $2 annual dividend rate at least through the balance of this year. Although the stock has been strong and earnings still improving the Par board has yet to consider any extra melon for stockholders.

Par has been paying 50c quarterly since the company came into being—that is, split from domestic theatres. This was the payoff when the common shares were selling at about the $20 level and remains the same now, with the stock trading at over $50.

There has been speculation on and off in Wall St. areas that a boosted divvy might be forthcoming. Still could be, but not for a while.

Rosemont-Widney Team Maps 'Marry at Leisure' Feature for Britain

Norman Rosemont, v.p. of Alfred Productions, the Alan Jay Lerner-Frederick Loewe firm, and Stone (Bud) Widney, Lerner's production assistant, have organized an indie film production company, Rosebund Productions.

As their first project, Rosemont and Widney have acquired film rights to the English novel, "Marry at Leisure," by Anne Piper. Miss Piper has been signed to write the screenplay for the film which will be made under the title of "Candy."

The new team is currently assembling the full package and plans to produce the film in England with financing from a U.S. major. British thesps Stanley Baker and Janet Munro are set for the leads.

"North to Alaska" is a good-humored, old-fashioned, no-holds-barred, all-stops-out northern, a kind of rowdy second cousin to a not-very-adult western. It's the sort of easygoing, slaphappy entertainment that doesn't come around so very often anymore in films, a product that wins friends without influencing people. Viewed with the discriminating eye of sophisticated-at-all-costs maturity, the running joke may seem to slow down to a walk. The Henry Hathaway production must be accepted in absolutely the right spirit to be fully appreciated.

As a boxoffice attraction the 20th-Fox release will pick up steam from word-of-mouth about its several uninhibited, knockdown-drag-out free-for-all's, unquestionably the highlights of the picture. These sequences, together with the diversified appeal of the cast, ought to be just enough to counter the negative effects of recent saturation of the Alaskan setting in entertainment (particularly in television), and do the wicket-moving job.

The John Lee Mahin-Martin Rackin-Claude Binyon screenplay (based on "Birthday Gift," an unproduced play by Laszlo Fodor, adapted from an idea by John Kafka) takes an instantly recognizable yarn and wisely plays it for laughs. It's the story of the successful Alaskan gold prospector who transports a girl from Seattle north-to-Alaska for his lovesick partner, then proceeds to fall in love with her, she with him. Any seasoned filmgoer gets the message right from the start, but the message isn't the important thing in this picture. The fun is in the execution and, under Hathaway's free-wheeling direction, there's just enough of it to count.

The three brawls Hathaway has staged are classics of the cinematic art of make-believe pugilistics. Just about every trick in the "How to be a Motion Picture Stuntman" book is utilized, with telling comedy results. The first, at the outset of the film, is danced off amidst a barroom full of gushing beer keys. Second, highlighted by a mistaken piece of strategy in which star John Wayne unleashes a rail wagon down a steep incline at his foes but forgets to get out of it himself, is staged in a thorough water setting. Third at the tail-end of the picture, is one big mud-bath, with most of the mud winding up in and around Ernie Kovacs' eye.

Wayne and Kovacs share comedy honors. Wayne displays a genuine flair for the light approach, is far more animated than is his custom. Kovacs, apparently sensing instinctively that the shortest path to humor is to seem to be playing it seriously, is the best of the lot. The others, obviously less knowledgeable at the comedy trade, tend to play it too broadly, to adopt a see-how-funny-this-is attitude instead of letting the humor flow naturally out of the situations.

Director Hathaway ought to have curbed some of the excess zeal exhibited, particularly by Fabian and Stewart Granger. Both, however, are amiable types and have their better moments. Capucine does an attractive, spirited job, but has a few things to learn about the comic nuances of the English language. Supporting work is lively and colorful, most impressionably in the cases of Mickey Shaughnessy, Karl Swenson, Joe Sawyer and Kathleen Freeman.

The film was shot a long way from the Klondike, but captures the flavor of the far north, principally through the gratifying art direction of Duncan Cramer and Jack Martin Smith who have selected some fine Alaskan-looking sites in four areas of California and dressed them up with sets faithful to the popular notion of that northern frontier at the tur -of-the-century.

Credit editor Dorothy Spencer with some exceptionally perceptive cutting of the battle-royal passages, a major contribution to the comic impact of these three scenes. Leon Shamroy's lens maneuvers are both polished and energetic. Lionel Newman's music captures the flavor of the region. The title tune, as sung by Johnny Horton, has proven catchy enough to attract national attention via his recording.

Fabian croons one ballad, "If You Knew," by Russell Faith, Robert P. Marcucci and Peter DeAngelis. It's not much of a tune, but he sings it well. Tube.

The first Korean film to get a U.S. screening is a sort of Seoul-slanted "Blackboard Jungle," depicting the life and times of a gang of modern-day juvenile pickpockets in a Korean slum.

It has esoteric interest for two reasons: (1) It is a native Korean effort to come to grips with some of that nation's problems in motion picture, and (2) it shows the deep influence on Oriental life today of American culture, and especially Hollywood films.

The story focuses on the gang's leader (played by Whang Hae Nam), who looks, acts and dresses like a young Marlon Brando, right down to the leather motorcycle jacket of "The Wild One." He is quite unregenerate most of the picture, but eventually a pre-adolescent (played by Ahn Sung Kee) wheedles his way into the tough kid's heart of gold, and everything comes out okay. Subplots abound, most of them cliches harking as far back as Dickens.

Surprisingly, the technical work on this one, especially Duk Ji Kim's camera, is good. Picture has very little possibility in any U.S. market but might stand up quite well in the Japanese and Southeast Asian markets. Stef.

Rome, Nov. 2.

Fragile but highly amusing bedroom farce, with many saleable points, will make this a surefire entry at home and of good export value for certain markets where its piquancy can be exploited.

Story is one of those intricate affairs involving miraculous Chinese pills whose aphrodisiac effects are soon noted on the various denizens of an Italian resort hotel. It gets plenty of laughs, thanks to a well gagged script, nicely paced direction by Luciano Salce, and risible performances by Nino Manfredi, Vittorio DeSica and Mitchell Kowal. Male audiences will find Sylva Koscina and Jeanne Valerie must-see added attractions as faithful wife and French mistress, respectively.

Technical credits, including Armando Trovajoli's functional musical scoring, are good. Hawk.

Sad to relate, "The Last Woman on Earth" turns out to be the center of a typical romantic triangle, according to this Roger Corman production. Neither she nor the two last men on earth prove to be very appealing people. The result is an unappealing picture. Paired, in current citywide L.A. ings with "Journey to the Lost City" (see adjoining review), the Filmgroup release is a weak supporting attraction.

Robert Towne's two-dimensional screenplay proceeds to out all human life, with th exception of the aforementioned trio, via a sudden reduction in the oxygen content of the atmosphere. The three lucky ones survive because they happen to be deep sea diving at the time of the swiftly-passing, deadly phenomenon, which is never properly explained. The rest of the film is childish melodrama, concerned chiefly with the efforts of the two men to win the woman, when they ought to be doing something constructive. The possibilities inherent in the premise are never pursued.

Betsy Jones-Moreland plays the last woma , Antony Carbone and Edward Wain the last men. None is convincing, nor do they have a chance to be under the circumstances. The picture, filmed in Puerto Rico, is equally routine in areas of photography (save one good underwater sequence), art work and music. Corman's direction is generally lacklustre. Tube.

The rather modest 147-year-old Johann Wyss tale of the "Swiss Family Robinson" has been blown up to prodigious proportions in this Walt Disney effort. The essence and the spirit of that simple, intriguing story of a marvelously industrious family is all but snuffed out, only spasmodically flickering through the ponderous approach. But that isn't likely to keep the family trade from flocking to see it. The Buena Vista release is a zoo-lulu for the kiddies, specifically tailored to their tastes.

As reconstructed by scripter Lowell S. Hawley and executed under the guidance of director Ken Annakin, it is almost as if a Disney cartoon fantasy has come to life. The vital statistics and the element of hardship, intrinsically important aspects of the tale, have been stripped away. What emerges is a kind of glorious tropical Disneyland overrun with hapless pirates and happy beasts.

The Robinson family seems to be enjoying a standard of living that would be the envy of the average family of today. Their famous tree house is almost outrageously comfortable (running water, no less), and seems to pop up overnight with virtually no effort. In fact, the element of time and realistic effort, so vital to the overall perspective, is consistently vague in this version. It seems to be happening in a matter of days, not decades.

The climactic scrape with a band of Oriental buccaneers is the crushing blow to any semblance of credulity that has managed to strain through.

Photographically, it is a striking achievement. Through Harry Waxman's lens have been captured some compelling Technicolor views of Tobago island in the West Indies. Also on display is an array of animals to rival the beastly populations of most zoos. Editing by Peter Boita and music by William Alwyn are plus ingredients. Several sequences have a heap of genuine excitement, particularly the opening raft scene in which the family battles treacherous ocean currents to get fro wrecked ship to island. These aspects add excitement and interest to the Bill Anderson production, but don't make up for the all-important loss of the story's basic values.

The acting is generally capable, but hardly memorable. John Mills and Dorothy McGuire are pleasant as mother and father Robinson. James MacArthur and Tommy Kirk are energetic and appealing as their older sons, but Kevin Corcoran is a bit too vociferously squeaky for comfort along about the latter stages. Janet Munro brings freshness and sparkle to her character. That excellent British actor, Cecil Parker, does extremely well by a small role. Sessue Hayakawa plays the leader of the pirates.

In its effort to avoid gore or vivid violence, the picture is guilty of one of the most ineffectual battle sequences on record. Huge boulders and logs dispatched downhill by the Robinson's at their corsair adversaries are so obviously cardboard that the scene just about lapses into sheer slapstick for everyone but tots. From the standpoint of comedy, that may be desirable. But "Swiss Family Robinson" is something more than comedy. Tube.

Some fascinating views of the province of Rajastan in India are on display in Fritz Lang's production of "Journey to the Lost City." The picture's value ends there. Dramatically, it is as crude a sex-and-sand spectacle as one can imagine. The American International release strictly for those who are willing to settle for sheer visual escape as an excuse for visiting the cinema. Judging by the considerable popularity of this type of fare in recent years, this is no small group.

The film, directed by Lang with Werner Joerg Luedecke's screenplay as a guide, describes the perils encountered by a young western architect in the "lost city" of Eshnapur, a place teeming with sealed-off lepers, cruel princes, luscious dancing girls and loyal untouchables. The government is split into rival factions (neither very desirable), and there is a social eruption just in time to save the architect from an untimely denouement.

The players, led by Debra Paget, are burdened with dialog that is positively Ali-Babble all the way (sample: "The prince is pleased. Your dancing has relieved his melancholy"). Most of it is post-dubbed, adding to the discomfort.

Lang's direction is physically successful when he steers the lenses away from the actors and concentrates on the scenery. For this visuo-ethnic relief, some credit is due cameraman Richard Angst and art directors Willi Schatz and Helmut Nentwig. Tube.

Alan Sillitoe's novel has had such a fine paperback success that there should be no difficulty luring tab-buyers to the film. It's produced, directed and acted with integrity and insight. This is a good, absorbing but not very likeable film. There's some bold dialog and some seamy sex stuff.

The real problem, which only patrons can decide, is whether or not the "angry young man" theme is frayed at the edges. It's an amoral, rather than immoral picture, but it well earns its "X" certificate. This is a product of the school of realism, adult in approach, slightly reminiscent of "Look Back In Anger." The approach is adult, but when analyzed, it says nothing new or profound.

The hero is a Nottingham factory worker who refuses to conform. He hates all authority but protests so blunderingly. His attitude is simple: "What I want is a good time. The remainder is all propaganda." Through th week he works hard at his lathe. In his spare time—Saturday night and Sunday ing (and a couple of evenings)—he mes into his own. Liquor and women. But what he is trying to ve is difficult to decide. He has an affair with the wife of a workmate until she is preanant. Meanwhile, he picks up with a girl who won't play till she has a ring on the significant finger. Then he's beaten up by some pals of hi workmate, and decides to settle down but is grimly determined not to stop fighting.

This thinnish story is mostly vehicle for several first-class character parts. None of the people in the film is a particularly pleasant type, but all are real, devised and portrayed with keen insight and honesty. They speak in a peculiar Midlard accent which is not always entirely comprehensible and a certain amount of dubbing in more acceptable English has been deemed necessary for the U. S.

Sillitoe has done a good job with his first screenplay, though, necessarily, much of the motive and the thinking of his characters has been lost in the adaptation. Director Karel Reisz has graduated from documentaries and his experience in that field has enabled him to bring a sharp tang and authenticity to the film. The locations and th interiors have caught the full atmosphere of a Midland industrial town. Seth Holt's editing and Freddie Francis' camerawork also do full justice to a film that is always holding.

The author and director hardly have wished for better service from this cast. The central figure is cocky, violent and selfish yet at times almost pathetically likeable. This role is played by Albert Finney. Finney is a young, 24-year-old actor of immense promise and this, his first major screen performance, marks him as a man to watch. He handles scenes of belligerence and one or two torrid love scenes with complete confidence and is equally effective in quieter moments.

On a par is the performance of Rachel Roberts as the married woman carrying on a hopeless affair with Finney. With this performance, she immediately reaches star status.

Shirley Anne Field, as the conventional young woman who eventually snares Finney, is appropriately pert. Hylda Baker, a vaude and tv comedienne, making her debut i a straight part, has some

King of the Piefaces Dies at 80; Mack Sennett Created a Metier

Mack Sennett (nee Michael Sinnott), 80, widely and readily acknowledged as one of Hollywood's true pioneers, died there on Saturday (5) of an apparent heart attack. He had been living in the Motion Picture Country Home, which means he was being cared for by the film colony he so substantially helped to establish via his early-day two-reel comedies with the Keystone Kops and the Bathing Beauties.

Sennett died broke, but left a legacy in the cinematic zanyisms he created in a long-ago era but which still endure through showings at the Museum of Modern Art in New York, private picture clubs and television. The Kops of his broad comedies included Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle, George Jeskey, Rube Miller, Hank Mann and Al St. John. He further brought into the spotlight such names as Charlie Chaplin, Mabel Normand, Gloria Swanson, Wallace Beery and Buster Keaton.

The slapstick chase, the pie in the face and other wonderful absurdities, as placed on the screen by the producer, skyrocketed him to millionaire status almost overnight. His career actually began as an actor, at $25 per week, with D. W. Griffith in the old Biograph Studios Manhattan's 14th Street. Within a couple of years he branched out as a director, formed Keystone Comedies. Within the next year he made 104 pictures nd most of them were popular.

"Father Goose'

It was Miss Normand, not working from a script, but working at the studio where she wanted to prove a point, flipped a pie in the face of Ben Turpin. Whether inaccurate legend or not, the story warrants repeating. The cameras were turning at the time, producer Sennett kept the footage in the picture then shooting and used adaptations of the sam scene many times over in his future work.

Sennett was known by the oldtimers as Father Goose, this the nomenclature used as title for a biography done by Gene Fowler.

It was in 1939 that Sennett had his last fling before the public eye; it was a film production by Darryl Zanuck, for 20th-Fox, which was titled "Hollywood Cavalcade" and related a sentimental story about film production in California.

Said VARIETY's reviewer, "In an addition to a brief personal appearance, Mack Sennett plays an important off-screen role in the film, principal novelty of which is the successful and amusing introduction of oldtime Sennett comedy routines and formula. Views of filmmaking in the days when a pie was worth five jokes, and when Keystone Kops whirled recklessly through traffic to save distressed maidens, are hilariously reproduced. Something more than pantomime passed from films when sound entered the studios. A complete form of story-telling, labelled slapstick, also disappeared."

Changing times meant disaster for Sennett, who went formally bankrupt in 1933. He tried a comeback in 1935 with a picture he made in England in association with late N. Y. Mayor James J. Walker (this film never was released), assembled feature-length entry titled "Down Memory Lane" from his own srorts in 1949, and in 1954 penned his autobiography, "King of Comedy."

Sennett never married.

Universal's domestic billings for the fiscal year ended Oct. 29 were 32.2% ahead of the previous year, according to sales v.p. Henry H. (Hi) Martin. Mainly responsible for the hike in film rentals were three pictures — "Pillow Talk," which tallied $7,100,000 in 53 weeks; "Operation Petticoat," $8,700,000 in 45 weeks, and "Portrait in Black," $3,100,000 in 17 weeks. On the basis of "Portrait" business so far, Martin predicted that the overall domestic rental would hit $4,000,000.

"Midnight Lace," first release of the new fiscal year, has gotten off to a rousing start, Martin said, but he indicated that no projection of the gross could be made until it is in release at least 20 weeks. He noted, however, that a "big dating period" is coming up, with 455 engagements set between now and Thanksgiving.

U's next "target picture" under its "planned distribution and individual handling" policy, Martin told a trade press conference Monday (7), would be the Cary Grant starrer, "The Grass Is Greener," which begins a dual N. Y. engagement at the Astor and Trans-Lux 52d St. on Dec. 14 before its general release on Dec. 23.

Th sales chief disclosed that Universal will release between 22 and 24 pictures during the 1960-61 fiscal stanza. A total of 17 pictures, including two reissues, are already definitely set for release up until July. Martin pointed out that the company's basic 1960-61 program had been completed, since most pictures had been shot and scheduled. In addition to the pictures on the release slate, "The

SOME FUN OKAY, BUT NOT SCREEN

Toronto, Nov. 8.

A mi ister of United Church of Canada, this country's largest denomination, combined years ago from Methodists and Presbyterians, came out for a Sunday "as wide open as people want it" in a panel on blue laws at a YWCA here last week. He suggested a "serious conference" of church, labor, management and government to consider rewriting Ontario's Lord's Day Act. Supporting that idea were Lt.-Col. Herbert Wood, editor of Salvation Army's "War Cry," and Ald. Bert Cranham.

The Act "will accept a symphony but not a cinema," said Rev. Shaun Herron of St. Columba United Church. "What it's actually saying, then, is that a bad symphony more religious than a good movie."

Division of the clergy on the Blue Sunday vote due to be taken Dec. locally indicated the sharpness of the dispute which Rev. W. G. Berry of the United Church's Board of Evangelism and Social Service has been spearheading, he fighting the holding of any plebiscite.

Herron is the author of a letter which attacks the holier-than-thous in his own sect. In this letter, circulated here, he says, in part:

"What Dr. Berry and his kind are doing is substituting God for Marilyn Monroe. Aren't we being a bit lordly? Aren't we saying we are going to help people be what they should be? I'm personally offended. I don't want fellows like Dr. Berry telling me what I should do. I know better, both practically and theologically."

Sunday as a religious day never existed in Christ's time, said Herron; it was introduced some 300 years after His death; its only significance is that it is the day Christ rose from the dead. The Protestant Sunday, he said, was a day of rejoicing; all other religious observances of the day sprang from a book written by one Nicholas Barnes, "a perverted man. And Sunday has appeared more and more senseless with each succeeding generation."

While agreeing with the conference idea, Salvationist Wood said, "I don't think we should allow any further encroachments on the Lord's Day." Cranham supported a gradual easing of restrictions "as long as they don't cut into people's opportunities to go to church."

Footnote, for those who think blue laws are confined to Canada, appeared in some Canadian papers the e day—an AP story from N.Y., noting that Massachusetts forbids public dancing on Sunday —but it's legal to dance at a wedding if no admission is charged. Golf is OK, but miniature golf taboo. Bars close on Sunday, but restaurants and hotels may serve drinks at tables. Mississippi groceries must close Sunday, but not drive-in markets—which, however, can sell butter but not oleomargarine; beer but not food.

Fed up with the general run of motion pictures today, one private (non-film-industry) citizen has done something about it, that is, he has made a film which he feels will entertain, uplift and even, perhaps, instruct. The private citizen is Dominick Franco, a former distributor for both General Electric and General Motors in the New York area, and his picture is JB Enterprises current release "Heaven on Earth," now playing its world premiere engagement at the 55th Street Playhouse in New York.

An Italian-born American citizen of robust middle years, Franco bankrolled the pic to the tune of $200,000 and co-produced with Fulvio Lucisano of Rome. Despite the hardships involved and the adventures peculiar to film production, Franco said in New York last week that he was ready to continue his new career, though he will probably wait on any new ventures until he sees more extensive box-office receipts from "Heaven." Picture, filmed entirely in Rome in Eastman color, is a travelog on the Eternal City and, especially, the Vatican, laced together with some slight romantic fiction.

While most of the New York newspaper critics were highly impressed by the pictorial and documentary qualities of the film, which presents a number of "behind-the-scenes" views of the Vatican never filmed before, almost all the critics were a good deal less impressed by the boy-girl fiction frame. Franco stoutly defends this romance by saying that he had no intension of doing a purely "educational" film. But, tired of the jaded manners and mores evident in so many films today, he wanted to present some "good people in an attractive light."

'17 and Eager For Love'

In the same vein he defended the inclusion in the film of a scene in which the heroine sings a lightly rock-n-roll ballad "At Seventeen" ("I'm seventeen and eager for love"). Producer said he disagreed with critics who think the song, which comes on in close juxtaposition to a rendition of the "Ave Maria," destroys the exalted mood of the rest of the footage. Whole idea, he said, was to change the pace. Nevertheless, at the urging of an interviewer and of Faye Miske, head of JB Enterprises, he agreed that the sequence should come out of prints shown in subsequent dates.

Principal difficulty in production —which spread out over a two-year period—was in photographing frescos and painting in such historic locales as the Sistine Chapel and the Cathedral of St. John the Lateran. Because heat from the lights necessary for the color camera could destroy or damage the ancient paintings, work had to be suspended at frequent intervals to let things cool off. A major interruption came with the death of Pope Pius XII when permission to continue the film had to be obtained from the new Papal administration. This, however, provided opportunity for the producers and director Robert Spafford, to include in the film the gathering of the College of Cardinals and the conclave which resulted in election of Pope John XXIII.

Another production difficulty was fact that though film was photographed "speaking English," the quality of the English speaking varied greatly among the members of the cast. Film's heroine, Barbara Florian, is a Swede whose voice had to be dubbed in latter. It's Italian hero, Gabriele Tinti, dubbed in his own heavily-accented English, while Charles Fawcett, an American, spoke with a southern accent and had later to be dubbed into unaccented English.

Wald Prepares '39 Kirkland Play On Slate of 14

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Producer Jerry Wald has sewed up film rights to both Jack Kirkland's 1939 play, "I Must Love Someone," and D. H. Lawrence's lengthy novel, "The Lost Girl," bringing to 14 the number of properties he's actively preparing at 20th-Fox.

Kirkland, playwright who transferred Erskine Caldwell's "Tobacco Road" to the stage, penned "I Must Love Someone" with Leyla Georgie and presented it at the Longacre Theatre in New York. Wald has retitled property "Girls Are Here To Stay" and has slated it as a six-femme piece to star 20th contractees Juliet Prowse, Joan Collins, Barrie Chase, Julie Newmar, Diana Trask and Suzy Parker. It's the story of a world-famous singing sextet, revolving around the private lives of each.

"Lost Girl" is a Lawrence novel which has not been published in the United States but is set for publication through New American Library. Wald has signed John Cheever, a top American novelist and New Yorker writer, to pen "Lost Girl" as his first screenplay. Tony Richardson, British director who recently helmed "Sanctuary" at 20th, likely will direct the Wald film.

Producer additionally is reactivating "The Jean Harlow Story," a property he has long projected, and, after 2½ years, is activating "Slapstick," biog of Harold Lloyd.

Next up on Wald's indie slate is "Wild in the Country," Clifford Odets screenplay which will star Elvis Presley, Tuesday Weld and Millie Perkins, with Philip Dunne directing. Also set are "Return to Peyton Place," for which only Gene Tierney has been signed and

MATOFSKY TO ROME ON LEVINE'S 'WONDERS'

Harvey Matofsky has resigned as United Artists homeoffice press-agent to join Embassy Pictures.

He'll leave New York shortly for Rome and the job of publicity co-ordinator on Joseph E. Levine's "Wonders of Aladdin."

Mull A West African Development Setup To Broaden Its Exhibition

Motion Picture Export Assn. board Thursday (3) authorized prexy Eric Johnston to appoint a committee to consider establishment of a West African Development Company to "develop new theatres, to provide direct distribution of American films in the area, and to promote and protect general interests of American films in the new nations."

Project would encompass all West African countries from Senegal down to Angola. Area has a population of more than 100,000,000 and only 240 theatres. Annual returns to U.S. distribs is less than $500,000.

Company would be organized under Webb-Pomerene Act and participated in "by such MPEA companies as wish to join." Company would be separate from MPEA, but Johnston would serve as its top exec. Directors would be representatives of New York offices of participating companies, and its home-offices in New York.

Airconditioning

Major functions of company would be:

(1) Sales and distribution of films of participating companies "to the extent that participating companies agree upon." Also, company would be empowered to develop a system of 16m distribution.

(2) Program of developing modern exhibition outlets with aim to establish in important centers of West Africa "at least one airconditioned theatre each."

(3) Setting up general program of promotion and government relations in main West African territories.

(4) Development of production and coproduction opportunities if demand justifies production in that area.

Committee was authorized to work out details for organizing and financing such a company. Committee might also make detailed inspection trip to Africa and would report back to board with recommendations. Members of committee will be named shortly.

David Brown will produce "Mamba Point," new novel of modern-day Africa being written by Marie Hackett and Jo Vita, for 20th-Fox, with Alfred Hayes set to script.

L.A. Picks Up; 'Butterfield' Great $28,000, 'Inherit' Mild 15G, 'Alamo' Hefty 24G, 'Spartacus' Tall $28,500

Los Angeles, Nov. 8.

Overall prospects for L.A. first-runs are considerably up this week despite generally spotty biz stemming from mostly weak openers plus weekend rains and Election Day dropoff. A big boost is coming from "Butterfield 8" which shapes boff $28,000 or close at Hollywood Paramount, with four hardticket pix also showing well.

"Inherit the Wind" is shaping soft $15,000 in first at the Chinese. "Sons and Lovers" is slim $14,000 or near in four theatres on first general release.

"Spartacus" shapes fancy $28 500 in third Pantages round. "Alamo" is up in second with a hefty $24,-000 likely at Carthay.

"This Is Cinerama," on reissue at Warner Hollywood, where it was originally, looks slick $18.000 in first. "Ben-Hur" is rated clicky $22,700 in 50th frame at the Egyptian.

Estimates for This Week

Chinese (FWC) (1,408; $2-$2.40) —"Inherit Wind" (UA). Soft $15,-000. Last week, "Dark at Top of Stairs" (WB) (5th wk), $5,300.

'Epitaph' Hot 12G, Cleve.; 'Lace' 13G

Cleveland, Nov. 8.

Only a few pix are weathering the presidential election storm current session here. But these are doing well. Top newcomer is "Let No Man Write My Epitaph," rated sharp at Palace. However, "Breath of Scandal" is only poor at State while opener for "Sunrise at Campobello" is sluggish at Allen. "Midnight Lace" looms smash in second Hipp stanza.

Estimates for This Week

Allen (SW) (3,500; $1-$1.50) — "Sunrise at Campobello" (WB) Sluggish $8,000. Last week, "Song Without End" (Col), $10,500.

Continental Art (Art Theatre Guild) (950; $1.25) — "Captain's Table" (Indie) (2d wk). Routine $1,-700. Last week, $2,200.

Heights Art (Art Theatre Guild) (950; $1.25) — "Carry On Nurse" (Gov). Big $5,500. Last week, "Hiroshima Mon Amour" (Zenith) (3d wk), $1,800.

Hippodrome (Eastern Hipp) (3,-700; $1-$1.50) — "Midnight Lace" (U) (2d wk). Sturdy $13,000. Last week, $16,000.

Palace (Silk & Helpern) (3,750; $1-$1.25)—"Let No Man Write My Epitaph" (Col). Sharp $12,000 or near. Last week, "Gigi" (M-G) and "Around World in 80 Days" (UA) (reissues), $7,000.

State (Loew) (3,700; $1.25) — "Breath of Scandal" (Par). Poor $6,500. Last week, "Magnificent Seven"(UA), $9,500.

Stillman (Loew) (2,700; $1-$1.50) "Magnificent Seven" (UA) (m.o.), Average $8,000. Last week, "Sword and Dragon" (Indie) (2d wk), $5,000.

'SASSY' SLOW $8,000 IN PROV.; 'SUNRISE' 7G

Providence, Nov. 8.

Biz is mostly lower this week, with the new films little help. A mild week looms for "Fast and Sassy" at State. The twentieth week of "Ben-Hur" is sturdy but Majestic's "Sunrise at Campobello" is only good.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 65-90)—"Rodan" (DCA) and "Monster from Green Hell" (DCA) (reissues). Fair $4,000. Last week, "September Storm" (20th) and "Smiley Gets Gun" (20th), $5,000.

Elmwood (Snyder) (724; $1.50-$2.50) — "Ben-Hur" (M-G) (20th wk). Sturdy $7,500. Last week, same.

Majestic (SW) (2,200; 65-90)—"Sunrise at Campobello" (WB). Good $7,000. Last week, "Girl of Night" (WB) and "Go, Johnny, Go" (WB), $5,000.

State (Loew) (3,200; 65-90)—"Fast and Sassy" (Col) and "Nights of Lucretia Borgia" (Col). Mild $8,000 or close. Last week, "Thunder in Carolina" (Howco) and "Ma Barker's Killer Brood" (Indie), $5,500.

Strand (National Realty) (2,200; 65-90) — "Vertigo" (Par) and "Monster from Green Hell" (Col) (reissues). Weak $2,000. Last week, "Aim at Stars" (Col) and "Boy Who Stole Million" (Par), ditto.

'Lace' Mighty 16G, Pitt; 'Song' OK 8G

Pittsburgh, Nov. 8.

Three new entries, shaping from boff to fair, are sparking the wicket whirling at Pitt deluxers this week. "Midnight Lace," is leading the town at Fulton with a wow session. "Sunrise at Campobello" at Stanley looms barely okay. "Song Without End" is rated passable at Harris. Both Harris and Penn getting some of the turnaway biz from the Fulton. "Magnificent Seven" looks very good in second Penn session.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,365; $1-$1.50)—"Midnight Lace" (U). Wow $16,000 or over. Last week, "Miracle Fatima" (WB) (reissue), $3,500.

Harris (Associated) (2,100; $1-$1.50)—"Song Without End" (Col). Only passable at $8,000. Last week, "Aim At Stars" (Col), $2,700.

Penn (UATC) (3,300; $1-$1.50)—"Magnificent Seven" (UA) (2d wk). Good $10.500. Last week, $14,500.

Squirrel Hill (SW) (834; $1.25)—"Jungle Cat" (BV) (4th wk). Trim $2.500. Ditto last week.

Stanley (SW) (3,700; $1-$1.50)—"Sunrise at Campobello" (WB). Barely okay $10,000. Last week, "Girl of Night" (WB) (2d wk), $8,400.

Warner (SW) (1,513; $1.50-$2.75 — "Ben-Hur" (M-G) (42d wk). Hardy $10,000. Last week, $10,500.

Big 10 Grid Game Boosts Mpls; 'Seven' Socko 13G, 'Space' Fair 5G

Minneapolis, Nov. 8.

While providing competish for the trade, Minnesota-Iowa football game last Saturday, drawing a capacity crowd of 64,000 at $4 per, attracted more visitors to the Twi Cities than any event in weeks. The influx is helping to bolster trade somewhat this session although the mild slump continues.

Top newcomers here this round are "Magnificent Seven," torrid at State, and "Surprise Package," fair at Uptown. "Battle in Outer Space" shapes fairish at the RKO Pan. Fourth chapter "Dark at Top of Stairs" at Lyric looks strong. "Let No Man Write My Epitaph" bows out after two mild weeks at Gopher. "School for Scoundrels" rates boff in first holdover round at Suburban World.

Estimates for This Week

Academy (Mann) (947; $1.75-$2.65) — "Ben-Hur" (M-G) (37th wk). Starting ninth month and still holding well at strong $8,500. Last week, $8,000.

Century (Cinerama, Inc.) (1,150; $1.75-$2.65) — "This Is Cinerama" (Cinerama) (reissue) (11th wk). Healthy $9.500. Last week, $10,500.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; $1-$1.25) —"Let No Man Write My Epitaph" (Col) (2d wk). Sad $3,300. Last week, $3,500. "Midnight Lace" (U) opens tomorrow (Wed.).

Lyric (Par) (1,000; $1-$1.50)—"Top of Stairs" (WB) (4th wk). Finishing at smash $7,000. Last week, $6.500.

RKO Orpheum (RKO) (2,800; $1-$1.25) — "Song Without End" (Col) (2d wk). Flat $6,000. Last week, $7,500.

RKO Pan (RKO) (1,800; 85-$1)—"Battle in Outer Space" (Col) and "12 To Moon" (Col). Fair $5,000. Last week, "All Young Men" (Col) (m.o.) (2d wk), $6,000 at $1-$1.25 admish.

St. Louis Park (Field) (1,000; $1.50-$2) — "Can-Can" (20th) (2d run) (8th wk). Satisfactory $3,000. Last week, $3,500. "Inherit Wind" (UA) opens tomorrow (9).

State (Par) (2,200; $1-$1.25)—"Magnificent Seven" (UA). Torrid $13.000. Last week, "High Time" (20th) (2d wk), $8,500.

Suburban World (Mann) (800; $1.25) — "School for Scoundrels" (Cont) (2d wk). Socko $5,000. Last week, $6,500.

'Spartacus' Wow $18,000 in Philly

Philadelphia, Nov. 8.

Current frame generally is quite strong although some new entries are not doing much. However, "Magnificent Seven" shapes socko at Fox on opener while "Midnight Lace" looms smash in second at the Arcadia. New upped-scale pic, "Spartacus" looks wow at Goldman on initial session. "Breath of Scandal" is rated dull in first Viking round.

"Alamo" is classed as quiet in second Midtown stanza. "Sunrise at Campobello" is rated rich in third at Stanley.

Estimates for This Week

Arcadia (S&S) (536; 99-$1.80)—"Midnight Lace" (U) (2d wk). Smash $13,000. Last week, $16,000.

Boyd (SW) (1,562; $1.40-$2.75)—"Ben-Hur" (M-G) (50th wk). Big $12,000. Last week, $11,500.

Fox (Milgram) (2,200; 99-$1.80) —"Magnificent Seven" (UA). Boff $21,000. Last week, "Top of Stairs" (WB) (4th wk), $10,000.

Goldman (Goldman) (1,200; $2-$2.75)—"Spartacus" (U). Wham $18,000. Last week, "Jungle Cat" (BV) (3d wk), $7,000 in 5 days.

Midtown (Goldman) (1,000; $2-$2.75)—"Alamo" (UA) (2d wk). Quiet $10,000. Last week, $12,000.

Randolph (Goldman) (2,500; 99-$1.80)—"Surprise Package" (Col) (2d wk). Dull $6,000. Last week, $10,500.

Stanley (SW) (2,500; 99-$1.80)—"Sunrise at Campobello" (WB) (3d wk). Rich $10,000. Last week, $12,000.

'Sunrise' Good $15,000, St. L.; 'Package' Slim 16G

St. Louis, Nov. 8.

New product is not proving very strong this stanza although some of holdovers are doing well. "Sunrise at Campobello" is rated only good at the Ambassador while "Surpris Package" looms modest at the huge Fox. "I Aim at Stars," another newie, shapes mild at the St. Louis. "Song Without End" is big in fourth round at Esquire but "Magnificent Seven" is fair in second at State. "Ben-Hur" looks good in 24th round at Loew's Mid-City.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (Arthur) (2,970; 60-90) — "Sunrise at Campobello" (WB). Good $15.000. Last week, "Gigi" (M-G) and "Around World in 80 Days" (UA) (re-runs), $9,000.

Apollo Art (Grace) (700; 90-$1.25)—"Ikiru" (Indie). Slow $1,-500. Last week, "Three-Penny Opera" (Indie), same.

Esquire (Schuchart-Levin) (1,-800; 90-$1.25) — "Song Without End" (Col) (4th wk). Big $9,000. Last week, $10,000.

Fox (Arthur) (5,000; 60-90) — "Surprise Package" (20th) and "Secret of Purple Reef" (20th). Modest $16,000 or close. Last week, "Freckles" (20th) and "Walk Tall" (20th), $12,000.

Loew's Mid-City (Loew) (1,160; $1.50-$2.50) — "Ben-Hur" (M-G) (24th wk). Good $8,200. Last week, $8,000.

State (Loew) (3,600; 60-90) — "Magnificent Seven" (UA) (2d wk). Fair $8,000. Last week, $10,000.

Pageant (Arthur) (1,000; 60-90)— "Sons and Lovers" (20th) (3d wk). Looks $2,100, fair. Last week, $2,-500.

St. Louis (Arthur) (3,800; 60-90) —"I Aim at Stars" (Col) and "Desert Attack" (Col). Mild $9.000. Last week, "College Confidential" (U) and "Blackboard Jungle" (U), $9,000.

'Can-Can' Lusty $9,000 In Mild L'ville; 'Song' Weak 7G, 'Sexy' $5,000

Louisville, Nov. 8.

Pace is slow on main stem this week. "Song Without End" at United Artists, is bringing in some class trade and music lovers, but that's not enough. Hence, only mild session looms.

"Can-Can" in second at the Brown is heading for a big take. "Fast and Sexy" at the Kentucky looms modest. "Let No Man Write My Epitaph" at Mary Anderson is good.

Estimates for This Week

Brown (Fourth Avenue) (1,200; $1.25-$2)—"Can-Can" (20th) (2d wk). Had sellout Saturday (5) night, which is helping to big $9,000, after first week's $10,000.

Kentucky (Switow) (900; 75-$1) —"Fast and Sexy" (Col). Modest $5,000. Last week, "Started In Naples" (Par) (2d wk), $3,000.

Mary Anderson (People's) (900; 75-$1)—"Let No Man Write My Epitaph" (Col). Good $6,000 or near. Last week, "Girl of Night" (WB) (2d wk), $5,500.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (3,000; 60-$1)—"Aim At Stars" (Col). Last week, "Desire in Dust" (20th), $5,000.

United Artists (UA) (3,000; 75-$1)—"Song Without End" (Col). Likely mild $7,000. Last week, "Village of Damned" (M-G) and "Gunmen From Laredo" (Col), sam

Balto Biz Better; 'Lace' Lively 12G, 'Night' 5G, 'Sunrise' Slight $4,500

Baltimore, Nov. 8.

Best news here is "Midnight Lace" which opened big at the Stanton, and looks headed for a long stay. Not so happy is "Sunrise at Campobello," rated weak in opening week at the New. "Let No Man Write My Epitaph" is warm in first at the Little and "Girl of the Night" is barely fair for Century initialer. "Key Witness" is drab in opener at the Hippodrome.

"Song Without End" is holding nicely in second week at Mayfair. "Ben-Hur" is steady in 32nd session at the Town while "Psycho" is pleasing in 16th at the Aurora.

Estimates for This Week

Aurora (Rappaport) (367; 90-$1.50)—"Psycho" (Par) (16th wk). Oke $2,500 after $3,000 for last week.

Century (Fruchtman) (3,200; 50-$1.25)—"Girl of Night" (WB). Fair $5,000. Last week, "Magdalena" (Indie) (2d wk), $3,000.

Charles (Fruchtman) (500; 90-$1.50)—"Under Two Flags" (Par) (3d wk). Sad $1,600 after $2,000 in second frame.

Cinema (Schwaber) (460; 90-$1.50)—"Quiet Flows Don" (UA). Fair $2,000. Last week, "Gold Rush" (UA) (reissue), $2,700.

Five West (Schwaber) (460; 90-$1.50)—"Ostrich Has Two Eggs" (Janus). Oke $3.000. Last week, "Always Price Tag" (Cont) (4th wk), $1,800.

Hippodrome (Rappaport) (2,300; 50-$1.25)—"Key Witness" (M-G). Drab $4.000. Last week, "Dark at Top of Stairs" (WB) (4th wk), $5,000.

Little (Rappaport) (300; 90-$1.50) —"Let No Man Write Epitaph" (Col). Nice $3,500. Last week, "Next to No Time" (SCA), $1,800.

Mayfair (Fruchtman) (750; 90-$1.50)—"Song Without End" (Col) (2d wk). Good $4,500 after $7,000 opener.

New (Fruchtman) (1,600; 90-$1.50) —"Sunrise at Campobello" (WB). Disappointing $4,500 or near. Last week, "Aim at Stars" (Col), $3,000.

Playhouse (Schwaber) (460; 90-$1.50)—"Flute and Arrow" (Janus). Slim $1,900. Last week, "Creek" (Indie) (3d wk), $2,300.

Stanton (Fruchtman) (2,800; 50-$1.50)—"Midnight Lace" (U) Solid $12,000. Last week, "Mountain Road" (Col), $4,500.

Town (Rappaport) (1,125; $149-$2.50)—"Ben-Hur" (M-G) (32d wk). Good $7,300 after $7,500 in 31st week.

Chi Perks; 'Butterfield' Boffo 60G, 'Inherit' Hefty $17,000, 'Lace' Sock 23G, 2d, 'Spartacus' Smash 19G, 4th

Chicago, Nov. 8.

A couple of classy pix are preeming this round, but first-run totals generally again shape sluggish as election campaign finales. Moderate week end weather was reckoned another dullish factor.

Of the newies, "Butterfield 8" is ringing up a giant $60,000 or near in Chicago Theatre bow. "Inherit the Wind" looks to whip up hefty $17,000 in Roosevelt first.

Holdovers are very spotty. "Midnight Lace" is rated smash in United Artists second session, but "Fine Young Cannibals" looks dull in third Woods stanza. Oriental's "Surprise Package" is surprisingly lively third session. Fourth frame of "Let No Man Write My Epitaph" looms fast at the State-Lake.

"Hiroshima Mon Amour" is great in second World round. Second week of Surf's "Battle of Sexes" is rated fine. "Please Turn Over" is turning up an okay tally in fourth Esquire stanza.

On the hardticket, "Alamo" is signaling an oke second session at the Palace; "Spartacus" shapes socko in fourth McVickers round; and "Ben-Hur" still commands sturdy action in 46th at the Todd Theatre.

Estimates for This Week

Carnegie (Telem't) (495; $1.50)—"Expresso Bongo" (Cont) (3d wk). Good $3,200. Last week, $3,600.

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; 90-$1.80)—"Butterfield 8" (M-G). Boffo at $60,000 or near. Last week, "Top of Stairs" (WB) (5th wk), $12,000.

Esquire (H&E Balaban) (1,350; $1.25-$1.80)—"Please Turn Over" (Col) (4th wk). Okay $6,800. Last week, $7,000.

Loop (Telem't) (606; 90-$1.80)—'Come Dance With Me" (Col) (3d wk). Good $7,300. Last week $7,800.

McVickers (JL&S) (1,580; $1.49-$3.50)—"Spartacus" (U) (4th wk). Great $19,000. Last week, $20,000.

Monroe (Jovan) (1,000; 65-90)—"Girl in Lover's Lane" (Indie) and "Wild Ride" (Indie). So-so $4,100. Last week, "Torpedo Zone" (Indie) and "Frog Woman" (Indie), $4,200.

Oriental (Indie) (3,400; 90-$1.80)

Toronto, Nov. 8.

Only important newcomer is 'Butterfield 8," which is sockeroo at Loew's. It has raised prices and five-a-day policy that has turnways. Of the holdovers, "Strangers When We Meet," third stanza, is leading the city, with a wow take. "Midnight Lace" shapes smash in second at the Uptown. "Under 10 Flags" also in second frame is fairly good at Imperial. "Song Without End," in fifth stanza, still is good at Carlton.

Picture biz is good throughout city, with "Ben-Hur," in 47th frame, showing an increase over previous week.

Estimates for This Week

Carlton (Rank) (2,318; $1-$1.50)—"Song Without End" (Col) (5th wk). Good $8,000. Last week, $10,000.

Hollywood (FP) (1,080; $1-$1.25)—"Strangers When We Meet" (Col) (3d wk). Wham $13,000. Last week, $14,000.

Vaude-'Bank' Mild $11,000 in Cincy

Cincinnati, Nov. 8.

Weary of long political battles, Cincy exhibs join general business here in the wish for a promised betterment. Current spotty session has "Day They Robbed Bank of England" not helped much by stageshow "Japanese Spectacular" with mild round at flagship Albee. Bright openers are led by "Let No Man Write My Epitaph" shaping good at Keith's. Twin Drive-In, with "I Aim at Stars" and "Sign of Zorro" looks okay on west screen. "Key Witness" and "Subterraneans" faltered in first half at Palace. "Dark at Top of Stairs" bids as good moveover at the small Grand, which goes hard-ticket on Dec. 22 with "Spartacus."

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; $1.25-$1.25)—"Day They Robbed Bank of England" (M-G) and Jim Hetzer's "Japanese Spectacular." Mild $11,000. Vaude injection is first her more than a year, and not helping much. Last week, "Dark at Top of Stair" (WB), $9,500, better than expected.

B'way Better; 'GI Blues' Loud $31,000, 'Alamo' Boff 32½G, 'Lace' Lush 140G, 'Sun.' Hot 26G, 'Spartacus' Giant 32G

Much colder weather and the end of the Presidential campaign are boosting Broadway film business this session. Dearth of new entrants, however, is a downbeat factor. Many first-runs are being helped in their week's total takes by the Election Day holiday yesterday (Tues.), with upped scaled and added performances.

"GI Blues" is the lone important newcomer. It shapes to get a great $21,000 opening stanza at the Victoria. "The Alamo," on hardticket at the Rivoli, is heading for smash $32,500 in second round. "September Storm" looms light $18,500 in six-day second session at the Paramount, where "North to Alaska" opens tomorrow (Thurs.).

"Midnight Lace" with stageshow looks to reach fancy $140,000 in fourth-final week at the Music Hall. "World of Suzie Wong" with new stageshow moves in tomorrow (Thurs.). "Never On Sunday," playing the arty Plaza, continues to amaze with $26,000 for third week.

"Spartacus" is heading for a smash $32,000 in fifth session at the DeMille, with a boost from extra shows and holiday scale for Election Day. "Inherit the Wind" was okay $17,000 or close in fourth round at the Astor and a fine $7,500 at the Trans-Lux 85th Street, where day-dating.

"Hell to Eternity" was mild $15,500 or near in fourth Capitol week. "Surprise Package" shapes fair $17,500 or thereabouts in fourth-final week at the Criterion, with "Girl of Night" due in Friday (11).

Seattle, Nov. 8.

First-run biz is spotty here this round but there are some strong spots. "Let No Man Write My Epitaph" shapes good at Coliseum but "Magnificent Seven" shapes light at Music Hall in second as does "Song Without End" at Fifth Avenue, also on first holdover stanza. "Psycho" has enough legs to make a good sh wing in 11th Paramount week.

Estimates for This Week

Blue Mouse (Hamrick) (939; $1.50-$3)—"Ben-Hur" (M-G). (40th week). Big $8,500. Last week, $8,000.

Biz Picks Up; 'Lace' New Champ, 'Ben-Hur' 2d, 'Spartacus' 3d, 'Butterfield' 4th

Effect of the post-election pickup is not being fully felt around the country this session although the Election Day Tues. holiday, with upped scales is proving a minor help at the wickets. Colder weather in many key cities covered by VARIETY appeared to be a plus factor.

New champion this stanza is "Midnight Lace" (U), this popular Doris Day starrer pushing ahead of "Ben-Hur" (M-G) even though the latter is on hard-ticket an. upped scale. "Ben-Hur," long on top, is finishing second.

"Spartacus" (U) again is winding up in third place, same as a week ago. "Butterfield 8" (M-G), just out in release, is a strong fourth spot winner, and undoubtedly will be heard from additionally.

"Let No Man Write My Epitaph" (Col) will capture fifth position. "Sunrise at Campobello" (WB) pushing up to sixth place by dint of some additional playdates. "Song Without End" (Col), seventh last round, is in seventh spot again.

"Alamo" (UA) is taking eighth money while "Surprise Package" (Col) will be ninth. "Girl of Night" (WB) is finishing 10th. "Inherit Wind" (UA), just getting into release, will be 11th while "Magnificent Seven," also from United Artists, rounds out the Top 12 list.

"Dark at Top of Stairs" (WB), "Hiroshima Mon Amour" (Zenith) and "Jungle Cat" (BV) are the runner-up films in that sequence.

"GI Blues" (Par) shapes as one of the most promising new trants, being great on opening stanza at N. Y. Victoria. "Fast and Sexy" (Col), also new, is rated modest in Louisville. "Please Turn Over" (Col), another newie, is oke in Chi and hotsy in Boston.

"The Entertainer" (Cont), also comparatively w, shapes bi in N. Y. "Breath of Scandal" (Par) is highly disappointing currently but fair in Boston. Same is true of "Key Witness" (M-G), dull in Balto and thin in Cincy.

"Psycho" (Par), long high on list, is okay in Balto and good in Seattle. "School for Scoundrels" (Cont), good in L. A., looks sock in Minneapolis and sturdy in Washington.

"Carry On Nurse" (Gov), which has been on VARIETY's weekly list for some time, still is stout Denver and L. A., and torrid in Denver and Buffalo. "September Storm" (20th), which did not get far last week, is mild this week N. Y.

"Battle of Sexes" (Cont), shapes fine in Chi. "Can-Can" (20th), which has been high on the list for months and now starting on general release dates, is big in Louisville and L. A. currently.

Says Film Biz Blind to Family Ties Via Groups

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Robert Radnitz, who so far has confined himself in the making of films to "essentially well-made children's stories," "Dog of Flanders" and "Misty of Chincoteague Island," declared here that "Hollywood and the film industry are missing the boat by not using groups such as the Legion of Decency, Parent-Teacher Associations, Federation of Women's Clubs and printed periodicals of large groups in the exploitation and promoting of good family pictures."

Radnitz' point, he exclaimed "is the fact these organizations actively seek and will support, wholeheartedly, material fashion, pictures which provide for their members those values which not even Walt Disney has a monopoly on. For years, every one of his pictures has been hailed as 'the ideal family film' and it has meant big success at the boxoffice."

In commenting on Hollywood studios, Radnitz felt "that immeasurably poor planning on the part of studio execs can effect a film's b.o. gross by as much as one-half its potential. My case in point," he said, "is Dog of Flanders." It was released mid-February and schools were in session, it was cold, with snow or rain, and parents didn't want to let their children go to the movies alone — and they didn't want to take them. Had the film been released during Easter vacation or, possibly, held until summer vacation, it probably would have doubled its gross." Radnitz firmly believes that Disney policy of releasing its family pix during the summer—as with "Pollyanna"—is a result of careful and thoughtful planning.

"Studios seem to me to be run by men with little imagination in the field of satisfying a demand by a great market—the kids," he stated. "The market is there and it's growing, and there are many properties which can be mighty boxoffice smashes. It's my opinion the dollar sign still runs Hollywood. Yet only Walt Disney seems to have the formula to make it successful. I know I could make successful pictures but many studios just smile at you and say, 'we've got a great here, one with a little sex and big moral.' My stories are simple and they have truth in them."

Radnitz' plans call for seven properties in the next year, including five originals. His biggest desire, however, concerns the making of a film on the life of Charles Darwin, which, he states, will be "one of the war test human interest stories ever brought to the screen about one of the world's most controversial figures."

Boston's Norm Prescott Puts Cartoon in Works At Copenhagen, Zurich

Boston, Nov. 8.

Norm Prescott, former disk jock turned film producer, has set up Lincoln Productions Inc. for international film distribution and production in Boston, plus office in New York. Back from four weeks in Europe, Prescott said he has a coproduction deal for the filming of a full length animated motion picture in color and CinemaScope, based on science fiction subject that will be completed six months.

For the past year, he said, he has been working on the development of the character designs, has completed the finished script, storyboard and mixed tracks, all of which were done in the U. S. While in Europe he set a deal to record the entire 50 minute score of the picture with the Belgian Symphony Orch.

In London, Prescott says, he made deal with Nat Miller of Orb Films for distribution of the picture in the United Kingdom. The film will run two hours.

Film's main title designs are being completed in Copenhagen and feature production will be done in Zurich.

Those Bendable Hard Tickets

Film Trade Sales Savants Closely Studying Implications Of Nervous Spectacles

By HY HOLLINGER

The qualified acceptance of three of the most recent hardticket entries—"Sunrise at Campobello," "Spartacus," and "The Alamo"—may well result in a hard reappraisal of this method of releasing pictures. To be sure, the full score hasn't been tallied up yet. "Campobello," already out in general release in other parts of the country, will terminate its reserved-seat run at the Palace, N. Y. next week and will shift over to the arty Murray Hill on a grind policy.

"Spartacus" seems to have a good chance to chalk up a long run via the special engagements, but whether it will be able to sustain the hoped-for runs of two years remains unanswered at the moment. Presently, "Spartacus" is running at about 75% capacity at the DeMille, N. Y., selling out on weekends. In the case of "The Alamo," which opened Wednesday (26) at the Rivoli, N. Y., it is too early to make any predictions. United Artists, which is releasing the John Wayne production, is "less than delighted" with the mixed reviews. But as with Universal, which was considerably upset by N. Y. Times critic Bosely Crowther's pan of "Spartacus," UA is adopting a wait-and-see attitude.

Await Holidays

It'll be at least six to eight weeks before UA reaches a decision whether to continue the reserved-seat policy or to shift to regular release. N. Y. advance of "The Alamo," is claimed to be $75,000, said to be good for a picture of its type, but peanuts when compared with the over $500,000 for Otto Preminger's "Exodus," which UA is also releasing. "The Alamo" so far has opened in about eight situations, with good biz reported in Texas outlets. Four more openings will take place shortly. The track record of the 12 dates will enable UA to reach a conclusion on how to handle the picture from there on.

'Can-Can' Cheered

"Can-Can," the 20th-Fox entry which opened to less than enthusiastic reviews, managed to overcome the critics' opinions and chalked up respectable runs on a hardticket basis. It's conceiveable that "The Alamo," which received excellent ratings in two of th New York newspapers—The News and the Journal-American—may be able to weather the reports in the Times and the Post. In the Times, Crowther said that the picture "for all its bigness—and big and long it certainly is!—is but another beleaguered blockhouse Western." Archer Winston in the Post termed it "trashy, but big colorful and grossly lively." The opinions of the critics in the Mirror, Wolrd-Telegram & Sun, and Herald Tribune were in the fair to good category.

The fact that a number of hardticket entries are facing some difficulties has been welcome news to smalltown and neighborhood exhibitors who have been campaigning against the spread of this policy. They contend that their theatres are being placed in a second class status because of their inability to obtain the important pictures when they are fresh and new. Other industry sources, however, believe that the hardticket policy is sound provided the right picture is available. No one can judge in advance, it's stressed, whether or not a picture will have staying power as a reserved seat entry. They point out that it's worth the gamble and if it works, the results far exceed what can be obtained in general release. They cite, for example, the results of "Ben-Hur," "Ten Commandments," and "Around the World in 80 Days." Of course, there have been failures, too—"The Diary of Anne Frank" and "Porgy and Bess," for example.

A Gamble

The big beef currently, particularly among exhibitors, is that there is a tendency to label a picture as a hardticket offering although it hasn't the stamina to sustain the long, reserved-seat runs. From the point of the view of the distributors, however, the gamble is worth taking, although a picture stands to lose some prestige if it is dropped from the exalted category.

A policy being followed by some companies—Metro, for instance in the case of "Cimarron"—is to test a picture on hardticket in about a half dozen dates and to determine the eventual release pattern on the basis of this experience. In this manner—without a big buildup of a hardticket only policy—it's believed that a picture can find its own level without running the risk of losing face when it is lowered a notch to general release.

Many industryites feel that the current "me too" bandwagon of hardtickets has perhaps been overdone, but when the film companies observe what one picture can to for a distributor—"Ben-Hur" for Metro, "Ten Commandments" for Paramount, and "80 Days" for the late Mike Todd and UA—it's seen as only natural for others to take similar chances.

The final grosses racked up by "Campobello," "Can-Can," "Spartacus" and "The Alamo" will provide food for thought, but on the other side of the spectrum is "Ben-Hur" for the hardticket advocates to shoot at.

There Is a Butterfield 8

Chicago, Nov. 8.

Metro, using the message-on-the-phone gimmick in promoting its "Butterfield 8" here, has some of the natives thinking pic is a local yarn. That's because Chi actually has a Butterfield 8 exchange—and one of its numbers is being used for Elizabeth Taylor's tape-recorded pitch.

Actually the John O'Hara script applies to New York's Butterfield 8.

FILLING THE VACUUM OF RESEARCH COUNCIL

Theatre Equipment and Supply Manufacturers Assn. plans to launch a technical research program "to fill the vacuum caused by the dissolution of the Motion Picture Research Council."

TESMA's idea is to maintain close liaison with exhibitors, manufacturers, producers' engineering staffs, laboratories "and others interested in establishing and maintaining a good screen image and good sound in theatres." TESMA's aim, according to prexy Larry Larry Davee, is to solve everyday technical problems connected directly with the operation of motion picture theatres.

Shoppers' House Opens

Sarasota, Fla., Nov. 8.

General Drive-In Corp., which has embarked on a program of building hardtop theatres in shopping centers, has opened its second theatre at the Bay Shore Gardens Shopping Center here. The new 1,200-seat house in part of 10-theatre multi-million dollar expansion program of the company.

Already operating successfully, according to Philip Smith, president of General Drive-In, is the new theatre at Pompan Beach, Fla. Currently under construction are additional theatres at Bel-Air Plaza, Daytona Beach, and Menlo Park Shopping Center, Menlo Park, N.J. Both are scheduled for completion during the late fall and winter. Negotiations are now under way for sites for the remaining six theatres in the program.

Fast Time Issue Menaces Colorado

Denver, Nov. 8.

Daylight Saving Time will be the subject of one of the constitutional amendments on the Colorado ballot today (Tues.).

For more than a decade the subject has been batted around by the bi-annual legislature and always soundly beaten, by the overbalance of farming and ranching community representation against big city and suburbia clamor, as the state still has only this one city of over 100,000 population.

With the question being put on the ballot at the general election, Colorado and Denver theatre management has a tougher situation to face than in previous years, with metropolitan Denver voters numbering about half of the rest of the state put together.

'Cinderfeller' Lewis' Ballyhoolics Spurt

Chicago, Nov. 8.

Jerry Lewis, exponent of the frantic sell, has something like a now-you-see-him-now - you - don't itinerary mapped for his visit here later this month to world preem his latest Paramount picture, "Cinderfeller."

Comic is due in early Saturday, the 19th. Same afternoon he helps cut the ribbon opening McCormick Place, Chi's new lakefront exposition centre; and that evening he stars at the Sun-Times Harvest Moon Festival in the Stadium.

Next day he jets out to New York to ping his pic on the Ed Sullivan teleshow, with possibility he'll stay over to tape a Garry Moore show segment Monday. Tuesday night he's back to attend the "Cinderfeller" preem at the W or benefit of his pet charity, ular Dystrophy Assns. of Am a, and afterward presides at a black tie ball for the MD group.

He'll make the press-radio-tv rounds Wednesday, leaving tow that afternoon for the Coast in time to spend Thanksgiving with his family.

Early Churchill

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Paramount will produce the early Sir Winston Churchill biogs, and has assigned Hugh French to handle production chores. Biopic will be based on tw works, "My Early Life" (published in U.S. under title, "A Roving Commission") and "The World Crisis."

Pic will be lensed in color in England and other countries where Churchill spent his early years, up to his marriage in 1908.

LADIES SUPPORT LADY CENSOR IN ATLANTA

Atlanta, Nov. 8.

Another voice has been raised in opposition to elimination of motion picture censorship on the Atlanta scene. This time it's the Business and Professional Women's Club of Atlanta which wants the office of Mrs. Christine Smith Gilliam, city censor, and wife of an alderman, to retain its present status quo.

In a resolution club asked Mayor William B. Hartsfield and aldermen "to oppose any efforts to eliminate such protection and to allow the censorship of this phase of theatrical entertainment to remain in Atlanta as it now is established." Club said it "deplored" court action to abolish the censorship.

National Unloads Three

Kansas City, Nov. 8.

National Theatres midwest division has recently turned loose three theatres in Missouri. Auditorium Theatre, Marshall, Mo., went to Leo Hayob, local exhib who has long operated the Mary Lue Theatre there.

The Fox Theatre, Sedalia, Mo., a 900-seater, recently was sold to Commonwealth circuit, which thereby takes control of the tow Few weeks ago circuit also disposed of the Broadway Theatre at Cape Girardeau, in the St. Louis district.

Tad Devine, Andy's son, spotted by John Ford for role in his "Two Rode Together."

For Local 'Art,' Walk Taste-Line, Per Ed Schuman

Operation of an art theatre circuit in the middle west and the south has its peculiar problems. Edward Schuman, who runs such an enterprise said on a visit to New York this week that he's forced in the middle between art for art's sake and the "economic pressures."

"The World of Apu" might be great in New York, he said, but would likely faulter in his outlet in Memphis. At the same time, he cannot deal with a strictly sexy import, because this would detract from the prestige reputation he's trying to build for his theatres.

His problem, he states, is to come upon the type of picture that combines both art and commerce. His particularly significant point is that art alone is not enough; it must have the commerce.

Schuman tells the story of how he opened an art theatre and was approached by the familiar little-old-lady type. She said she blessed the day that "a rich man had come to provide her town with art" and who was not worried about the economics.

Nothing could have been farther from the truth, said Schuman. Art must have the money to survive, he said in effect.

Harold Goldman Among Clean-Sweep Advocates; Pics Lag by Generation

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Lagging 25 years behind the times, the motion picture industry is doomed unless an immediate revitalization takes place in production, distribution and exhibition, according to Harold Goldman, who last month joined Famous Artists in an executive capacity after six years as exec veepee of National Telefilm Associates.

All three areas of the industry, said Goldman, are in the old era of the picture business when every theatre played split weeks and needed 200 films a year. With today's competition from television matched only by outdated methods, the motion picture industry is facing a dangerous and potentially fatal existence, exec declared.

Goldman offered a three-phase program in the hope of "opening someone's eyes," explaining his interest in the motion picture business comes from long experience and from a father who became an exhibitor nearly 50 years ago and during his lifetime owned some 300 theatres.

Goldman's program initially concerns exhibition, with exec declaring 40% to 50% of the theatres in the United States "will never make it" and should be eliminated. "The others," he continued "should be refurbished to such an extent that they are places where people will want to come. A plush, exciting environment." Good seating, projection and air conditioning are among the keys to the refurbishment urged by Goldman. "And unless a theatre has these prerequisites, a distributor should refuse to supply it product."

On production, Goldman declared Hollywood effort should be concentrated on important product, eliminating second-featur films ("which no one wants to see anyway"). Said Goldman: "Instead of making 40 or 50 pictures a year, a studio should make 12, and all combined thinking should be aimed toward quality."

Goldman explained that drive-ins currently spell the difference between life and death for the film industry and that with fewer pix and fewer theatres, every house—hardtop and drive-in—could become a first-run theatre playing on an extended run basis.

On distribution, Goldman had this to say: "All major companies should get together and use the same exchanges, reducing operational costs and cutting out needless duplication. At NTA we learned that distribution could be accomplished from one center. Certainly, every studio doesn't need 25 or 30."

West German 'Ceiling Salary' Pact Saves Producers $25,000 Per Film

Frankfurt, Nov. 1.

The controversial "ceiling salary" agreement which was levied by joint agreement of the Assn. of German Film Producers and the Assn. of German Film Distributors is paying off, so far as film-makers are concerned. The scale, under which all German actors and actresses are put into certain established pay categories with a top salary of about $25,000 for a starring role in a picture, is saving the film industry about $25,000 on an average per picture in direct production costs, according to reports here.

The salary scaling, which went into effect about six months ago, met with tremendous criticism from the German actors, who threatened strikes and retaliations, but the German Producers Assn. now feels that the salary-levelling has been most effective. Also that it will work as a step to keep down production costs at a time when the film business must take every action possible to survive.

The number of German films being produced has declined with the German Producers Assn. reporting 104 German pix for the 1960-61 season, a drop from 114 of the previous year. The income from the German pix has dropped about 10.9% to around $38,475,000. So the saving in stars' salaries is a vital feature.

Producers Outline Points

This association also enumerated several other points regarding its dwindling income. The number of tickets sold in 1959 dropped 12.1% in West Germany as against 1958. Television, which is financed by the government and is free of the entertainment tax, provides unfair competition. Group cited that the West German film industry does not receive government subsidies, as pix do in many other lands. Also that entertainment taxes are higher in Germany than in Great Britain and the U. S. Another point is that production costs for making films have increased with higher rent for stages and for technicians.

Quality of the German films has improved, the producers association pointed out, noting that the West German Film Classification Board gave eight German films the "outstanding" classification for 1956-57 while the number increased to nine for the 1957-58 calendar, 19 for the 1958-59 bookings and 11 for the 1959-60 season. This classification entitles the pix to certain tax reliefs.

Producers Ask Higher Admish

The producers' group also came out strongly in favor of a new theme, raising ticket prices in West Germany. Studies show the public is willing to pay a considerably higher price for outstanding films and that the price of a ticket is generally not consideration as to whether an indivdual decides to go to the cinema or not.

Problems of producing German documentary pictures were also discussed by the producer group, noting that while a documentary classified as "outstanding" may save about $2,500 to $3,000 in license fees and one classified as "especially outstanding" may save $6,000 to $7,000, there is still difficulty in making these pix pay off because they generally are not exported to other lands for added income.

Major demand from the group was some sort of government protection against television inroads, possibly by liberalizing the tough entertainment tax levied at the boxoffice.

Abandon Plan to Film 'Horsemen' in Europe

London, Nov. 8.

Plans to film "Four Horsemen Of The Apocalypse" in Europe have been abandoned because of continued bad weather. The original plan was to shoot exteriors in Paris and complete interiors at the Metro British Elstree Studios. Now, the entire production is to be transferred to Culver City starting Dec. 1.

In 21 working days it was only possible to film for six days in Paris and there can be no guarantee that the situation will improve. The switch definitely hurts the Metro Studios as space for a three-month sked has been allotted the opus.

Baalbec 'Too French'?

Beirut, Nov. 1.

Lebanon, the largely Christian part of the former Syria, has had an annual arts festival for several years now in the fabulous ruins of Baalbec. It gets small notice in the western or cultural press because of the remoteness. Another reason may well be that it is too overwhelmingly "French" in artistic derivation.

This "Francophile" quality was evident again this season, as always since 1956. True there has been, in the course of the festivals a bit of Old Vic, a touch of British Ballet and a sample of N. Y. Philharmonic. Otherwise all proceeds from Paris. This discourages travel to Baalbec, where sand and wind are not entirely ideal for those whose taste artistically is not exclusively French.

Aussie Exhibs Annoyed By Failure of Public To Attend Sun. Cinema

Hobart, Nov. 1.

Showmen here are dismayed at the sudden biz fadeaway of Sabbath cinema pix after a promising debut. Exhibitors just can't fathom the public's cold shoulder, and will end the Sunday play if biz slump swingaway continues in Tasmania, a state in Australia.

Projectionists and front-of-house staff are the only ones benefitting from the Sunday showings via a triple-rate pay scale for working on the seventh day of the week. Exhibs aver they'll forget about operating on Sunday if biz does not quickly improve.

Sydney exhibitors have been pressing politicians for many months to okay Sabbath openings without result. Major opposition has come from the theatrical union, which covers projectionists and ushers.

The flop of the Hobart Sabbath biz is now responsible for a cooling off of pressure by exhibs for Sunday showings.

28 Nations Entered In Mex Shorts Fest

Mexico City, Nov. 1.

Some 28 nations are participating in the First International Short Subjects Film Festival, inaugurated in Ciudad Universitaria's Humanities Auditorium, Oct. 22. Most European nations are represented in the event, including Russia, Poland and Czechoslovakia. On this side of the Atlantic the U.S. and Canada have entries. There has been weak Latin American representation, with only Venezuela, Cuba and Brazil sending in material.

Fest was organized under the auspices of the audio visual department of the National University of Mexico, with collaboration of the Bureau of Cultural Relations.

Arg. Producers Pleased Over Clicks of Native Pix; Stall Yank Films

Buenos Aires, Nov. 1.

Local producers crowing over the continued success of several native pix productions, especially Daniel Tinayre's "La Patota" (The Gang), distributed by Argentina Sono Film, which ran nine weeks in first-run at the Monumental. It has now been running continuously in moveover, suburban and nabes for three months.

"Un Guapo del 900" (Angel) is also doing fine in suburban situations after holding three weeks at the first-run Gran Rex, and breaking Provincial city records. "Sabado a la Noche Cine" (Movies on Saturday Night) (AAA) also did well on first-run at the Ambassador, Libertador and four nabe and a suburban house.

Although the improved values of the more recent native product are no doubt partly responsible for these good records, lack of a Screen Institute Board to approve release of foreign product also has contributed. "Les Amants" (Difa) is now released at the Opera, Premier, Grand Splendid and three nabe situations, the courts having declared that the picture is not obscene.

"Can-Can" (20th) is in fifth week at the Gran Florida. The British "Carry On Doctor" and "Upstairs and Downstairs" (Rank) also have proved unexpectedly strong at the wickets.

Inside Stuff—International

"Greyish" was the word with which the critics defined th 1960 Edinburgh Festival, in spite of many sold-out performances. To give it a new shot in the arm, in 1961, Lord Harewood, first cousin to Queen Elizabeth and a well known music-lover as well as expert married to an Austrian-born commoner, daughter of the Viennese musicologist, Erwin Stein) will take over the artistic directorship. In former days Edinburgh seemed about to eclipse the famous Salzburg Festival. But dour Scots' early closing hours, boring Sundays and a climate even worse than the one in Salzburg, somehow defeated the hope. This season's first appearance of a new prodigy, German conductor Sawallisch, was a disappointment ("no orchestra can play better than the man who conducts it" said an influential critic) and Bellini's "I Puritani" was greeted with more incomprehension than conviction—except for the Australian soprano Joan Sutherland, as Elvira. She will make her debut this season at La Scala as well as at Met in New York. The Julliard Quartett was perhaps Edinburgh's most successful chamber-music event and the most original concert.

Of U. S. violin virtuoso Yehudi Menuhin (who plays himself in CCC's currently made "Sabine and Her 100 Men") it is said that he accepted this German screen offer only as a personal favor to director William Thiele. Producer Artur Brauner calls himself very lucky that he got him, not only because of Menuhin's tight commitments but also the virtuoso's reluctance to appear in a conventional feature. A serious artist must be very careful of what he does. Menuhin, incidentally, has many German friends and admirers. They haven't forgotten that he was one if not the first U. S. artist of Jewish faith who shook hands with the Germans after 1945. Immediately after the war's end it was Menuhin who started sending CARE parcels to the members of the Berlin Philharmonic orch and gave his voice for the late Furtwangler's rehabilitation.

Charlton Heston, currently in Spain starring in Samuel Bronston's "El Cid," has received the first pressings of his new Vanguard album, "Charlton Heston Reads from the Life and Passions of Jesus Christ." LP will be released on wax and tape this month. He recorded the two-disk album in Vanguard's studios in New York last summer, with his entire dramatic narration drawn from the four Gospels of the New Testament. Backed solely by the Robert De Cormier choral rendering of spirituals, Heston's second venture in the recording field is keyed to Christmas marketing. His earlier version of Old Testament selections was a best-seller during the 1957 season.

Milan's "Piccolo Teatro" this year will not do any touring at all and has declined the offers from Israel and Japan. It will spend its 14th year of existence at home and divide the season between Milan and Rome. It opened Nov. 8 with an Italian novelty "The Egotist" by Carlo Bertolazzi. Set is a world premiere of Bertold Brecht's "The Good Soldier Schweik." Thereafter with a dramatization of Cesare Pavese's novel "The Story of Pablo," Piccolo will transfer to Rome for six weeks. Still later in Milan it will produce in collaboration with the chorus of the church of St. Ambrogio, in the church, a mystery play of the 13th century "Eat You People of this Bread . . . "

Urges Australian Ballet Subsidy

Peggy Van Praagh in Curtain Speech Heard by Fed Treasurer—Ignores U.S. Companies Sans Aid

By RAYMOND STANLEY

Melbourne, Nov. 1.

There has been general praise here for the Borovansky Ballet season under artistic direction of Peggy Van Praagh—who used to assist Dame Ninette de Valois at London's Covent Garden. At Her Majesty's here company danced "Coppelia" and "Les Rendezvous."

Such a glittering production as this three-act version of "Coppelia" has never been seen here before. Sets and costumes have been specially designed by Aussie Kenneth Rowell (again of Covent Garden) who has used vivid red, yellow and orange colours to great effect. Second Act dollmaker's workshop is particularly outstanding.

Acclaim went to prima ballerina Kathleen Gorham's Swanilda, principal male dancer Robert Pomie's Franz and Algeranoff's Dr. Coppelius and also Marilyn Jones and Garth Welch in Frederick Ashton's "Les Rendezvous." However, most opinion agrees it is Peggy Van Praagh's guiding hand that has achieved such a high standard.

On opening night she made certain speech, points of which she elaborated upon in radio and tv "Meet the Press" interview following night. She appealed for Government subsidy, saying Borovansky was only major ballet company in world not nationally subsidised. (Never heard of New York City Ballet?—Ed.

Special reason for need of subsidy in Australia are the very long distances, high travel expenses, and steep orchestral costs.

For Australia to retain Borovansky as permanent national company would require annual subsidy of 50 000 Australian pounds. Miss Van Praagh was firm in view that name "Borovansky" would have to be dropped and "Australia" substituted—a sore point with many admirers of late Edouard Borovansky.

Such company could visit South-East Asia at first, and later Europe and such events as Edinburgh Fest.

When Miss Van Praagh made curtain appeal, saying J. C. Williamson Theatres Ltd. could no longer shoulder burden of cost, seated in circle front row was Federal Treasurer who later said he would be hearing from J. C. Williamson "some facts and views relating to the ballet organization.

"The have already said Australi is the one country in world in which ballet has operated without subsidy and have indicated that it can't continue to do so indefinitely unless it has some support," said the Federal Treas. "The Commonwealth already gives some kind of support to the Elizabethan Theatre Trust, but I would need to learn the facts of the story, and then have them considered by the appropriate Department."

(In addition to the N.Y. City Center, which is firstclass by any standard, there are other ballets which enjoy no government subsidy, though nearly always they depend upon private donations, as per Marquis de Cuevas, Rockefeller in-law, or Lucia Chase, of Taft family . . . At least, one purely commercial ballet company, Sergei Denham's Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo regularly tours American cities, although the forepart of the present season's bookings was cancelled in a dispute with the American Guild of Musical Artists, which has ballet jurisdiction in U.S. —Ed.).

SAN SEBASTIAN'S OWN

Local Lawyer-Impresario Replaces Antonio Zulueta

San Sebastian, Nov. 8.

A San Sebastian theatreowner, Francisco Ferrer, was named new director of the San Sebastian International Film Festival last week to replace Antonio Zulueta, ousted by pressure from the festival executive committee.

Ferrer is a young Basque lawyer and owner of the Teatro Victoria Eugenia, an antiquated showcase where festival films are screened.

The new director has a solid local reputation as an impresario who programs legit, ballet and concerts at various intervals, to alternate with his major activity as a film exhibitor, but is a film industry unknown for the rest of Spain.

Designation of Ferrer put an end to speculation that the festival was to be directed by a triumvirate, and laid to rest reports that Zulueta would be recalled.

Pix Production Shapes Strong in Israel But Govt. Assistance Lags

Tel Aviv, Nov. 1.

Israeli film producers are still worried because of the lack of cooperation they enjoy in their own country. They claim that the authorities, who were so cooperative in the case of the "Exodus" filming in Israel, show no understanding for the specific problems of the local film industry.

Right now, an Orb Films production by Baruch Dienar, "They Were Ten," just completed, is withheld from the screens by the producers because the state and the cities did not agree to waive entertai taxes for the showings of this historically local picture. The only municipality ready to permit the screening taxless is the city of Eilat. Dienar has stated that unless a decision his fav is reached soon, Eilat will be the only town in Israel to see his picture. Newsmen will be flown to Eilat for the preem.

The German-Israeli coproduction "Blazing Sands" (R. Nussbaum is producer) was withheld for many months until the permit for public showing was given by the authorities on moral reasons. The picture, now showing to capacity houses in Tel Aviv for several weeks, tells the story of a treasure-hunt in the fabulous Red-Rock-city in a neighboring land and depicts adventurous young Israelis breaking the law by crossing the frontier. Official circles and critics argue that even now the film should be withdrawn as it shows the Israeli youth in a distorted light.

Various new film projects are now ripening in Israel. The long-cherished plan of a film city ("Barnea") near Ascalon and the Gaza strip is being revived and negotiations are held in the U.S. for possible investment in the scheme. In Tel Aviv's Garden City, neighbor of Ramat Gan, a large plot for a new film city has been allotted by the municipality to Arthur Brauner, a major West-German producer (C.C.C.) who has his family in Israel. He plans coproductions by a new Israeli company with various Western European production centers.

Meanwhile, great strides are made by Israeli producers of documentaries, with Geva Films and Herzliah Studios leaders in this field and reaping prizes in international festivals. The Hebrew University in Jerusalem has just completed a 20-minute documentary, "Campus at Work," with a score by Israel's prize-winning young composer Noam Sheriff.

Titina de Filippo, sister of Italy's actor-author-director Edoardo—has made her debut as an author on her own in presenting "Veering the Ship" ("On Bring Around the Boat"—it's a marine expression). It introduced a new stage director, Giandomenico Giagni—up to now known only through radio plays.

Yank Pix Hits in Morocco

Paris, Nov. 1.

Reports from Morocco are that 1,061 Yank pix were shown since 1959 which grossed $2,226,000 while 492 French films got $1,700,000.

U. S. pix drew 6,750,000 patrons while the French films did 949,000. Biggest take was racked up by "The Vikings" (UA), which grossed $42,000.

PRUDES IN MILAN, CRIES ROME

Mex Film Industry Ready to Launch Assault on U.S. Market Via Dubbing

Mexico City, Nov. 1.

The Mexican motion picture industry is poised for a major assault on the American market, via dubbing of selected national films.

Ever since the phenomenal success (in terms of ordinary Mexican boxoffice take) of "Adam and Eve," initial effort in dubbing, Mexican producers have been eyeing the dollar market. This despite litigation over division of exhibition receipts for the ice breaker picture.

Now, Salvador Amelio, head of the Cimex official distributorship, back from a profitable New York trip, has announced that the Mexican version of "Tom Thumb" or "Pulgarcito" will be available in an English version for the American market. Further, he said that a $40,000 advance will be paid by an undisclosed major American distributor.

Amelio also said same distributor is interested in world exploitati rights for "Macario," which will also be dubbed in English. Both films have already grossed over $160,000 each within Mexico, recouping production costs, so world distribution will be gravy.

There are reservati ., however, in assignment of rights to Mexican ictures. In case of "Macario," for instance, the Arthur Rank Organization already has rights for distribution England. Peliculas Mexicanas also holds the Latin American and Spanish markets.

However, Amelio said that in future deals this pattern may not be followed, with exception of holding on to Latin American release rights. English dubbed Mexican pictures will be offered for worldwide distribution.

Unconfirmed report has it that the Artington-Bueno partnership is involved in the "Macario" deal, but confirmation could not be obtained since top executives have left New York and South America to ready picture plans.

With Mexico now keenly interested in American dollars (plus British and other English speaking area profits), Mexican films slated for early dubbing include "Diana the Huntress," "Unbridled Desire," "The Si ile of the Virgin," and others.

Paris Theatre Owners, Legit Prods. Eye Plan For Co-Op Enterprise

Paris, Nov. 1.

A group of young theatre owners and independent legit stagers and producers, while still maintaining their own individual properties and work, re discussing setting up a cooperative enterprise to be called Le Nouveau Cartel.

Though indie, this group would collectively find plays, invest in each other' productions when necessary, with plays going to the one who suggested it. They also would set up special subscription rates to their shows as well as backing up touring engagements of their entries around France.

Idea is to try and build up new udiences and share the risk while still retaining their own individualty and initiative.

Behind this project respectively, who have recently signed with the Theatre Vieux Colombier; are Sacha Pitoeff, now at the Theatre Mathurins; Antoine Bourseillier, who has taken over the Studio Des Champs-Elysees to produce and mount shows, and Georges Herbert and Pierre Franck, who have bought the Theatre De L'Oeuvre. They are now discussing this type of cooperati

'Milli iress' Record

London, Nov. 1.

With a first week's take of $23,670, 20th-Fox has notched a new house record for the Carlton with its British production of "The Millionairess," starring Sophia Loren and Peter Sel!

The gross is around $5,000 better than that recorded for "Anastasia" and "Sons and Lovers."

Cochrane Remembered

Tokyo, Nov. 1.

Japan Motion Picture Producers Assn. (Eiren) will honor the late Tom D. Cochrane, garded as the father of American film trade in Japan, in recognition of his services rendered for the promotion of U.S.-Japan friendship.

The posthumous citation will be conveyed to Cochrane's family members at a ceremony on Nov. 10. Cochrane founded the Harima-Universal Co. with Katsutaro Harima in 1916 and was the first importer of U.S. films to Japan.

More Yank Film Prod. Sought By Mex Studios

Mexico City, Nov. 1.

The biggest guessing contest in Mexico today is centered on the extent of Hollywood production activity here in the months and years ahead. Opinions differ widely, from those who foresee a decline, others who feel the pace will not exceed that of the past, and a third optimistic group envisaging widespread expansion, especially in fields of Mexican-American coproduction deals. Offcial stand, as expressed by Alfonso Ahumada, assistant production chief at the Churubusco Studios, federally owned, is that the State will not put any impediments in the way of Hollywood or other foreign production activity in Mexico.

Ahumada's official statement refuted recent reports that Mexico would shut its doors to foreign producers and not offer any facilities. Ahumada denied the government would put a crimp in activity that brings in a heavy influx of dollars. He also said that it was false that Hollywood producers were shunning Mexico because of alleged abuses by film personnel seeking heavy overtime scales.

Robert J. Corkery, veepee of the MPEA, stated that Hollywood will continue making pictures in Mexico. There's the natural scenery, almost constant sunshine for locations, excellent technical and mechanical facilities and full cooperation from unions and the government. MPEA will work to build up the actual number of films produced in Mexico by Hollywood units, Corkery said.

Felipe Palomino, on the other hand, ex-union leader, outspokenly said that (1) he did not believe American films would salvage Mexico's ailing industry nor boost employment materially; and (2) that production would not exceed the five or so annually. He also said Hollywood is "disgusted" with the Mexican industry because a minority of greedy workers have abused them in the question of exhorbitant salaries and overtime demands, as was most recently experienced by the "Hot Eye of Heaven" company.

There are other reasons for the slump in American activity, Palomino said, not the least of which is the alleged pro-Castro feeling in certain Mexican quarters. Then, in the immediate future, there are the U.S. elections, and the adjustments by the incoming regime.

DELAY SHINTOHO TAKEOVER

Tokyo, Nov. 1.

Negotiations for the Toei Motion Picture Co. to absorb the troubled Shintoho Motion Picture Co. hav been temporarily stalled because of Shintoho's heavy debts and labor problems.

But toppers of both companies expect agreement soon on the amalgamation deal which would reduce Japan's six majors to five.

STUDIOS DREAD 'LOCAL' CENSORS

By ROBERT F. HAWKINS

Rome, Nov. 8.

Probably the biggest censorship battle in Italian film industry history is currently underway here. A one-hour protest strike of the entire local film setup is the first positive act in the fight which finds all branches of the Italo industry for once united in a common cause.

Strike was voted after an emergency all-industry meeting held this week at Rome's Corso Theatre to discuss the censoring by Milan authorities of two recent Italian releases, Titanus' "Rocco and His Brothers" and Del Duca's "The Adventure" after they had been passed by the official government censor. It was felt that only a vigorous protest campaign could hope to prevent the danger of stifling censorship crippling the Italian picture industry at a moment in which, by general consent it is making its strongest bid ever for world markets.

Same meeting voted that the current and antiquated (1923) censor law be updated as soon as possible, and that the authority of the central office be reaffirmed to prevent local authorities, as in the recent cases, from enforcing their will as "super-censors." Only dissident note came from the exhib sector, which couched its approval of the protest in a statement which spoke of the need of protecting "the family nucleus" against the subject matter of "certain" pix.

Fracas, a daily headline maker, started when first "Rocco" and then "Adventure" were seized by court order in Milan on charges of "pornography" and violation of a 1923 Italian police edict which allows seizure of pix even after their government censorship okay. After a violent protest producers of both features accepted cuts, and they were once more released in Milan, while continuing in other centers, as was.

Sideline hassle meanwhile developed in case of "Rocco," which suffered the most damage in that in addition to cuts, certain scenes were "blacked out" to make them nearly undistinguishable. Director Luchino Visconti first sued producer Lombardo for allowing cuts to be made. Suit was later dropped, and Visconti instead sued the Milan court for "excessive zeal," in its decision first time Italo judiciary has been thus questioned. ("Rocco" caused the biggest row in Venice Festival history when it failed to win the first prize, which many thought it deserved. Lombardo refused to accept the second prize.)

Several puzzling factors are involved. Why and how is a feature which has passed all official censorship controls stopped by a local organization operating under powers in a vintage fascist-times law? This is the factor which most concerns industry toppers here. They bear precedent of further trouble elsewhere (Italy has close to 200 legislative offices empowered with film seizure rights if they choose to invoke the clause). The general industry push is therefore for reconfirmation of supreme power of a single censor body, as the lesser of two evils.

Another puzzler is: why Milan? The northern "capital" has always been considered (or considered itself) the center of Italian culture, savoir-faire, as well as business. The change has been recent, dating from a violent initial reaction to Federico Fellini's "La Dolce Vita" (one spectator at the premiere even spat on Fellini)—yet "Vita" is a pic about Rome and its life, not Milan. Now come these two cases.

The official who ordered the seizure (after a complaint) has been at his post only a short time. He's quoted as saying that he is "watching" several other pictures, among them "Red Lips," "Sweet Deceptions," and "A Bout de Souffle," all but the last Italo-made.

Reasons for the sudden censorship threat are attributed to various causes, though only a few suggest that Italo pix have admittedly been more "liberal" in depicting violence and sex in recent months ("La Dolce Vita" gets the most blame for stirring up the hassle and focusing attention to the problem (yet "Vita" passed unscathed and is racking up alltime records). Pre-election political reasons are also credited, as are otherwise unspecified "direct orders" from "above," meaning either the Government or the Vatican, or both. Some see a move by moralizing Milan industrial bigwigs, thers suggest that Milan is being "used" as site for the move so as to avoid inference that it's planned by the Vatican (as has been suggested every time a censorship case has arisen in the Eternal City).

Unable to Restrict Pix Fests, Int'l Film Prods. Group to Tighten Rules

London, Nov. 8.

Unable to restrict the number of film festivals, the International Federation of Film Producers has decided to tighten its rules to safeguard industry interests. At the Administrative Council meeting here last week, a five-point program was agreed on in which it was decided to limit the number of competitive festivals to which approval will be given. And also to limit to four a year, the events which will restrict entries to films not shown outside the country of origin.

The Federation recommends that festivals should not run for more than 12 days and that "in no circumstances" should the contribution of each participating country exceed two films. Furthermore, it recommends that not more than two pix should be shown in any one day.

The last-named clause has specific reference to events at Venice this year when the host country submitted four competitive entries, and other leading producing countries, including the U.S. and Great Britain, were restricted to a single in-competition film.

Although it gave consideration to the possibility of limiting the number of fests, the Federation decided that any restriction centrally imposed was bound to have an arbitrary and discriminatory character. And also that the reduction in the number of festivals could only be satisfactorily achieved by agreement among festival organizers.

In the circumstances, therefore, the Federation Council agreed to approve any festival whose regulations conformed with Federation rules, and reserved the right to withdraw approval where it was not satisfied that the regulations were being observed. In the case of any festival failing during its course to observe the regulations, the Federation decreed it would withhold future approval.

Wayne Gifts Princess

London, Nov. 8.

John Wayne, who is said to have sunk much of his spare cash in his epic pic, "The Alamo," has dug up few extra dimes.

Princess Margaret and her spouse, Anthony Armstrong-Jones, were guests of honor at the film's preem. Wayne gave the Princess a silver cowboy saddle valued at $2,800. He assured her that it was a practical job that he'd picked up in San Antonio.

20th Keeps Full Film Prod. Sked In Gt. Britain

London, Nov. 8.

20th-Fox is continuing its big scale British film production activity and seven new projects were confirmed by Robert Goldstein before he returned to Hollywood last Thursday (27). These are in addition to "Cleopatra," which is now filming at Pinewood Studios with Elizabeth Taylor in the title role.

First of the new subjects will unite the team which made "The Millionairess," a current hit in the West End. Dimitri de Grunwald, Pierre Rouve and Peter Sellers start at the Metro studios next Monday (7) on "Topaze." This is based on a play by Marcel Pagnol and Sellers will direct as well as star.

Goldstein also confirmed the deal that Walter Shenson will produce "A Matter Of Who" which will star Noel Coward. It will be directed by Milton Holmes. Two 20th-Fox artists, Juliet Prowse and Ken Scott, will come over from Hollywood to appear in the pic.

Also on the 20th-Fox roster is a filmization of "The Visit," which Nunnally Johnson has scripted; "The Innocents," based on Henry James' novel "Turn of the Screw," which will be directed by Jack Clayton and star Deborah Kerr; "Watcher in the Shadows," which Jo Eisinger is scripting from Geoffrey Household's novel and which Henry Weinstein will produce; "Greatest Raid of All," based on the St. Nazaire exploit in 1942; and "The Inspector" which Mark Robson will produce and direct from the Jan de Hartog novel.

Cassavetes' Pic Clicks

Paris, Nov. 1.

Private showings of John Cassavetes' improvised Yank indie pic, "Shadows," have led to fine press comment. Producer-distrib Nicos Papatakis may soon get a first-run date for it, especially on the heels of its recent London hit.

French filmmaker, Jean Rouch, has even gone further in improvising his latest film, "Chronique D'Un Ete" (Summer Chronicle). It is a series of interviews with people done with hidden cameras and sound equipment in the streets.

Once Slighted Fans Need Sweetening So Set Up Yves Montand Gesture

Tokyo, Nov. 1.

Plans are being laid here for Yves Montand to stage a charity show on the occasion of his expected visit in mid-January to co-star opposite Shirley MacLaine in "My Geisha," to be directed for Paramount release by Jack Cardiff from a Norman Krasna script.

Reason for seeking a charitable organization to co-sponsor the date is believed to be the mixed feelings here regarding Montand. The actor-singer, skedded to tour Japan early this year, postponed once and then cancelled when his shooting with Marilyn Monroe in "Let's Make Love" ran over schedule. Japan fans felt slighted, hence a need to clear the air.

Now Pakistan Planning International Pix Fair

Karachi, Nov. 1.

A private organization hero has an ambitious plan to hold an internationail film fair late in 1961. R. A. Shoikh, the big man behind the idea told VARIETY that his organization has secured 225,000 square yards of land at a cost of about $250,000 as the proposed site for the fair.

The fair, scheduled to run 30-days, would demonstrate the international progress in the local film industry. There would be exhibits of film arts, techniques, equipment etc. Besides the exhibits, there will be seminars on filmic art and conferences of international film personalities. The organizers also propose to hold an international film personalities. The organizers also propose to hold an international beauty contest. Invitations will be sent to all film producing countries to attend.

Shortage?—Only of Blockbusters

Chicago, Nov. 8.

Talk of a production shortage is malarkey—"a myth fed by the tradepress."

So claims a veteran Chi-based distribution exec. Extensively travelled, he asserts: "There's more product than anyone knows what to do with. What they (the exhibs) are hollering about is where are the big ones?"

His "big ones" include the highly-exploitable juve market items as well as the hard-ticket spectacles. But otherwise—"there is no shortage!"

Grand Jury (Who Asked 'Em To?) Hails Atlanta's Woman Film Censor

Atlanta, Nov. 8.

September-October Fulton County Grand Jury went all out in backing City of Atlanta's motion picture censorship ordinance and included such a stand in its presentments. Latter reads, in part:

"We have investigated the operation of Atlanta's censorship of motion pictures and find that this safeguard for the community is greatly needed and should be continued. Motion pictures have tremendous influence, especially on our youth who make up the largest segment of moviegoers. The increase in the number of foreign-made films shown here, often presenting standards of conduct totally unacceptable in our country, and produced without any self-regulation by the industry itself, intensifies this problem.

"Hollywood has altered its self-regulation code to permit use of many themes once prohibited (e.g. drug addiction, prostitution, homosexuality and miscegenation). This lowering of standards makes some control highly desirable.

"We deplore the present efforts to abolish all restraints on screen fare.

"In the opinion of the Grand Jury, our Atlanta Film Censor should have the full support of all citizens.

Atlanta Constitution rebutted, after quoting paragraph pertaining to "theme."

"Does this mean that because such 'adult' and controversial themes are now used in movies, control should be used to see that the themes are handled within the normal bounds of decency and good taste? Or does it mean these themes, themselves, must be 'controlled'—in the sense of banned?

"If it is the former, we agree. If it is the latter, then we would like to suggest that what censor should be concerned with is not theme at all, but treatment.

"It is possible to deal with each of the themes mentioned by the jury in an instructive and inoffensive way. It is possible to deal with normally innocent themes in a prurient, disgusting way. In fact, it seems to us, that the great majority of the offenses of the screen fall in this latter category."

Mrs. Christine Smith Gilliam, city's film censor and wife of prominent politici , in a talk to the Northside Kiwanis Club, termed censorship here "the democratic way to protect the youth of this mmunity."

Fewer Studio P.A.'s

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Publicists' employment in major studios has been reduced from 113, number at work before the strike situation earlier this year, to 94 now on payrolls, according to current bulletin of Publicists Local 818, IATSE.

Layoffs total nearly 17%.

Peter Glenville Thinks 'Honest Statements On Life' Belong to Screen

"Honest statements of life shouldn't be barred from motion pictures, as largely they were five years ago. For films to remain alive and stimulating they must reflect the tenor of life around us. Indeed, it's our responsibility to reflect the realistic as it is pointless to go on living make-believe."

This is the stand taken by Peter Glenville, legit and film director, who thus was entering, at a reporter's prodding, the controversy about Hollywood's "adult" trend.

Th 47-year-old Britisher regards it as morally wrong to deal only in the non-controversial if this means insincere and sentimental material. "It's silly to show only casual fun on the screen. For in doing this the filmmaker is refusing to acknowledge life as it really ."

Glenville's credits bespeak both his films and legit. He now has "Becket" and "Take Me Along" going on the Broadway stage and shortly is to call the turns on "Summer and Smoke" for Hal Wallis and "Devil in Bucks County" for Warners.

The director professes strong opposition toward unnecessary stress on sex or any other possibly controversial subject. He adds: "Nobody should be shocked by the content of a film but, importantly, taste is involved. A graphic talk on rape is undesirable."

Glenville, who looks much younger than his actual calendar count, offers the James Poe script for "Bucks County" as an example of the type of story that can be meaningful when handled in sincere and responsible fashion. Among the characters involved are a television producer and his wife. The marital atmosphere is frigid because of his complete preoccupation with his work. Th woman falls victim to a lecherous seducer, feels degraded and embittered, but the experience has nonetheless instilled in her a newly-found warmth and she and her husband come to share a more profound relationship.

This, opines Glenville, is the kind of actuality that is—that exists in one form or other and shouldn't be ignored, but must be handled in good taste.

"Bucks County" will have Simone Signoret as star, while top-cast in "Summer" are Geraldine Page and Laurence Harvey.

As for legit, a concern of Glenville's the new field of home toll television. He thinks the revenue potential from this enterprise could be so vast that the theatre will be threatened.

"There shall always be audiences for the theatre," he stated, but he has fears that the theatre will be financially unable to compete with home toll for performers if the new medium grows as a vast commercial moneymaker. Glenville figures top stars will be available for the stage but the solid players in the $500 weekly category might well prefer the added payoff that fee-tv perhaps someday will offer.

SOUTH CAROLINA CLERIC RAPS 'RED HOT FILMS'

Columbia, S.C., Nov. 8.

"Red hot, sexy movies" are under attack here by the Columbia Ministers Assn.

Group has presented a resolution to both City Council and the county Legislative Delegation asking action to curb so-called lewd films and also magazines described as "dirty literature."

Rev. Carl Honeycutt, president of the ministerial group, laid down the charge about the features, leveling most of his attack against drive-in.s.

All but one of the drive-ins just two weeks ago banded together in an association and adopted a resolution which proposed to ban showings of burlesque and sex hygiene films. One operator, who didn't sign, is still showing them.

Both Council and the delegation have proposed a study of the situation. Rep. Tom Elliott apparently expressed majority opinion when he said "I'm opposed to lewd literature and films, but I'm opposed to censorship, too." He said he favored action "other than iron-clad laws."

COMMONWEALTH CHAIN IN EXPANSION MOVES

Kansas City, Nov. 8.

Commonwealth Theatres opened a new $1,000,000 shopping centre adjoining one of its theatres in Columbia, Mo. last week. At the same time, the chain premiered "Can-Can" in Wichita after installing what is said to be the first Todd-AO projection equipment in Kansas.

Richard H. Orear, Commonwealth president, joined Wichita civic leaders and other notables for the preem; then shuttled to neighboring Missouri for the dedication of the new shopping mecca.

The new center, located on grounds adjacent to Commonwealth's Broadway Drive-In, was developed along the line of thought that both theater and shopping center can operate with mutual benefits through showmanship.

Large crowds turned out for the 72-hour extravaganza, roughly 15 000 on the first day of the center's operation on October 27. Pennants, music and an old-fashioned, free barbecue provided atmosphere.

Sideline such as free pancake feed, free kiddie rides on a new go-cart track, and free ducats to the drive-in with stamped coupons received with shopping center purchases.

Earl Douglass is city manager for Commonwealth in Columbia. The new venture will be managed by Shelby Bourne, manager of Commonwealth's Uptown Theater, who will also continue in that capacity. Ten tenants presently occupy space in the almost 50.000 square foot center with facilities to accomodate two more.

The Sunset in Wichita was completely refurbished for the "Can-Can" bow with new decorations in the French motif, drapes and a Parisienne sidewalk cafe erected in the foyer.

To Reissue Early 3-D Pix

London, Nov. 8.

On the assumption that there is an entirely new generation around, Warner-Pathe has decided to reissue three of its earlier 3-D hits. They are "House of Wax," "Phantom of Rue Morgue" and "Charge at Feather River."

Because of th fact all three films carried X certificates, many of today's teenage patrons were barred from seeing the films when they were first presented some eight years ago.

Massachusetts Location

Fitchburg, Mass., Nov. 8.

Film company of "By Lov Possessed" is shooting scenes with Efrem Zimbalist Jr. here and in nearby Groton. Fitchburg gendarmes are being used in the film backgrounds, and townsmen at $20 a day.

Fans turned for the film team shooting in the close to 50 degree Indian Summer weather, but were disappointed to find that Lana Turner would not be working in the scenes shot locally.

Patrolmen George A. Sheppard and Kenneth A. Maynard stayed right in character for the cameras, as they were filmed walking their beats.

Improved Attendance at Frisco; Two Top 'Bests' Won by Russia

By WILLIAM STEIF

San Francisco, Nov. 8.

Soviet Russia copped two of the four top Golden Gate Awards at the fourth annual San Francisco Film Festival, ending last week.

Russia's "Ballad of a Soldier" won the "best film" award and Grigori Tchukhrai, "Ballad" director, won the "best director" award.

Prize for "best actress" went to Giovanna Ralli, who played lead in Italy's entry, Roberto Rossellini's new "Night in Rome," and prize for "best actor" went to Ignacio Lopez Tarso, of Mexico's "Macario."

Golden Gate Awards were made at ball and midnight supper held for 500 persons (at $10 a head) in Sheraton-Palace Hotel.

After fest director Irving M. Levin and various consular officials handed out awards voted by jurors Alexander Karaganov (of Russia), Herman Weinberg (of U.S.) and Darius Milhaud (of France), Italian Government pulled a surprise on Levin (so he shouldn't be disappointed at Italian renege) and awarded him Italy's Star of Solidarity for promoting fest under sponsorship of San Francisco Art Commission.

Financially, this boxoffice-supported fest came out far better than it ever has before. Gross for the 20 pictures (from 19 nations) shown at the 1,000-seat Metro was just a shade under $30,000, up more than $8,000 from 1959 — and first night, France's "Love Game," was invitational.

Customers were charged $2.50 apiece for premieres and repeats, at 6:30 o'clock the following night, cost $2 a head. There were five sellouts, premiere and repeat of "Ballad of a Soldier," premiere of U. S.' "Flight" because it was a local production), premiere of Sweden's "Mein Kampf" and premiere of Israel's "They Were Ten," which was double-billed with Czech "Romeo," Juliet and Darkness." In addition, repeat of "Mein Kampf" came close to selling out.

Other Golden Gate Award winners were:

Best screenplay—Jiri Weiss and Jan Otcenasek, Czechoslavakia's "Romeo, Juliet and Darkness."

Best score — Renzo Rosselli Italy', "Night in Rome."

Best documentary feature — Sweden's "Mein Kampf."

Best supporting actress—Tanie Kitabayashi, Japan's "Diary of Sueko."

Best supporting actor—Memmo Carotenuto, Spain's "Little Guide of Tormes."

Winners among the shorts were:

Animated — Rumania's "Homo Sapiens" and "Yugoslavia's "Concerto for Submachinegun."

Art—Hungary's "Immortality."

Creative-Experimental — U. S.' "Powwow."

Documentaries—France's "Deracinements."

Fiction—U.S.' "Day of the Painter" and Russia's "Revenge."

Industrial — Canada's "Roughnecks."

Kansas City All-Time Admission High, $3, As 'Exodus' Opens House

Kansas City, Nov. 8.

"Exodus" (UA) has been dated here, opening the new Empire Theatre Dec. 21. Kansas City thus is one of only eight hard ticket showings in the country.

Premiere here will be in the theatre which the Durwood circuit has been remodelling and brightening, after taking it over from RKO last fall. It formerly was the Missouri Theatre, and is in the heart of the downtown area.

"Exodus" will see a new admission scale high reached here with a $3 ticket. Durwood will ask this for the "Empire Gold Seat," a special section with luxury padded chairs, etc. Balance of the scale ranges from $1.25 balcony seats at matinees to $2.50 for orchestra seats week nights and holidays.

Nat Rudich from the Otto Preminger office and Fred Goldberg of United Artists asserted the quality and scope of the Durwood hard-ticket operation influenced them strongly in setting the picture for the Empire. It will be the second hard-ticket operation for Durwood here, as circuit now has "Ben-Hur" in 40th week in the Capri and is expected to go through the holidays.

FILMING FRANZ KAFKA

Gloomy Genius Work Set By Marco Ferreri

Madrid, Nov. 8.

Screen rights to the novel by Franz Kafka, "The Castle," were acquired for ne of Spain's promising young directors by Films '59, a production company with two festival entries this year out of two productions credited to date.

The symbolic tale of human frustration will be directed by Marco Ferreri, whose "El Cochecito" won the Critics' Award at Venice this year. In addition, Films '59 also produced "Los Golfos," Spanish entry at the Cannes Fest earlier in the year.

Franz Kofka, a tubercular Hungarian genius, wrote stories of inaugurative horror which foreshadowed the tortures of Hitler. He has long been a special favorite of highbrows.

J. Lee Thompson will direct "The Executioners." Sy Bartlett production for Universal starring Gregory Peck, as British megger's first U.S. assignment.

If I Really Had My Way—

Atlanta Censor Admits She'd Close Up Half The Films—Pastors Think She's Great

Atlanta, Nov. 8.

This city's Pastors' Conference has come out in favor of motion picture censorship. Louis D. Newton, pastor of Druid Hills Baptist Church, presented a resolution at the weekly meeting extolling the "constructive" work of Mrs. E. A. Gilliam, wife of an alderman, as censor.

It was addressed to Mayor William B. Hartsfield and the aldermanic board.

"We are convinced," the resolution said, "that censorshi , as provided under law and wisely administered . . . is desirable and essential, if we are to maintain moral and cultural standards of decency in our rapidly growing community."

Meanwhile, the executive committee of the Atlanta Council of Parents and Teachers has declared that it, too, would support censorship of motion pictures.

Both actions followed a threat of court action on the part of Independent Film Importers and Distributors of America.

Recently Mrs. Gilliam was a guest on Reporter's Notebook, a panel program on WAGA-TV, Storer chain mouthpiece here and CBS mouthpiece.

Under questioning, she explained that she had an ordinance to guide her, but if it was left to her personal likes and dislikes, there'd be so few movies (given clearance that at least half the theatres would have to close."

UP EDDIE SOLOMON AS LEVINE TOP V.P.

Eddie Solomon, who joined Embassy Pictures one year ago as v.p. in charge of ad-pub-exploitation, has been named exec v.p. of the Joseph E. Levine company. It's effective immediately.

In his new capacity, Solomon, formerly exploitation manager of 20th-Fox, will oversee the administrative operation of Embassy in the areas of production, sales and merchandising.

The post is regarded as an important one in view of Levine's expanded production schedule and new deal for distribution through Metro.

Drutman Resumes Post

Irving Drutman, film publicist, completes a special assignment this week on Columbia's upcoming hardticketer, "Pepe," and returns to his post as publicity director for Louis DeRochemont Associates.

Drutman has been at Col for the last three months working on advance newspaper and magazine campaign for "Pepe." At DeRochemont he'll be drumbeating "Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone," which starts shooting in Rome next month.

New York Sound Track

With marriage of Harold Rand, Par's publicity manager, to Lillian Wishnia less than three weeks away (Thanksgiving Day), approximately 100 of his more intimate industry friends feted him at an occasionally uproarious bachelor dinner Friday (4) ight at La Scala. Highlights of the evening, emceed by Ed Feldman, were a long monolog by Don Rickles ("Which one's the groom?") and some special material, written by Jack Brodsky, Feldman, Bernie Green and Dick Karp, recorded by semi-pro artistes, among others. Best of these True-Life Adventure bits: a recapitulation of one of Harold's rounds of the New York newspapers, with the journalists done to an acid turn. The best (and almost the shortest) speech: that of 20th's Rodney Bush who noted that he wasn't gaining a son, but losing a secretary (Miss Wishnia)—a situation which seems to be taking on all the aspects of an industry trend, since Brodsky earlier married Bush out of another Girl Friday.

Loew's Hotels has changed the name of its now-building eastside hotel to the Summit. It was previously known as the Americana East, but the company wanted to avoid confusion with the now under construction Americana on Seventh Ave. (there's a Hotel America on 47th St.—Ed.) . . . Magazine photographer Sam Shaw reported to the Studio de Boulogne in Paris this week to take up duties as producer of the Pennebaker production, "Paris Blues." Martin Ritt is directing the United Artists release . . . Universal sales v.p. Henry H. (Hi) Martin has set a dual N. Y. engagement for the Cary Grant starrer, "The Grass Is Greener." It opens at the Astor and Trans-Lux 52d St. on Dec. 14 . . . British thesp Jack Hawkins a Gotham visitor for four days en route to the Coast for a role in "Spinster" . . . Four amusement stocks—United Artists, Metro and Decca—listed in the Bache & Co. "Tax Memo" as recommended for profitable reinvestment and tax switching . . . Eli Wallach back in N. Y. after winding up "The Misfits."

Joe and Leona Hummel breaking the jump from their Las Leonas mansion in Mallorca with stopoffs in Paris ("for some good French food") and London ("two weeks to see the new plays") and due in New York next week to continue their fall-winter holidaying and shopping. Hummel was longtime Continental boss for Warner Bros.

Believed sole remaining print of a 1928 German film starring Marlene Dietrich is owned by Hugh and Alice Mackenzie of Toronto, who show it to friends in their home, per Lotta Dempsey in Toronto Star. It's "In Dreams I Kiss Your Hand, Madame," made in Paris by Super Films of Berlin; directed by Robert Land; with Harry Liedtke as leading man nd Karl Hutzner as comic.

Jules Levy, Arthur Gardner and Arnold Laven will make "Geronimo" for United Artists under their Gramercy Productions banner . . . Susan Kohner and George Hamilton join Lana Turner, Efrem Zimbalist Jr., and Jason Robards in Mirisch Co.'s "By Love Possessed" . . . Morris Stoloff will score Joshua Logan's Warner Bros. production, "Fanny" . . . Allied Artists cast British Diana Dors for a top spot in "The Big Bankroll," biopic of Arnold Rothstein . . . Ralph Meeker costars with Susan Hayward and Dean Martin in Larry Weingarten Metro production, "Ada" . . . Oscar Brodney set Broadway thesp Peggy Cass for a top role in "All Hands on Deck." Pat Boone starrer.

Henry Hart, editor of Films in Review, has probably written the best review accorded John Wayne's "The Alamo" calling it "entertaining and emotionally moving throughout its three hours . . . exceptionally good technically . . . In fact, it has everything a movie should have."

150% over 1960's, with company aiming at a total release of 18 pix next year. Of this total, 12 will be "A" product, he said, with perhaps six smaller budgeters. AIP will itself produce eight to 10 of the "A" pix, he said, picking up others outside.

Nicholson estimated that company's domestic distribution arm can handle up to 12 "A" pictures a year most efficiently. Prexy has just returned from London and Rome where exec veep Samuel Z. Arkoff is presently negotiating for worldwide distrib rights to "Fright," a filmed-in-Italy English language horror pic starring Barbara Steele and John Richardson. Film is described as "horror picture created for adult patronage."

AIP has plans for only two coproductions in the upcoming year, and both these with Anglo-Amalgamated of Britain. Queried as to possible sequel to company's Italian-made "Goliath and the Dragon," which hasn't yet gone into release, Nicholson said he was having talks on such a venture with Italo producer, Fulvio Lucisano but that any such deal would not be a coproduction, rather AIP would pick up distrib rights on the completed production without providing any preproduction assistance.

Nicholson returned to the Coast Thursday evening.

Sixth Man" is in the editing stage, "Back Street" is shooting, and "Tammy Tell Me True" starts this month.

The company's basic program, Martin indicated, would come from studio-made or studio-originated-with-indie-producers productions. The rest of the slate would be augmented by completed outside pictures or films contracted for distribution. Of the 17 pix on th 1960-61 slate, a total of seven wer acquired from outside sources, with U having no financial interest in the making of the pix.

Martin stressed that U had no immediate plan to offer "Spartacus" for 35m dates and that only 70m engagements would be accepted. The picture, now playing six key cities, will be playing in approximately 26 situations by mid-February. Ten new opening are scheduled for Dec. 22, with four more in January, and four to six in February. Martin said th business was near capacity in the six spots where the picture is currently playing on a hardticket basis.

Canada's Woes Sound Quite Familiar

Too Many Roadshows, Too Few Prints, Dailies Favor Video News Over Theatre News

By ROBERT A. McSTAY

Toronto, Nov. 8.

Resolutions decrying unjust and discriminatory Provincial amusemen taxes, too many roadshow allocations, shortage of prints and trailers, and pressure being exerted by certain voluble minority groups regarding the Sunday exhibition, were passed at the annual meeting here of the Motion Picture Industry Council of Canada at the King Edward Sheraton Hotel.

Frank Fisher, veepee and g.m., Odeon Theatres (Canada) Ltd., was elected chairman, succeeding Charles S. Chaplin, g.m., United Artists, who held the post for two terms. First vice-chairman is Peter S. Myers, Toronto, managing director of 20th. Century Films in Canada; second vice-chairman, Harry Prgygrocki, Winnipeg, prexy of the Manitoba Motion Picture Distributors Assn. Treasurer is H. C. D. (Dick) Main, indie operator; Arch Jolley, executive secretary.

Trans-Canada delegates were assured by Charles S. Chaplin and I. H. (Izzy) Allen that print shortages will be attacked immediately; and Clare Appel, executive director, Canadian Motion Picture Distributors Ass'n. said that better treatment on the amusement pages —in relation to tv news—would be sought by personal interviews with Canadian newspaper publishers.

Strong objection to present Provincial and municipal license fees was expressed at the Toronto meeting by E. G. Forsyth, assistant g.m. of the Odeon chain; and Douglas Miller, prexy, Alberta Theatres Ass'n, stated that Provincial and civic governments should charge movie houses in the same manner as other businesses and not on a fee based on b.o. potentials. H. C. D. Main, independent, reported that his correspondence with Provincial representatives had gotten sympathy but claimed that action to secure "just fees" would be continued.

Sequelize '33 King Kong

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

"King Kong and Prometheus" is being planned by producer John Beck as a sequel to RKO's 1933 shocker, "King Kong." Willis O'Brien, responsible for the special effects on original which included the animated giant ape, has been inked by Beck to function in same capacity on new film.

George Worthing Yates is prepping a treatment. "Kong," turned out by Merian C. Cooper and Ernest Schoedsack, presently is playing the television route.

Defense Drags In 'Psycho' as Youth Up for Murder

Milwaukee, Nov. 8.

Leroy Pinkowski, 19, Milwaukee, is on trial (in Municipal Court) on a first degree murder charge, allegedly stabbing 14-year old Diana Mae Zibolsky to death in a West Allis park last Aug. 31. The state rested its case last week. Pinkowski, who has entered a plea of not guilty by reason of insanity, was slated to start his own defense.

Defense Attorneys Peter N. Flessas and John J. Foley, have indicated they plan attempting to show that Pinkowski allegedly killed the teenager by reason of being influenced by viewing the Alfred Hitchcock film "Psycho," at a Milwaukee theatre. "Psycho" (Par) played first run at the Riverside last summ

According to Pinkowski's attorneys, Pinkowski and Miss Mary Ann Schuessler, 19, here, saw "Psycho" both on Aug. 17 and Aug. 25. Miss Schuessler, on the stand as a defense witness, testified Pinkowski was "in a trance" when viewing the feature.

Attorneys Flessas and Foley reported an attorney for Paramount Pictures had sanctioned a private screening of "Psycho" for the jury members, if Municipal Court Judge Steffes ruled the film was relevant to the case.

Attys. Flessas and Foley indicated they wrote a letter to Alfred Hitchock, with a query as to whether he knew of any other acts of extreme violence had been reported, after any person had viewed "Psycho."

TAYLOR-AUERBACH'S 25TH DRAWS BANQUET

Toronto, Nov. 8.

Visitors from the United States, Britain and France, plus Canadian representatives of the film industry, were present for the 25th anniversary banquet of the founding of 20th Century Theatres here. Nat Taylor, prexy, and Raoul Auerbach, veepee and partner, started with two houses in 1935, have today a chain of 60 theatres operating throughout Ontario.

A testimonial dinner, held in the Park Plaza Hotel here, saw over 300 guests present from international film interests, hence separate toasts to the Queen, President Eisenhower and President De Gaulle. Also among heads of Canadian chains were J. J. Fitzgibbons, prexy, Famous Players (Canadian) Corp; and Frank Fisher, veepee and g.m., Odeon Theatres (Canada) Ltd.

Toastmaster was Hye Bossin. There were 13 speakers, with Nat Taylor—in final address—expressing his gratitude to all who had played a part in the growth of 20th Century Theatres Ltd. Auerbach tendered the official greeting to banquet guests.

Among latter was Joseph Vegoda, film distributor of London, Leo Lax of French Dubbing Syndicate. American guests included James Mulvey, principal in new Beaver-Champion Films; Ed Morey, Allied Artists; Budd Rogers. Alpha Distributing Co; Milton Cohen, United Artists Eastern sales manager; George Margolin, Continental Motion Picture Co; and others.

MITCHUM-ROSENBERG TEAM

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Robert Mitchum is partnered with indie producer Frank P. Rosenberg in former's three feature deal with United Artists, with Rosenberg set to handle producer reins on trio of properties.

"North from Rome," first pic on slate, has been a Rosenberg project for past two years when he acquired the Helen MacInnes novel for his own company. Film is slated to roll in Italy March 15.

Saturday Night and Sunday Morning

good moments as the aunt to whom Finney and Miss Roberts go for help. Bryan Pringle, as Miss Roberts' weak husband; Norman Rossington, as Finney's cousin and best friend, Edna Morris, as a nosey neighbour and Robert Cawdron, a factory foreman, are others who give fine support.

It would be of help if the author had given a little more clue as to his message. But viewed as straightforward drama there is much to admire in both the writing and the production. "Saturday Morning And Sunday Night" is a mature, absorbing pic. Rich.

The Plunderers

Juve delinquency in the old west. Short of "A" quality or "B" pace. Timely aspect of yarn and presence of several fresh young faces will have to do rescue job at the b.o.

Hollywood, Oct. 31.

"The Plunderers" is a rather classic example of a picture that falls into that gray market area between the top and bottom half of a double bill. Essentially, it is neither. The Joseph Pevney production appears to be aspiring for the number one position, but it falls considerably shy of that goal. It would be a strong supporting attraction save that the trifle too long, a bit pretentious, and too slow-moving for secondary standards. If the Allied Artists release is to get by, it will have to impress upon the public that it is telling a timely story (juvenile delinquency) in an old west setting, and that there are some fresh and promising young people in the cast, in addition to star Jeff Chandler. Being a medium-budgeted effort, it might have a long-shot chance.

The Bob Barbash screenplay contains several highly dramatic passages and provides most of the performers with plenty of high-voltage emoting room, but leaves too many motivational questions unanswered and seems to avoid the normal paths of inter-character communication. It is almost as if the people involved in Barbash's screenplay go out of their way not to discuss and reason things out in the accepted human fashion, with the result that the climaxes emerge artificial. The drama concerns four unsociable young drifters who, sensing the fear they inspire in a small village peopled by peace-loving types, proceed to take over. Eventually they are overhauled one by one, primarily through the efforts of a one-armed Civil War hero (Chandler), who is in the process of regaining his courage and confidence.

Chandler gives a straightforward delineation, a sensible approach to the character. He leaves the emotional sparking to the younger people in the cast, some of whom come through admirably. Ray Stricklyn brings immature menace to the role of the leader of the young rat pack, and Roger Torrey is a standout as his giant lieutenant, an irrational but awe-inspiring hulk of a boy-man. Dolores Hart is pretty and capable as the girl who loves Chandler (in spite of the jarring discrepancy in age). There is solid character playing by Marsha Hunt, Jay C. Flippen and James Westerfield.

Dee Pollock is not altogether convincing as the brightest and most decent of the sinister quartet. Least successful of the players is John Saxon, although his failure is partially a result of some extremely obvious directorial touches by Pevney, predictable bits of business such as the villainous leer when eyeing the innocent young girl. Saxon's interpretation of a dangerous vaquero is far too exaggerated for belief.

Cinematically, the approach is simple and uncluttered. A level of journeyman competence is attained by Jensman Eugene Polito, art director David Milton, editor Tom McAdoo, composer-conductor Leonard Rosenman. Tube.

Via Margutta

(ITALIAN)

Rome, Nov. 1.

Cineriz release of a Documento Film production. Features Antonella Lualdi, Gerard Blain, Franco Fabrizi, Yvonne Fourneaux, Cristina Gaioni, Spiros Focas, Claudio Gora, Walter Brofferio, Gerrado Pani, Marion Marshall and Alex Nicol. Directed by Mario Camerini. Story and screenplay, Franco Brusati, Camerini, Ennio De Concl, Ugo Guerra; camera, Leonida Barboni; music, Piero Piccioni. At Corso Cinema, Rome. Running time, 108 MINS.

Stefano	Gerard Blai
Marta	Yvonne Fourneaux
Donata	Antonella Lualdi
Giosue	Franco Fabrizi
Marco	Spiros Focas
Mai	Cristina Gaioni

Fragmentary expose of artists life and troubles along Rome's Via Margutta, local painters row, this often hits the mark but just as often misses its target. It's a spotty item which must rely on a strong, adroit sell, coupled with a large and likeable cast roster, for full effect.

Screenplay denotes the presence of too many different contributors, and generally tries to ring in too many elements and problems. Th include the fashionable ph artist, the talented one who makes good, the foreign dabbler who is in Via Margutta for kicks alone (an escape from his dominant wife), the homo art dealer who helps along his protegees, the pure and innocent housemaid, and the opportunist who lives off the work of others.

The result is perforce superficial character development not aided by strangely, uninvolved direction by Mario Camerini. The pic has its moments, however, and a good re-editing job would help.

The acting is better than the material, with Alex Nicol walking off with most honors, followed by Antonella Lualdi, Yvonne Fourneaux and others. Claudo Gora and Franco Fabrizi repeat previous roles, while the usually competent Gerard Blain appears ill at ease in his role as the dedicated painter. Homosexual aspects are rendered in unflinching manner here, but the handling is honest and straightforward. It got by the local censor as is.

Technical credits, from Piero Piccioni's good scor to Leonida Barboni's expert camerawork on colorful Roman locations, are all first-class. Hawk.

They Were Ten

(ISRAELI

San Francisco, Oct. 30.

Orb Films, Ltd., and Scopus, Inc., production. Stars Ninette Dinar, Oded Teomi; features Leo Filer. Directed by Baruch Dienar. At San Francisco Film Festival, Oct. 29, '60. Running time, 108 MINS.

Manya	Ninette Linar
Josef	Oded Teomi
Zalman	Leo Filer

This picture tells the story of 10 settlers from an Eastern European ghetto in Galilee near the end of the 19th Century. Nine are men, the 10th the wife (Ninette Dinar) of one (Oded Teomi). The 10 are forced to scrape a farm out of a racky, barren hillside, fight unfriendly Arabs for water and lebensfaum and face down the land's Turkish rulers. They also must put down dissension in their own ranks, and the wife has to put off another too-ardent settler. Among the picture's predictable facets are the birth of a child, a grim drought and, at the fil end, the woman's death and heavy rain.

The whole picture was shot in the hills of Galilee by an unknown cameraman with the all-Israeli cast speaking Hebrew. It is a nice try at a peasant epic but really doesn't come off because Baruch Dienar's direction is erratic and it follows such too familiar pattern. Performances of the leading players are quite good; though the characters tend to be stock.

Film probably has art house market in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Boston and Philadelphia, also has exploitation possibilities as the first all-Israeli production to be shown in U.S. Stef.

Bis Dass Das Geld Euch Scheidet

(Until Money Departs You)

(GERMAN)

Constantin release of Alfa production. Stars Luise Ulrich and Gert Froebe; features Corny Collins, Wolfgang Lukschy, Christiane Nielsen. Directed by Alfred Vohrer. Screenplay, Heinz Oskar Wuttig, after novel of same name by Angela Ritter; camera, Kurt Hasse; music, Herbert Trantow; editor, Ira Oberberg. At Marmorhaus, Berlin. Running time, 99 MINS.

Lisbeth Grapsch	Luise Ulrich
Jupp Grapsch	Gert Froebe
Heidi Grapsch	Corny Collins
Berni Grapsch	Manfred Kunst
Nina Sonntag	Christiane Nielsen
Manfred Grothe	Wolfgang Lukschy
Dr. Plauert	Leon Askin
Dr. Giller	Hans Hessling
Fritz Hassen	Herbert Tiede
Poldi	Peter Parak

As per its subject, this is one of the more ambitious recent German pix. It makes an attempt to criticize West Germany's newly rich society. Pic's intended social-criticism, however, lacks a good deal of conviction, and the whole thing borders too much on the novelettish. While foreign prospects are rather problematical, film's domestic chances look satisfactory, undeniably helped by the name of Luise Ulrich, one of few German screen actresses who's managed to keep a star status for more than 20 years.

Film tries to show that money is often the root of all evil. Here is projected a couple who lived happily while they had to struggle along with financial difficulties. Thanks to the German economic boom, the man struck it rich and became an industrial tycoon. That evidently spoils his character in this vehicle. All that he has now in his mind is to get rid of his wife for the sake of a younger woman. Film's ending sees the man deserted by all, even by the girl for whom he gave up his wife and children.

As often with German pix of this type, this one suffers from an inadequate script. Situations, story development and character motivations are too conventional to make an impression. Although much of their acting rings untrue in this, the players are still th best thing about this film.

This particularly applies to Gert Froebe whose portrayal of the spoilt-by-money hubby, is worth watching. Luise Ulrich, his wife, has to exaggerate her naivete but she too has a number of good scenes. Cute Corny Collins turns in an acceptable performance as their daughter, a modern-type girl. Christiane Nielsen is believable as the sexy femme for whom the man falls. Wolfgang Lukschy contributes a crook who specializes on fake grounds for divorce.

Alfred Vohrer's direction is usually too broad and reveals some lack of routine. But it's his first adult film after a series of pix that revolved aroung teenagers. Herbert Trantow's score is good while the lensing is average as are the film's other technical credits. Hans.

Djavulens Oga

(The Devil's Eye)

(SWEDISH)

Stockholm, Nov. 1.

Svensk Filmindustri production and release. With Jarl Kulle, Bibi Anderson, Nils Poppe, Gertrud Fridh, Sture Lagerwall, Stig Jarrel, Gunnar Bjornstrand, Georg Funkquist, Gunnar Sjoberg, Allan Edwall. Directed by Ingmar Bergman. Screenplay, Bergman; camera, Gunnar Fischer; music, Domenico Scarlatti; editor, Oscar Rosander. At Roda Kvarn, Stockholm. Running time, 90 MINS.

Don Juan	Jarl Kulle
Britt-Marie	Ibi Anderson
The Priest	Nils Poppe
Renata	Gertrud Fridh
Pablo	ture Lagerwall
Satan	Stig Jarrel
The Actor	Gunnar Bjornstrand
Count	Georg Funkquist
Marquis	Gunnar Sjoberg
Eared Devil	Allan Edwall

Ingmar Bergman's new comedy, "The Devil's Eye," is based on the Irish proverb that "a virgin is a sty in the devil's eye." In the pit of hell, one day Satan's eyelid began to swell and experts informed him that the cause was the untouched 20-year-old daughter of a country priest. In order to set things straight again, Satan decides to dispatch Don Juan, his most experienced seducer to earth.

On his journey to seduce the young girl, Don Juan was accompanied by his servant, Pablo. Defying orders, Pablo promptly set out to seduce the frustrated wife of the priest. The priest was kind and had a childish faith in the goodness of mankind. Don Juan managed in causing a momentary breach between th daughter, Britt-Marie, and her fiance and breaking down her resistance. Previously, Don Juan was always the indifferent lover who had awakened the passions of women, but Britt-Marie's reaction was indifference. And on this occasion Don Juan fell in love.

Bergman's story is a fanciful one set in the world of the comedy of manners, with the music of Scarlatti backgrounding. Although the film belongs to his lighter works, his favorite serious subjects, God, the devil and sex, play dominating roles.

Gunnar Fischer's photography is tops, but this time Bergman has related his story largely through words and less through pictures. However, there number of amusing photographic tricks. On the whole, the acting is superb. Top honors go to Bibi Andersson, Gertrud Fridh and Nils Poppe. One of the best scenes occurs when the priest captures a devil in his cupboard.

"Eye" may not be one of Ingmar Bergman's greatest masterpieces, but it is a well-made film with a fair amount of racy dialog that can be humorous if not hilarious. It should be a boxoffice tantalizer. Some of the arty andiences may be disappointed, but should find material to dissect. Fred.

Komisario Palmun Erehdys

(Mysterious Case of Rygseck Murders)

(FINNISH)

Helsinki, Nov. 1.

Suomen Filmitelollisuus (SF) production and release. Screenplay and directed by Matti Kassila after a novel by Mika Waltari. Stars Joel Rinne, Elina Pohpanpaa, Matti Ranin; features Jussi Jurkka, Elina Salo, Saara Ranin, Aino Mantsas, Leevi Kuuranne, Leo Jokela and Pentti Siimes. Camera, Olavi Tuomi; music, Osmo Lindeman; editor, Elmer Lahti. At Rex and Tuulensuu, Helsinki. Running time, 109 MINS.

Mika Waltari, who is the widely-known author of such bestsellers as "The Egyptian," "The Adventurer," has given a solid literary basis for this thriller-type modern icture. However, th yarn is turned over to images and sounds with such an exceptional filmatic that the picture must be considered the best for director Matti Kassila.

Plot is told on two time levels simultaneously. Never before has any director managed to drive this way of telling to such extremes as here without losing in clarity or pace. An abundance of humor, sometimes sarcastic, keeps up the balance with a rather grim main story line. The impact of the overall effect is tremendous. There are almost no breaks in the tension. This is due to clever editing by Elmer Lahti.

Film's star, Joel Rinne, plays an amiable detective, Inspector Palmu. All the others are exceptionally good. Elina Pohpanpas is a suspected young girl; Elina Salo plays a girl in the net of a blackmailing relative; while Pentti Siimes is the drunken brother. Leo Jokela is very funny as one of the detectives. A special laurel goes to Matti Ranin as Rinne's assistant, his role being mostly without dialog.

Camera work of Olavi Tuomi provides brilliant depth and shadows. Th music by Osmo Lindeman is a definite asset. Other technical credits are good.

Competently dubbed, this picture should have fine possibilities in any country. At home, it is surging to top b.o. results. Tuus.

(Motherland)

(PAKISTANI)

San Francisco, Oct. 31.

Shah Noor Studios of Lahore production. Stars Kamal; features Ejaz, Musarrat Nazir, Bahar, Ilyas. Directed by Anwar Kemal. Screenplay, Anwar Kemal; camera, Rashid Lodhi; editor, M. Akram; music, Inayat Hussain. At San Francisco Film Fest, Oct. 30, '60. Running time, 92 MINS.

Javed	Kamal
Masud	Ejaz
Reshman	Musarrat Nazir
Jenny	Bahar
Seth Mansoor	Ilyas

As an example of the impress of western — and especially Hollywood — culture on the Middle East, this first Pakistani film to be screened in the U.S. is rather interesting. But that's all.

Picture centers on stepbrothers, one from poor, heroic family, other from rich family, who seek the hand of the daughter of a government official. Poor boy wins, of rse, after many harrowing experiences, all of which have been lifted from 30-year-old Hollywood scripts, it would seem. Pace is slow and film is technically weak from every standpoint by western standards.

This film has only curiosity value and no chance whatsoever in any European or American market. Stef.

Legions of the Nile

(ITALIAN—C'SCOPE—COLOR)

Cleopatra and Mark in a dub-dud though some good derring-do scenes.

Twentieth-Fox release of Virgilio De Blasi-Italo Zingarelli production. Stars Linda Cristal. Cast (no character names given) includes Georges Marchal, Ettore Manni, Maris Mahor; with Conrado Sanmartin, Alfredo Mayo, Daniela Rocca, Mino Doro, Juan Majan, Andrea Aureli, Stefano Terra, Stefano Oppedisano, Salvatore Furnari, Rafael Duran, Tomas Blanco, Jany Clair, Mary Cazillo. Directed by Vittorio Cottafavi. Screenplay, Cottafavi, Giorgio Cristallini, Arnoldo Marrosu, Ennio De Concini; camera, Mario Pacheco; editor, Giulio Penna; art director, Antonio Simon; music, Renzo Rossellini; sound, Luis Buch, Oscar De Arcangelins; assistant directors, Antonio Ribas, Tsetso Zamurovich. Reviewed at the audio, Oct. 28, '60. Running time, 90 MINS.

Add "Legion of the Nile" to the list of quasi-historical adventure spectacles manufactured on the Italian assembly line and post-dubbed on these shores for quick, easy domestic digestion. Within the regrettable limitations of such international reconditioning, the film has a certain cultural merit that attracts attention and a child-like quality of epic heroism to capture the imagination of younger patrons and fanciful adults who can stand the sight of blood and the contrivances of two-dimensional melodrama. The 20th-Fox release, bolstered by CinemaScope and De Luxe Color, figures to make the usual swift, but ample dent on the accommodating American boxoffice.

The last days of Cleopatra and Mark Antony are under surveillance. With Cleopatra also the object of a far more ambitious enterprise being undertaken by this studio, it is understandable that 20th is rather hastily pressing this into release, more or less to get it out of the way before any conflict or confusion might arise. Actually the examination of these two well-known historical figures is extremely superficial and unconvincing in this film, occupying a subsidiary position behind the spectacular perils encountered by one Curridius, a Roman envoy who has been sent to Alexandria to persuade Antony to avert the disaster of a battlefield tangle with the home office. He fails, but in the process falls in and out of amor with the doomed Cleopatra.

Scenes of derring-do are pretty exciting, and there are several diverting passages of gladiatorial action, underwater combat and feats of archery. Linda Cristal, as Cleopatra, is not exactly the woman of infinite variety Shakespeare had in mind, but she's easy to look at. Ettore Manni is handsome and swashbuckling as Curridius. All of the acting suffers from the rub-a-dub-dubbing. Vittorio Cottafavi's direction keeps it moving along briskly for co-producers Virgilio De Blasi and Italo Zingarelli. The film, lensed in and around Rome and Madrid, is for the most part artistically authentic and photographically efficient. Tube.

Le Capitan

(The Yokel)

(FRENCH—COLOR DYALISCOPE)

Paris, Nov. 1.

Pathe release of Pathe-Dama Films production. Stars Jean Marais, Bourvil; features Elisa Martinelli, Pierrette Bruno, Annie Anderson. Directed by Andre Hunebelle. Screenplay, Jean Halain, Pierre Foucaud, Hunebelle from novel by Michel Zavaco; camera, Jean Mascolo, Marcel Grignon; editor, Jean Feyte. At Marignan, Paris. Running time, 115 MINS.

Francois	Jean Marais
Cogolin	Bourvil
Gisele	Elsa Martinelli
Maid	Pierrette Bruno
Beatrice	Annie Anderson
King Louis	Christian Fourcade

Andre Hunebelle had a successful pic with his "The Hunchback" and now repeats with another swashbuckling costumer that should follow in its predecessors' hoofprints. However, this appears somewhat too naive and familiar for anything but playoff or mop-pet use abroad.

Pic is amply mounted. It has a fair share of good swordplay and acrobatics by Jean Marais while the needed comic relief comes from funnyman Bourvil. It concerns a country nobleman trying to defend himself and his king from a usurping regent. He also gets a girl in the bargain. The fights are well staged and characters are the usual sawdust variety. This is all passable entertainment but lacks the originality or robustness for wide Yank chances. Its wordiness and nationalist drumbeating also make this more of a Continental item.

It all transpires in the 17th Century as Marais saves young Louis XIII from his conniving regent. Costumes, color and C'Scope size are all plus values. Mosk.

Chicago Debate on $1.80 Price; 'Can't Afford Lesser Admission'

Chicago, Nov. 8.

Although trade consensus is that other factors are responsible for it, the current slump in first-run picture business here again accentuates the recurrent admission price question. Whether the present $1.80 top (evenings and weekends) is realistic, majority sentiment is that it will be maintained at that peg indefinitely.

If anything, it appears, exhibitors would like to adjust them upward, but are chary of such a move just now. Nor do they see a reduction, claiming rising costs preclude that step. Ergo, an impasse that's clamping the cost squeeze tighter, and especially a hardship on the beleaguered neighborhood houses in a situation that of course has its parallels around the country.

From their vantage, theatreowners still tend to cast the distributor as the villain, reprising the cry of stiff rental terms at a time when many exhibs are least able to meet them. Contention is that rentals are the only ledger items which allow exhibs any capital latitude, as against fixed costs for just opening their doors. It follows from this that any talk of reducing admissions at this time, without attendant liberalization of rental policies, is suicidal. One circuit exec thus asserts, "Reduce prices and you go out of business."

Who'll Start?

There seems to be a chink in the "solid" mainstem front, though, with at least one deluxer hinting at a willingness to roll back the $1.80 figure, but unwilling to make the first move as an independent.

Dismissing the price-cut theory, David Wallerstein, prexy of the Kingpin Balaban & Katz circuit, declares the problem is more one of inducing the public to come out. Once they do, he opines, they're not going to be deterred by a price if they really want to see a picture. Implicit in this, seemingly, is that admissions could even go up at some later date without chasing away any appreciable biz.

More or less echoing him, Ralph Smith, g.m. of the Essaness chain stepped on the mainstem by the Woods Theatre) maintains it's not the price that inhibits business—at least not in a grind situation. If the chemistry is "right" in terms of product, time of release, promotion, etc., the public will sheil out, an assessment that speaks for a sizable segment of the industry here.

That, it's to be emphasized, excludes the hard-ticket field, about which the natives are showing more restlessness.)

Population Drift

If expressions for price-cutting are minimal within the trade, not so without—is reflected increasingly in the newspaper vox pop departments. Theme usually is that $1.80 (and even some of the lesser tariffs around town) per noggin is utterly unrealistic respecting today's economics and migration to suburbia. If it's significant in this connection, Chicago's first new hardtop in over a decade, which opened recently as a first sub-run house, locates on the city's perimeter and is plainly aimed at exploiting suburbia's "anti-downtown" mood.

Generally, however, exhibs repulse the "unrealistic" charge as itself unrealistic, pointing to their constricting cost squeeze. Outlying situations, as with the Loop example, have been holding the price line (this excepts some past drive-in gimmickry), but many would up admissions presto if they didn't fear adverse public reaction. What rankles many theatre chiefs, as they're quick to point out, is that price levels in almost every other area have risen higher than picture admissions.

The flimsiness of this argument insofar as it loses sight of necessities-versus-luxuries, and the constant homescreen competition, looks too obvious to hammer at.

For the exhibs' redicament in part, at least, distribution execs continue to rebut that some sprucing up wouldn't hurt, and could only help, the theatre. A VARIETY lookover at some representative nabe houses in recent months tends to confirm the film sellers, though it would obviously be foolish to think a broom and some paint alone is the panacea. Distribs also reiterate that theatre-owners could (and definitely should) make more like showmen—meaning where's all the sales razzmatazz that used to characterize them. It's a criticism particularly applicable to the outlying exhibitor.

Dipping biz here of late, as in other keys, owes mainly, doubtless, to upped interest in the home-stretch presidential campaigning, including the prime time tele debates. Fourth Nixon-Kennedy video set-to, to exacerbate matters, took place smack in the middle of a Friday night, a time that ormally could be expected t peak traffic at the wickets.

Parenthetically, of the various factors considered, the incipient recession is virtually discounted here as any but a negligible influence on trade—for the nonce at least. But a few exhibs can't help wondering, with the news out that unemployment in the state is up, and so is the cost of living.

New York Exchange Chief For 20th Now Arnswalder

Alex Arnswalder, former assistant branch manager at the 20th-Fox exchange in New York, has moved up to the top post succeeding Abe Dickstein, now a member of 20th general sales manager Glenn Norris' "sales cabinet."

At same time, Shep Bloom, 20th's branch manager in New Haven, has shifted to the New York exchange as assistant to Arnswalder.

Lancaster, Pa., Nov. 8.

"Windjami Louis de Rochemont's pilot run in Cinemiracle widescreen, is a happy hard-ticket ship—so far—here the hard-money Pennsylvania Dutch country.

Film opened last week (26) in the 1,200-seat King Theatre, flagship of the chain of south-central Pennsy hardtops and ozoners founded by the late Harry Chertoff, and is set for at least four weeks.

Pre-premiere promotion got a personal assist from Miss Mike Pollock, ad-pub director for Cinemiracle, and Mac Lunt, of the research roduction staff for "Windjammer" also w on hand for opening.

Tie-ins included the Lancaster U.S. Naval Reserve unit, one of the biggest in Fourth Naval District) which same up with a uniformed band tootling excerpts from the film score on sidewalk outside theatre, and lines of authentic signal flags to decorate marquee and lobby.

King's anager Mort Brodsky also had a giant aerial searchlight outside, and the mayors of three Pennsylvania cities — Lancaster, York and Reading—heading up the "celebrity" parade into the theatre.

Brodsky lost 280 seats to the Cinemiracle screen installation—which, with setup of the projection and sound systems, also cost a two-day shutdown of King's normal first-run grind policy. First night was sold to Lancaster Exchange Club, and they packed house with mi imum of paper on a $2.50 top. "Windjammer" will go 10 shows per week, including three matinees—all reserved seats—and advances for first full week are better than expected.

"Windjammer" is bucking "Girl of the Night" (Boyd); "Magnificent Seven" (Capitol); "Studs Lonigan" (Grand), and "I'm All Right, Jack" (Fulto Art) in the downtown houses.

GOLDWYN TOPS DONORS TO FILM CHARITIES

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Motion Picture Permanent Charities, which handles all filmdom charity drives a single yearly operation, has raised $920,335 from 21,811 contributors in first three weeks of its 1961 campaign.

Biggest donor is Samuel Goldwyn, making his custo ry annual $30,000 toss to organization he helped found and of which he was first prexy.

New subscribers to campaign totalled 1,518 to date, bringing number of contributors to 77% of the entire industry's potential. Drive this year, instead of aiming at an established sum, is going after 100% industry representation among personnel.

'Departmentalized' Ballyhoo

The operation of the film company pub-ad departments has been in a state of flux in the past several years. Following the almost cut-to-the-bone situation of a few years ago, most of the companies have quietly added to their staffs and are again operating at near or peak efficiency.

A majority of the companies still cling to the division of labor system—that is, they maintain separate trade press, newspaper, magazine, syndicate, radio-tv, etc. contacts. A number have staffers doubling up on two media outlets.

Metro, however, has eliminated the departmental system and is training its staffers to operate in all aspects of bally. Although one staffer is ultimately responsible for a particular job, all become involved in various fields of the operation. On a particular picture, a staffer may be involved with newspapers, trade papers, and magazines. For another entry, he may be sent on the road to brief fieldmen or to outline campaigns to exhibitors. At some time or ther, a Metro ballyman becomes involved in almost every area employed for drumbeating a picture.

Over-Sexed Pix Rile Exhibs

will pass favoring strenthening of the Hollywood Production Code, once a bulwark against censorship forces and grassroots clamor against the screen.

Allied, itself something of grassroots organization, seemingly feels the situation on Main Street has reached crucial proportions. Talk is heard that the producers—with their "anything-for-sensati complexes—have pushed adulthood too clos to Krafft-Ebing subject matter, offensive to family and church elements. Singled out for comment here is Paramount's socko "Psycho" (see separate N.Y. story—Ed.) which exhibs grumble, w. need lessly sexed-up, along with its horror. A similar fingerpoi at the bedroom beginning sequence "Dark At The Top Of The Stairs" (WB) is heard among delegates.

Tone of convention may be more than ordinarily self-critical. New president Jack Kirsch laid down the proposition startling if you know your Allied convention history) that exhibitors have been overdoing the charges against the film companies and not sufficiently janitoring their theatres or working to make marginal product pay off. He thrust at theatres' reliance upon extra space paid for by distribs, a point made in a VARIETY interview some time ago by Charles Einfeld of 20th. "Exploitation," said Kirsch, is not something administered by field men from Manhattan; it's hometown, self-promoting showmanship.

Valid Grounds For Optimism

Kirsch told his membership that the pendulum has swung back to theatres from video and that there are valid grounds for optimism, if the problems are realistically tackled. He did not fail, however, to pay Allied's customary respects to certain deplored practices of the film companies, notably blind selling, the whole rigamarole adopted in connection with so-called "blockbusters," and the hiking of rental terms regardless of drawing power.

Something else of probable significance, if borne out: Allied appears reconciled to the selloff of vaulties to television syndicators, as a now regular part of film industry economics. That's a real switcheroo from recent years.

Hardticketitis now afflicting the producers is attacked by Kirsch, and sentiment generally seems to be that the "roadshow" complex is reaching proposterous extremes in forcing films totalling unsuitable for reserved seat showings.

Talk of more small exhibitor mortality preceded unveiling of Allied States Assn. parley here i the Conrad Hilton Hotel.

Fact that the indies trooped into town at a time when the Chi first-runs were themselves downbeat was absoultely no balm at all. But to the hinterlanders, advance word from Al Myrick, Allied prexy, was, "We're in a desperate situation"—made so, he left no doubt, by distribution practices. Thus his expectation that shaping as the top issue before the powwow would be film—"how to get more pictures and how to get 'em sooner."

The theatremen came to the meet in no mood to ease up on constant tilting with the film companies. Allied's latest assault being an 18-point rap at the majors' marketing policies. Many of these points, of course, simply repeated familiar claims by the exhibition body; but just in the re-airing tended to affirm Myrick's vow that even with Abram Myers retired to the sidelines, Allied would continue to pre militantly for the reforms the elder statesman had often spelled out.

Vexed New Englanders

Meanwhile, the independents continued to suffer from within, with the dissident New England unit still alienated after last year's walkout, and no sign of peace-making on the horizon. The promise of renewed militancy wasn't likely to heal the rift.

Additionally, there was no inkling as the organization gathered that a "voice" had been found to replace the resigned Myers in the recently created post of executive director.

Shortage, artificial or otherwise, of product and prints is putting the smalltown exhib out of business at an alarming pace, Myrick contended. He said he has received a "flood of mail" from the membership attesting to Allied's beef that indie exhibs are finding it harder than ever to come by fresh product. Situation, Myrick added, is causing many theatres to stagger their runs past the point when a pic is still profitable, with attendant irritant that exhibitors and not the film companies are drawing public ire for tardy playoffs.

As convention kicked off, the schism between Eastern moderates and Western firebrands, partially healed with return of Western Pennsylvania to the fold, looked stalemated on the New England front. Myrick said he had "no indication" the Easterners were interested in returning.

Move Allied to Chi?

Chicago, Nov. 8.

Traditionally headquartered in Washington, where former general counsel Abram S. Myers had his law practice through the decades, Allied States Assn. will probably relocate in Chicago, as a central point and closer to grassroots. This coincides with the election of Jack Kirsch of the Illinois unit as national prez. (He held the job once before, in 1946-47).

Ben Marcus of Wisconsin, a salient personage, is also believed to favor Chi.

Meantime Allied has the door open for a hoped-return to membership of its sulking New England unit.

Cary Grant's Granart Productions has bought "The Day They Robbed the Bank," original screen treatment by tv writing team of Stan Dreben and Elroy Schwartz.

Builder of 1908 Hollywood Studios

[As Museum Consultant]

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Dr. Thomas Kimmwood Peters, film pioneer who built the first studio in Los Angeles in 1908, has been retained by the Hollywood Museum Associates to act as a consultant for the upcoming Hollywood Motion Picture & Television Museum.

Duties, according to Sol Lesser, prexy of the Associates, consist of aiding in framing the entire history of the projection of moving images from the discovery of persistence of vision down to the present widescreen innovations.

Peters, whose own collection of cinematic memorabilia is one of the largest in this country, first was associated with motion pictures in France, where in 1902 he worked for Pathe Freres in Paris. In 1908, he converted an old carbarn in downtown L. A. into a winter studio for the old Biograph Co., and it was here that D. W. Griffith directed Mary Pickford and Henry B. Walthall in "Romance of San Gabriel." Operation was some years prior to the first studio being set up in Hollywood by Jesse L. Lasky and Cecil B. DeMille in 1913 for "The Squaw Man."

Among the early companies with which he was affiliated were Selig, Thomas H. Ince, 101-Bison and D. W. Griffith. He was also associated with Hale's Tours.

Museum Associates was established to further the interests of the Hollywood Museum, raise funds for acquiring exhibits and to aid generally in its establishment.

DIRECTORS GUILD TO CHICAGO—OR DETROIT

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Possibility of Directors Guild of America setting up a Midwest office in either Chicago or Detroit, to work with DGA headquarters in Hollywood and N.Y., was reported by Joseph C. Youngerman, national exec secretray, upon his return from semi-annual national board meeting in Gotham.

Youngerman said that plan was given serious consideration at eastern session, which was devoted primarily to formulation of demands to be made in forthcoming negotiations with television networks.

Reissue Economics Always Tricky, Compounded By Selloff To Video

Motion Picture Investors Inc., exhibition-backed mutual fund whose aim is to acquire post-1948 features for reissue to theatres (and thus keep them off tv), is facing an increasingly tight theatrical reissue market as the result of the many post-1948s already on television.

Point made by several New York sales toppers is that reissue market, which always has been limited (except for a couple of notably long-lived films), is even more limited today because of the many comparatively new, double A films now available free on the home screen.

Opinions were expressed in connection with the revelation two weeks ago that MPI has acquired reissue rights to Allied Artists' "Friendly Persuasion" (1956) and "The Oklahoman" (1957).

While the details of the MPI-AA deal have not been disclosed, it's understood that MPI gets the films for a two-year period and AA gets a guarantee of "upwards of $100,000." Distribution of the two films will be handled by First Division Films, headed by industry vet Harry Thomas.

Why Not Do-It-Yourself?

Principal question asked by industryites, following news of the MPI-AA deal, was why AA signed the two films over to MPI if the distrib felt there was still theatrical coin to be earned by the films. One sales exec, recalling the success of Budd Rogers' Realart Co. with old Universal reissues, said that if there was any money to be made on "Friendly" and "Oklahoman," it could probably be most thoroughly realized by a concern devoted strictly to the problem.

Inevitably, said the exec, reissues will take second place to a major company's new product, when both old and new product are on the same release sked. Thus, he said, he felt that an operation devoted exclusively to getting the most out of reissues would do a better job than the original distrib.

Exec added that he himself had never been very high on reissues generally, and today is more skeptical than ever. He noted that every year there are one or two reissues which hit the big money—this year Paramount's "Samson and Delilah" brought in about $2,700,000 domestically and 20th-Fox's "David and Bathsheba" will probably earn more than $800,000 before it's played off—but most are disappointments, especially if much dough has been invested by way of new prints and a sizeable ad-pub campaign. Universal's "The Glenn Miller Story" tripped up the prognosticators by earning only about $250,000 after Sindlinger & Co. predicted a whopping $4,000,000 reissue gross. The $250,000 earnings are not bad, but they're a far cry from $4,000,000.

The few perrenially successful reissues, headed by the all-time winner, "Gone With The Wind," are far outnumbered by reissues which have hardly been worth the effort.

According to the sales exec cited above, reissue situation today is even more chancy than before, since the public in many parts of the country is getting some of the best post-1948s free on tv. In addition, he pointed out, many of the houses which used to subsist on a large number of reissues have gone out of existence. Many drive-ins are good customers for reissues, but these do not offset the subrun conventional houses now closed which previously provided a ready outlet for reissues.

Fill The Void

General feeling among exhibitors is that when distribs add reissues to their release skeds, their principal purpose is to pad out comparatively empty schedules. However, there has recently been a noticeable increase, particularly on west coast and in some parts of the east, in booking a good old film as a second feature on a double bill with a new A release, thus bypassing new B product. Whether this procedure alienates more customers than it attracts is a subject for debate.

It's interesting to note that while Motion Picture Investors and Allied were announcing their deal, both Paramount and Columbia were announcing plans for reissues on their own. Paramount is planning to send out "Roman Holiday" (1953) with "Detective Story" (1951), as well as "Elephant Walk" (1954) and "The Naked Jungle" (1954). Columbia is issuing "Picnic" (1955) and "The Caine Mutiny" (1954).

Asked a sales topper: "Why didn't Columbia and Paramount decide to go through MPI?"

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Edward Schreiber, breaking in as a producer after years in film promotion, stated this week that he hasn't encountered any significant problems yet and his picture, "Mad Dog Coll," has reached the half-way mark in shooting time schedule. The sked is four weeks, with five days on location and the rest in the Biltmore Studi situated in Manhattan's lower eastside.

What's it like to be a filmmaker? "Well," replied Schreiber, "it's like starting off with an empty box and then filling it." A lucky break along the way helps. One such was finding an appropriate site for a floating crap game which, according to the script, takes place in the cellar of a Manhattan building.

In touring the Biltmore edifice, said Schreiber, he found the attic to be particularly appropriate for the cellar scene. Before its conversion the Biltmore was the area's centre for Bar Mitzvahs and weddings.

"Coll" has John Chandler, Kay Doubleday and Brooke Hayward in the leads, with Burt Balaban directing.

Schreiber and Columbia reps were hesitant about discussing budget but upon persistent interrogation they all agreed: "it's under $500,000. Col is financing and distributing.

Unusual fillip to the routine of literary prizes awarded each year in Italy and other countries is one devised by producer Dino DeLaurentiis. Latter has just announced that the winner of the Augusto Borselli Literary Award ($1,500 to the novel published in past year which best suits filmic adaptation needs) will at the same time be guaranteed another $7,500 in cash as well as production of his work by the DeLaurentiis organization.

DeLaurentiis started the literary kudo this year to commemorate the late Augusto Borselli, his onetime press chief and right hand man, who died last year in a motor car accident. Borselli prize this year went to two writers, Carlo Bernari and Giovanni Arpino, respectively for "Bitter Love" and "The Young Nun." A special mention and Gold Medal was given C. M. Franzero for his "Oscar Wilde." Ceremony took place at DeLaurentiis' Palatino Studi

In the first of a three-part series on "the new Negro on screen" In the Progressive, Martin S. Dworkin indicates that the films of the 1950s "reveal a willingness—or, at least a readiness—to picture and to accept the Negro as a figure of strength, decency, or even a wishfully superior attainment."

Dworkin distinguishes this trend from the previous "sporadic bursts of pro-Negro sentiment . . ." The new development, he feels, is marked by a "growing realism in depicting colored people—and most significantly a heightening dramatic stature." Hollywood's postwar interest in racial films, the writer contends, stemmed from "the ferment of attitudes of the wars years . . . Although Stanley Kramer's "Home of the Brave," was not the first film dealing with the Negro theme, Dworkin cites it as one of the first of "the new order."

Julian Roffman, who directed "This Bloody Brood" for his and Ralph Foster's Meridian Films of Toronto (now Beaver Films, with N. A. Taylor partnered), is burning at Hollywood Production Code's refusal of a seal. He thinks it'll still play the U. S., though, noting that "Moon Is Blue" and "Hiroshima, Mon Amour" did O.K. without the seal. AA was set to distribute the beatnik film, contingent upon a seal.

"I saw 'The Beat Generation' the other day," said Roffman. "It had a guy who rapes the pregnant wife of a detective Our movie doesn't do anything like that. Ours is a pure film!"

"This Bloody Brood" played Toronto and Ottawa several months ago, sans protest.

William Thiele, ex-German pic director returned from Hollywood, has in CCC's "Sabine and Her 100 Men" his first Berlin directorial assignment after 28 years. His last German film, before his emigration, was "Private Secretary" which starred the late Renate Mueller. His most successful German film was undoubtedly "Three From the Filling-Station" (1930) whose cast included such names as Lilian Harvey, Willy Fritsch, Heinz Ruehmann and the late Oscar Karlweis.

Nathan Leopold

has too long let itself be "blackmailed" into buying various "real life" property rights that, in effect, were in the public domain anyway. Companies, he said, have generally paid off in the past for two reasons: (1) they felt that the person involved deserved some payment for services rendered (though, perhaps, rendered unintentionally), and (2) to protect themselves against injunctions which could hold up the release of the film in question.

According to London, in situations involving personalities famous for one reason or another, there is no privacy to be invaded, either in, say, the publication of an unauthorized biography or in the fictionalized screen account of that personality, as long as no libel is committed, or the subject is not held up to ridicule which, by chance, he/she may not already have earned. An attempt to stop the publication of a truthful biography, or screen treatment of a well known person, the attorney says, is actually an attempt to abridge the same freedom of speech and communication guaranteed newspapers covering a current event.

Conceivably, should London win the precedent he is seeking, film companies could pursue real life stories with a much clearer hand than is now possible, though, of course, they'd have to watch their accuracy as carefully as before. Attorney's one gnawing fear anent the Leopold case is that defendants might win it on grounds that would not be so precedent-making: that is, on grounds that a man cannot benefit from his own crimes. This, clearly, would be the situation should the court uphold Leopold and decide that he can actually "sell" the story rights to a murder for which he was convicted in a court of law.

Should London eventually win the broader precedent he is seeking, the decision would automatically throw out some other suits which have been brought against film companies by heirs of notorious persons who have sought to establish their rights to control the life stories of deceased persons. Idea used by these plaintiffs is that such a story is as much an "inheritable" property as a quaint old family portrait, and usually much more valuable.

Cogsdale to Wilby

Greensboro, N. C., Nov. 8.
Greensboro, N. Y., Nov. 8.

Al Cogsdale, veteran theatreman in this area, has joined the Wilby-Kincey Circuit as manager of the National Theatre here. He succeeds Bob Stroh, who has been shifted to Bluefield, W. Va., as city manager.

Cogsdale had been a year in Roanoke and 10 years in Nofolk with other theatre companies.

Betty Furness and Westinghouse Calling It Quits After 11 Years

Betty Furness and Westinghouse called it quits this morning (Wed.) after 11 years, ending one of the longest-running commercial relationships in television. Miss Furness' contract terminated officially at midnight last night (Tues.) but naturally she stayed on as the official Westinghouse spieler for the full run of the company's CBS-TV election coverage into the small hours.

Miss Furness and Westinghouse got together originally in the fall of 1949, when she became the company's spokeswoman on "Studio One" on CBS. Subsequently, she assumed the same role in Westinghouse's quadrennial convention-election coverage. When "Studio One" ran out of steam in 1958, she switched with the sponsor over to "Desilu Playhouse." She won't be around for the company's latest acquisition, the Nanette Fabray show, which starts on NBC in January. Thus, her total identification with Westinghouse will have been on NBC.

Her contract ran a year at a time, and although Miss Furness wanted to call it a day in the past, Westinghouse kept offering renewals and she kept accepting. This year, she summoned up "enough nerve" to say no to the latest Westinghouse offer, reportedly a substantial one. Though doing occasional dramatic and guest shots in the past, she felt restricted by the association.

Miss Furness' agents, Ashley-Steiner, are working on an interview show for her, and are also arranging for dramatic roles on a one-shot basis. Parting from Westinghouse isn't complete—she'll become a consultant to the company on their consumer products, offering advice on design, marketing, etc., as they concern housewife reactions.

Things Looking Up For 'CBS Reports' In PM Ciggie Buy

"CBS Reports" is now sold out through the end of the year, with Philip Morris moving in to pick up the next three Fred Friendly specials. Philip Morris picked up the first two, one at a time.

Buy was made per the "no peeking" policy set down by Friendly and CBS-TV on the specials, with the ciggie outfit being advised on the subject matter of the three shows but not being allowed a look at scripts or footage. Leo Burnett was the agency, though negotiations were held primarily with execs of the sponsor itself.

Trio to be sponsored by PM are "Harvest of Shame," an expose of migratory farm workers' living and working conditions, on Nov. 25; "Rescue—With Yul Brynner," a filmed around-the-world trip by Brynner on behalf of the United Nations International Refugee Organizations, on Dec. 10; and "The Great Holiday Massacre," previously titled "The Great Labor Day Massacre of 1960," for Dec. 29. Latter is timed for the New Year's holiday and consists of auto accident footage filmed during the Labor Day weekend at key traffic points throughout the U.S.

The Friendly-Ed Murrow special on Quemoy and Matsu, on which Murrow flies out to the Far East later this week, has been scheduled as a January "Reports."

Decision of PM to buy additional "Reports" without the benefit of advance screening indicates a major breakthrough for Friendly and Murrow. Attitude of Philip Morris was reported to be, "If we're going to sponsor mature programming, we might as well act like men about it."

Borden's 'Kangaroo' Coin

Borden Co. has purchased an every-week quarter-hour sponsorship of the Saturday edition of CBS-TV's "Captain Kangaroo."

WBBM-TV Breaks Ice on Editorials

Chicago, Nov. 8.

WBBM-TV aired Chi's first video editorial last Sunday (6), endorsing the referendum for a proposed multi-million dollar bond issue which would provide for additional educational facilities at the various state university campuses in Illinois. While it was a fairly safe issue for the station to take a side in, the editorial performed a particular service—only 30 hours before the polls opened—by stressing the point that no vote on the referendum would count as a vote against it.

Program had a choice timeslot, deferring the feature film at 10:15 p.m., and lasted approximately 20 minutes. Station had shot some documentary film footage to illustrate both sides of the argument, and then WBBM-TV veep-general manager Clark George capped it with the station's stand, in the affirmative. It's understood station has another editorial in the hopper for later this month.

Several radio stations have been doing editorials here for over a year, the notable ones being CBS' WBBM and Westinghouse's WIND. Len O'Connor's 10-minute comments nightly on both WMAQ are probably more like bonafide editorials than anything that has been voiced electronically in Chi so far, but the point is made very clearly that the opinions are his own. Technically, WBBM-TV broke the ice last Sunday, so far as Windy City tv is concerned.

Gen. Foods Purchases Gertrude Berg Series

General Foods has bought Four Stars' "Mother Was a Freshman," the new Gertrude Berg telefilm situationer peddled by William Morris.

Half-hour would be for the '61-'62 season, it's understood, although it probably could get on the air earlier if GF decides to cancel any of its several current network programs.

16 MORE WARD BOND 'WAGON' SEGS IN CAN

NBC-TV says it has 16 unused segments of "Wagon Train" in the can, and the late Ward Bond appears in all of them. This, according to the network, is enough to carry the 60-minute telefilm stanza (counting repeats)) through the rest of this season.

Bond, star of "Wagon Train," carried in a 7:30 p.m. slot on Wednesdays, died last week of a heart attack while making a personal appearance tour.

Susskind Retaining DuPont TV Specials; 'Harvey' Repeat Set

DuPont and BBDO have apparently abandoned their efforts to find a producer to take on two or three of their CBS-TV "Show of the Month" specials and will stick with David Susskind's Talent Associates as per original agreement. However, this arrangement called for TA to produce six out of the seven specials this year, and the sponsor and agency are filling in the seventh with a repeat of "Harvey" on Dec. 13 on CBS-TV.

"Harvey" will mark the first repeat used by duPont on "Show of the Month" since the series took to the air. Originally produced by Talent Associates in September of 1958, it starred Art Carney in the Elwood P. Dowd role created on Broadway by Frank Faye.

CBS-TV okayed the "Harvey" repeat on the basis that it was an outstanding show when done, and also fills the bill as a Christmas show. But the web is warning duPont that it has no intention of preempting programs in order to televise repeats in the future, the sponsor's difficulties in securing properti notwithstanding. Apparently duPont and TA haven't been able to agree on enough future properties to fill out the season's bill.

Philly's 'Missing I'

Philadelphia, Nov. 8.

Radio station WIP has turned up with a unique promotion involving the missing "I" from its call letters. For one week, station execs have been broadcasting the fiction that the middle call letter had been stolen, leaving the station to be identified as "W-P."

All announcers and station jingles stress the omitted call letter, the only exceptions being twice an hour when the official station identification is given. For these, the station avers that it is borrowing "I's" from the FBI, "The King and I" and listeners who call in ready to surrender the errant letter.

Clues leading to the identity of the culprit, who made off with the station's I, are aired throughout the day on W-P, and the station has offered a $500 reward to the listener who locates the thief.

In addition to the on-the-air promotion, the theft received full-page newspapers ads and carrying through with the legend the station's billboard and buss cards had the "I" missing, as did the street sign at the studio's entrance.

As TV Goes, So Goes the Economy

Since advertising is an unwilling reflector of economic conditions in the United States, observers have been viewing carefully the past few weeks what has been happening in television.

If not soft, the television spot market has certainly not been bullish. Syndication, which depends on spot tv expenditures is a partial indication of this faintness. And there really doesn't seem to be enough coin to go around among all the three networks, at least to the degree that NBC is not filled up during prime time in the first and second quarters of '61 and that, save for CBS, the daytime web picture—like spot tv—is not as bullish as ABC and NBC could hope for.

In part, naturally, the ABC-NBC daytime flaccidness is due to the recent advent of a three-network daytime economy, but the question is being asked: "Does it stop there?

There has been talk of recession on Wall St. As always, the science of economic trends is admittedly not terribly scientific, but one thing obtains: More "experts" seem to think the U.S. is entering a period of economic backsliding than thei that think otherwise.

Since '59, spot has held generally the same level of activity. Previously, there had been an increase, one year over the next.

Syndicators, with an exception of one or two, have been feeling the bite. The big regional deals aren't flowing in, and the local sponsors are fighting harder than ever to keep charges for half-hour telefilm series down.

It's a far cry from the 24-city Multi-City Nielsen ratings to the National Nielsen pocketpiece covering the same periods, particularly this year when the pocketpiece is using a national basis for its rating calculations instead of the old station-index technique which took into consideration station clearance for each program.

When Nielsen released the 24-city report for the week, ended Oct. 16, it gave ABC virtually undisputed leadership among the three networks. But this week, the Nielsen National pocketpiece is out covering the two weeks ended Oct. 16, and the comparison of the single-week nationals with the 24-city report finds ABC's position more subdued.

The comparative breakdown shows the following differences between the 24-city and the national reports for the same week:

1. Average audience and share. The 24-city report gave ABC 19.2 with a 33.7 share; the national report gives it 17.2 and a 30.0% share. CBS had 17.6 and 30.8% share in the multi-city; in the national it forges ahead with 18.7 and 32.5% share. NBC gets 15.6 and 27.3% in the multi-city; in the national it goes up to 16.7 and 29.0%.

2. Half-hour wins. Multi-city gives ABC 25 half-hour wins, CBS 18 and NBC six. But the national Nielsen reverses this, giving CBS 24, ABC 19 and NBC six.

3. Top 15. Multi-city gives ABC eight out of the Top 15, CBS five and NBC two. National gives CBS 10, ABC three and NBC two.

4. Nights of the week. Multi-city gives ABC four, NBC two and CBS one. National gives ABC three and NBC and CBS two each.

5. New shows. Multi-city found seven of ABC's new shows running first in their time periods. National finds this true in only four of the cases.

All of which points up the dan-

This Time Revlon Ain't Kidding On Belafonte Plugs

Revlon, which got cheers from the press and public over its handling of commercials on the Harry Belafonte CBS-TV special last year, is going to the other extreme this outing, with Belafonte and director Norman Jewison currently at odds over the number and placement of commercials for the Nov. 20 hour.

Last year, Revlon used only two commercials on the show, which marked Belefonte's first one-man stanza on tv. It placed one three-minute blurb at the beginning and one at the end, with no middle break, and it won wide praise for the move.

This year, however, the cosmetic house swung to the opposite extreme, insisting on six one-minute commercials spaced throughout the show. Belafonte and Jewison raised cain, and managed to bring Revlon down to four commercials, two of one minute each and two-minute blurbs, with probable placement involving opening and closing blurbs plus two commercial breaks. Belafonte and Jewison would like Revlon to come down to three blurbs in all for the hour, but so far it stands at four with little likelihood of change.

Belafonte— and CBS—can't figure out the Revlon thinking, particularly in light of the good public relations that emerged from last year's handling. Agency is the same on the show, Grey Advertising, and Revlon's still looking for that favorable image. Only thing they can figure is that there are some new top-level execs in the Revlon setup, and they're responsible for the new approach.

NBC Inauguration Sale

Day before elections, Purex bought the entire Inauguration Day package from NBC-TV.

Soviet 5-Yr. Plan On TV Expansion

Washington, Nov. 8.

Within the next five years, Russia expects to increase its number of television sets in operation by five times and boost the number of tv stations by more than twice.

The Commerce Dept. has translated an article in the Soviet magazine, Literature and Life, by Professor P. Shmakov, which states that there will be 15,000,000 tv sets in Russia by 1965, compared to 3,000,000 now, and 160 tv stations, against 70 now.

Other predictions by the U.S.S.R. professor:

New studios added to the three already in Moscow and a tower 510 meters high in Ostankin will increase broadcasting power. One of the Moscow stations will be equipped to telecast in color.

Leningrad will also have three stations by 1965.

Expansion of network relay posts and other facilities for broader coverage.

SECRET INGREDIENT IS MONEY

Soapers Wash Out Danny's Nielsen

One of the more intriguing—and possibly eyebrow-raising—aspects of the first National Nielsens of the new season which were posted over the weekend, concerns the expensive NBC-TV foray into the Danny Thomas situation comedy reruns. The network plunked down some $7,000,000 for the privilege of running the Thomas half-hour filmed se ments in a determined bid to put an end to the competing soap opera supremacy on CBS-TV.

For that kind of money NBC will be permitted to replay the Thomas episodes four times, but it's obvious that, in terms of audience pull, the major reliance is on the first time around for the afternoon reruns. If it doesn't make it then, the chances are slim that the second, third and fourth time will improve.

Yet the National Nielsens find the soaps still all-powerful, with the brace of CBS entries, "Secret Storm" and "Brighter Day" running out in front. The score: Thomas—5.7; "Secret Storm"—7.7; "Brighter Day"—6.7.

The Nielsen Top 10 daytime, in fact puts six of the CBS soaps on the honor roll, with the Top Five coming out of that category—"As the World Turns," "Guiding Light," "Secret Storm," "Edge of Night" and "Search for Tomorrow."

Authors Making a Career Out Of Those 'Peter Pan' TV Reprises

By the end of 1960, the authors of "Peter Pan" will have received together a minimum of $120,000 in payments from tv. Depending on how the dollars for the composers and writers are cut, it could actually end up being $150,000, with at least another $20,000 to $25,000 in sight.

All this is top of the show's legit theatre earnings.

They'll collect $17,500 apiece when NBC-TV televises the new classic for the third time on Dec. 8. For the first showing several years ago, they each got $7,500 and for the second $5,000—a total of $12,500 apiece.

The third payment a record in tv for authorship, reaching to a minimum of $70,000. It could go as high as $85,000, depending on whether Betty Comden and Adolph Green, who produced additional lyrics, are being counted as a team or as individuals. As a team they'd split one individual fee, and as individuals each comes in for $17,500 before the end of the year.

However, Moose Charlop, who did the "Pan" music, Carolyn Leigh, who did the lyrics, and Jule Styne, who wrote additional music each definitely receives the full $17,500.

Technically, the third telecast, Dec. 8, consisting of an entirely tape production by NBC-TV, only pays the composers and writers $7,500 apiece (same as the first telecast), but, for the right to options on another two repeats, the netw rk has to kick u $10,000 more to each — whether or not there ever are fourth and fifth showings of "Pan."

Should there ever be a sixth showing — regardless when — each of the writers and composers will get another $5,000.

McCollough's CBS Defection for NBC

CBS-TV lost a major outlet for its election coverage last night (Tues.), with Clair McCollough switching his WGAL-TV in Lancaster, Pa., over to the NBC-TV election night feed. WGAL-TV had carried CBS-TV convention coverage in July and Columbia's "Presidential Countdow during the campaign, both part of the CBS-Westinghouse political package.

Loss of WGAL-TV was a bitter one for CBS-TV, since it's the only VHF outlet in the Lancaster-Harrisburg area in southern Pennsylvania, and also because the station initially had committed for the entire Westinghouse package on CBS, including election night.

WGAL-TV, as the only V in its coverage area, carries shows from all three networks. Switch from CBS to NBC on elections came early last week, when it notified CBS-TV that (1) it had learned confidentially that NBC planned to

STAR & PRODUCT WINNING PARLEY

By GEORGE ROSEN

There's more than one way to skin a Madison Ave. cat, and NBC-TV has come up with a unique new sales formula in the area of specials which could well spark a trend toward inviting additional millions into network coffers.

Whereas in the past specials have been sold in wholes, halves, thirds and even quarters, the Nov. 18 Dave Garroway prime time (9 to 10 p.m.) special, "Dave's Place," has been sold to five sponsors (actually six one-minute participations, with Elgin Watch having a minute in each half-hour). This marks the first time that a major special has been sold on a participation basis. (Other clients are American Luggage Works, Retail Clerks International Assn., Electric Autolite, Berkshire Hosiery—all regular Garroway "Today" sponsors and each shelling out $37,500 for the one-minute plugs.)

Intriguing aspect (for the sponsor) of this new foray into participating specials, which opens up whole new vistas in nighttime sales, is the linking of the star with the commercial. The response to the "Dave's Place" sell was so immediate and enthusiastic that NBC has already negotiated for two and possibly three more Garroway specials in the late winter and spring, in addition to a Jack Paar prime special under similar participation auspices. Latter has already been earmarked for Tuesday, Jan. 31, and will be dubbed "The Square World of Jack Paar." While the $37,500 per minute participation in the Nov. 18 Garroway special is not intended as a precedent for subsequent entries, NBC intends to keep them under $40,000.

There are a whole flock of major tv stars with built-in sponsors lure who, like Garroway and Paar, enjoy the unique talent of identifying themselves with the product and even doing the hard sell, without impairing their impact as tv personalities. CBS, for example, could easily integrate an Arthur

Run For the Hills, Boys, The National Nielsens Are In; NBC Is Breathing Down CBS' Neck

ABC's Nifty Audience

ABC-TV is doing plenty of chest thumping at the way the new National Nielsens project the network's major audience increase in contrast to the Nielsen samplings of a year ago.

For example, the newest breakdown shows ABC reaching 1,200,000 more homes-per-minute compared to last October whereas there's a 1,300,000 decline in the CBS-TV figure. NBC's homes-per-minute is about the same as '59.

ABC's '60 figure is 8,362,000 homes, compared to 7,196,000 last year; the CBS '60 figure is 8,630,000 compared to 9,970,000 in '59; NBC's is 8,400,000 compared to 8,300,000 last year.

First National Nielsen report covering virtually all the seasonal premieres — report for the two weeks ended Oct. 16—is now in the books, and it finds CBS-TV still out in front in virtually every measurement category, but with its lead reduced from last season and from the earlier Nielsen report.

Strangely, in the average audience breakdown for the two weeks, it is not ABC but NBC which is on Columbia's heels. Phenomenon is explained by a Bob Hope special, an Eleanor Roosevelt special and a "Great Debate" in which NBC took audience honors all in the Oct. 3-9 week. Extent to which this influenced the ratings is indicated by fact that the two-week NBC average audience average was 17.7, while its average for the second Oct. 10-16 week alone was 16.7.

What with the debates, specials, elections, et al., the experts still feel that the patterns won't shake down into anything recognizable until the next Nielsen or even the one after. But as far as this one is concerned, here are the highlights:

1. Average audience. CBS is out in front, with a 17.9 AA average for the two weeks. NBC is right behind at 17.7. ABC is last with 16.8. Averages cover seven nights, 6-11 p.m.

2. Top 10 (see separate box for listing). CBS wins four spots, ABC and NBC three each. On the Top 15, it's CBS seven, NBC five and ABC three. In the Top 20, it's CBS 10, NBC six and ABC four.

3. Half-hour wins. In the 49 half-hours between 7:30 and 11, CBS takes 19, ABC 16 and NBC 14.

4. Nights of the week. ABC takes honors here, with three to two each for CBS and NBC. ABC wins Monday, Thursday and Friday, on the basis of average audience. NBC takes Tuesday by a whisker and Wednesday by a mile, and CBS walks off with Saturday and Sunday.

5. New shows. Running an average on new show ratings and shares, CBS is on top with a 17.0 rating and 28.3% share as an aver-

For CBS, Sat. Nite Is the Loveliest Nite of the Week

By the looks of the new Nielsens, Saturday nights are shaping up as the most intriguing night of the week. On the face of it, it looks like an alltime runaway for CBS-TV, what with its lowest-rated show in the 13th spot on the national Nielsen rankings with a 23.5 rating.

But NBC is doing unexpectedly well, at least up until 9:30, when it throws in the competitive sponge and goes public affairs. For its four shows rank 14th, 15th and 34th on the Nielsens, a healthy showing, with a 7:30-9:30 low of

CBS Frustration On Thurs. Shifts

CBS-TV's hopes for a Thursday night "jiggle" to spring "Witness" from its 7:30-8:30 timeslot into a later hour has fizzled. "Witness" will stay put, and by the looks of the current rating picture, will be dropped after 13 weeks unless another slot opens some other night or a dramatic change occurs in its audience pull. Latest National Nielsen for the two weeks ended Oct. 16 gives it a 9.4 rating and 16.9% share of audience.

The Thursday "plot" fell apart when the network couldn't get past sponsor difficulties in making the changes. These envisioned moving "Angel" and "Ann Sothern" to earlier spots to make way for "Witness," or as an alternative, "Ann Sothern" and "Person to Person."

Although CBS-TV had figured on problems with General Foods, major difficulties came from Johnson's Wax, which with alternate-sponsorship of three half-hour shows in a row ("Zane Grey" at 8:30, "Angel" at 9 and "Ann Sothern" at 10 was highly reluctant to make any changes at this point. GF was milder in its approach. Also, though "Witness" sponsor R. J. Reynolds wanted the move to a later time, the other sponsors on the show, Helene Curtis, Esquire and Schick, weren't quite so sure about the efficacy of a move.

Around the Syndie World In 180 Days: CNP's Hot 6 Months

Perhaps the only unequivocally bright location in the field of syndicated film selling these days is the 5th Ave. headquarters of California National Productions in N.Y. While other syndicators are having a neutral to drab selling season, the NBC tv film subsidiary in the past 180 days has been seen more business written on its new properties than ever before in a comparable six-month period.

CNP currently has on the market three half-hour series, "Royal Canadian Mounted Police," "Blue Angels" and "Jim Backus Show," "Angels" was released in June and "Backus" in July, and already both have gone substantially over their production nuts in sales. The NBC subsid, having picked up U.S. rights to "RCMP" for less, of course, than it'd cost to produce the show itself, has already covered the payment to the Canadian producers.

And a fourth show, consisting of a group of 130 eight-minute shorts, with Cliff Norton added for flavor, has almost covered its cost, yet, for all practical purposes, the stanzas won't be on the general tv market for many months. The relatively inexpensive show, "Funny Manns," is using old Mack Sennett stuff among other items, and was sold recently in Japan for $500 per eight-minute episode. That's $500 significant, because that's the absolute top price Japan pays for the importation of a half-hour stanza. Added to this are some domestic major markets sales, including one to WABC-TV, in N.Y., where the ABC flag picked up "Manns" in its early stages of production.

Al Stern, chairman of CNP and its acting president Earl Rettig has departed), is said to have been responsible for the "Manns" coup. And he's now planning, with veep-general manager Herb Schlosser and new program veep Carl Lindemann, five to six new pilots for the

Initial Sales On WB's Post-'50s Fetches $500,000

First sales of the new post-'50 Warner Bros. package of 40 pix have grossed about $500,000 in eight markets, according to Seven Arts Associated sales v.p. Bob Rich.

The 40-pix group was sold in the following markets: KSD, St. Louis; WWLP, Springfield, Mass.-Hartford, Conn.; WBEN, Buffalo; KONO, San Antonio; WOC, Davenport; WTVH, Peoria; WTVP, Decatur; and WTVT, Tampa-St. Petersburg.

Rich said he expects deals in N.Y., Chicago, Los Angeles, Baltimore and Milwaukee. Understood Seven Arts is seeking about $30,000 per pic in N.Y.; $25,000 in Los Angeles and somewhat under $25,000 in Chicago. Sought after price, though, always is a matter of negotiations.

Initial deals capped three weeks of selling in the field. Interestingly, deals to date do not cover the major markets. Competitive situation, as predicted, helped trigger sales in St. Louis and Buffalo, where competing stations already bought National Telefilm Associates "61 for '61" package.

Pix in the group includ "High and the Mighty," John Wayne, Robert Stack; "Rebel Without a Cause," James Dean; "Hondo," John Wayne, Geraldine Page; "Star Is Born," Judy Garland, James Mason; and Alfred Hitchcock's "Stranger on a Trai "

Deal with WWLP, Springfield, also encompasses WRLP, Brattleboro, Vt., opetrated by the sar owners. Springfield Television Broadcasting Corp.

Schwimmer Swap On Bowling, Golf

Chicago, Nov. 8.

It has just come to light, although the deal was made some time ago, that Glen Films has traded Walt Schwimmer the complete rights to "Championship Bowling" for his lifetime contract as distributor of "All Star Golf." Glen Films, a West Coast company whose principals are Henry Saperstein, Jack Wrather and Monte Livingston, purchased the two film series from Peter DeMet nearly three years ago for a sum reportedly in excess of $2,500,000. Schwimmer's lifetime distributor contract went with the deal.

In the separation effected recently, Schwimmer gets full ownership of "Bowling," a total of 185 episodes produced over the past seven years; and Saperstein's company gets to pocket the commissions that previously went to Schwimmer for the ABC-TV "Golf" series.

As for DeMet, his filming company remains under lifetime contract to shoot both shows.

Cinemagic's First 13 On 'Hound for Hire'

First 13 units of Cinemagic International's new cartoon series "Hound for Hire" have been completed. Cinemag prexy Arthur Epstein and Phil Davis, v.p. and producer-director of the series, are in Paris to start production of the next group of 13 segments to be completed by February.

Some 55 episodes, running seven and a half minutes, are being readied for theatrical and tv distribution here and abroad. Producer-director Davis for 15 years had been head writer and chief idea man for Ralph Edwards Productions. He also has writing credits for such shows as Danny Thomas and "Father Knows Best."

Arthur Epstein is prexy of Fine Arts Films which released last year's Academy Award-winning Japanese film "Samurai."

Despite $5,000,000 Sales, Goldwyn Changes His Mind on Pix-Into-TV

Sam Goldwyn has again "withdrawn" his features from sale to tv. It's not a formal withdrawal per se, according to Rod Erickson, who's been repping the Goldwyn library—it's simply that Goldwyn has decided the coin available for his pix isn't tall enough for him to let them go.

Erickson, who this week joined Filmways as prexy (see separate story), said that he had received written bids for the Goldwyn backlog totaling some $5,000,000 from stations in the U.S. and abroad. But when he presented the bids to Goldwyn, the producer refused to consider them and at the same time wouldn't make known his own price requirements.

Deal under which Erickson reps the library has no cutoff date, but for the time being there's no action on the films as a result of Goldwyn's latest reaction, save for some continuing advertiser interest in the use of a few selected pix as possible network specials.

Erickson's not the only exec who's had a tough time getting a definite commitment from Goldwyn, who's been running hot and cold on releasing his pix to tv, first encouraging inquiries and the deciding to hold back.

Jules Weil's Post-'48s

Jules Weil, distributor of theatrical pictures for tv, has acquired from Paramount 22 post-'48 features produced by Pine and Thomas. Amount involved said to be $2,000,000.

Bill Thomas and Howard Pine will be partnered in the distribution with Weil.

UAA Melo-O-Toon Gets Toledo Test

In order to hypo its sales ammunition, United Artists Associated took the unusual path of buying time in test market of Toledo, to sample its recently acquired Mel-O-Toons cartoons.

In mailings and on-the-air, it asked viewers to write-in, commenting on the two Mel-O-Toons shown Oct. 27, on WSPD-TV. The viewer response numbered over 400, virtually all commenting favorable on the two cartoons shown, "Rumplestiltskin" and "Waltz of the Flowers." Many replies came from kids in the 12 to 14 age bracket. Many parents compared the Mel-O-Toons favorable to what they called the usual violence in kiddie programming. Mel-O-Toons episodes are based on best-selling kiddie records.

Viewer response will be used by UAA for its sales pitches throughout the country.

National Telepix Sales On 'Our Gang' 2-Reelers

National Telepix package of 78 "Our Gang" two-reelers retitled "Mischief Makers" produced by Hal Roach in the 'ply '20's are now running in five m rkets, including New York (WOR-TV).

Other markets are KHJ-TV, Los Angeles; WBKB, Chicago; CKLW, Detroit; nd WBEN, Buffalo.

The package of silents, which went into distribution a month ago, relies on physical humor and sight gags. Nothing but a lively m sical score has been added.

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Top personalities will appear in the religioso series, "The Hour of St. Francis," distributed to stations throughout the country.

HUSTON TO TRANSFILM

William Huston, formerly director of international sales at Filmways, has joined Transfilm-Caravel as veepee in charge of commercial sales.

Before Filmways, Huston was for three years with MPO as sales and promotion manager, and before that with Screen Gems as sales manager for tv commercials.

Then & Now

Detroit, Nov. 8.

ABC-TV affil WXYZ, which bought a large Screen Gems pix package, has found that many of the players in the pix are very much in evidence on ABC-TV's vidfilm present-day network shows.

The rundown follow this sequence: star, feature, year of the feature, and current vidfilm series:

Robert Stack, "A Little Bit of Heaven," '40, "Untouchables"; William Frawley, "Ex-Champ," '39, My Three Sons"; Pat O'Brien, "Air Mail," '32, "Harrigan & Son"; Fred MacMurray, "Singapore," '47, "My Three Sons"; Ozzie Nelson, "Hi Good Lookin'," '44, "Ozzi & Harriet"; Robert Cummings, "Flesh & Fantasy," '43, "Love That Bob"; Walter Brennan, "Nice Girl," "The Real McCoys."

Deal with Screen Gems was for 450 pix, initially released either by Columbia Pictures or Universal-International. Some of the pix are post-'48's. SG's deal, capping a buying campaign to lift programming quality on the ABC-TV affil, was said to be over $500,000.

RCA Picks Up Tint Tab on Features

RCA, in an extra color push of wide significance to distributors of features-to-tv, has made a deal underwriting the extra cost of color prints of cinematics to tv stations. The deal was made with Programs for Television, Inc., the outfit distributing the J. Arthur Rank pix. Of the 38 pi in the recent bundle, 50% of them are i color.

Under the RCA-PTI working arrangement, according to sales topper Michael Sillerman, station wanting to colorcast has the extra print cost picked up by RCA, via the local RCA distributor. The extra cost can range from $3,000 to $15,000, according to the size of the market. PTI has run off special-for-tv color prints and has found the color factor a big plus in sales. The Rank pix have been sold in 38 markets, grossing a little over $1,000,000. Under PTI's deal with Rank, PTI guarantees $1,000,000 for the bundle.

Programs for Television, Inc., (PTI), off to a solid start with post-'50 J. Arthur Rank pix group, has two new syndie series out in the market and others on the planning boards.

Sales v.p. Michael (Mickey) Sillerman, a vet in the syndie biz, feels PTI eventually will establish a niche for itself comparable to Television Programs of America. In today's market, highly competitive and tough, Sillerman feels the best route for an outfit such as his is the "offbeat approach."

In line with the get-away-from-formula approach, PTI on the regional and network level now is discussing Rocky Marciano's hosted "Main Event." ies of 39 episodes features guestars Jerry Lewis, Bob Hope, William Bendix, Frank Sinatra, Dean Martin, Rock Hudson and Tallulah Bankhead. Body of episodes contains highlights of post-'50 Madison Square Garden fight events.

Another property currently in the regional hopper is "Art Linkletter and The Kids," a series of 15-minute vidfilm shows, 13 of which have previously networked with the remainder new to tv.

On the planning boards are three cartoon shows and a pubaffairs half-hour

PTI Sillerman stated, will stick to offbeat entries until there's a greater degree of stabilization in the syndie field. At this stage, he feels it would be wrong for a new mpany such as his to come out with another private eye, western, or traditional syndie property.

The off-beat approach to properties also permeates the selling staff, exec members of which have been granted profit participation in PTI. Outfit now has a selling staff of 10 men, scattered around the country, with the following divisional execs, Walt Plant, midwest; Wade Crosby, west coast; Alton Whitehouse, southwest; Spike Coburn, southwest; John Leo, and Ben Colman.

Rapp & Jordan's 10-Year Leasing Of Calif. Studios

Phil Rapp, with the backing of a financial group headed by Fred Jordan, is in the last stages of a negotiation to take over Phil Krasne's California Studios, in Hollywood. Principals met in New York last week, and a spokesman for them said that it would probably be the end of next week before all the details are worked out.

Rapp is expected to pay in the vicinity of $500,000 to Krasne for the studio equipment. Pricing the material is what is mostly holding up a signing.

Beyond this, Papp and Jordan seek a 10-year leasing arrangement with Clune Memorial Trust, which controls the California Studios property. This would mean that they ar adding five-years on the lease time remaining in Krasne's arrangement with Clune.

Dr. Villem Zwillinger, a long-time friend of Krasne and his ex-partner, Jack Gross, has been aiding Krasne in closing the sellof. Jordan has backed Rapp in the making of various tv film pilots.

ITC STRENGTHENS ITS 20TH-FOX TIES

A growing bond exists between Independent Television Corp. and 20th-Fox.

Most recent liaison finds ITC acquiring 20th-Fox's "Broken Arrow" for international distributi . The off-network entry had a day-time and nighttime slot on ABC-TV. Prior to the ITC deal, it was thought that 20th-Fox might use "Broken Arrow," as of its properties when the motion picture company gets into the syndie biz. However, with "Arrow" going to ITC, it looks longer than expected before 20th-Fox spreads its syndie wings.

Another interesting facet of the deal is that the growing ITC liaison might dampen the tie between 20th-Fox and National Telefilm Associates. Prior to ITC coming into the picture, NTA and 20th-Fox had quite a romance going, both in the half-hour and feature field. Now, it seems the romance for all practical purposes confined to features.

ITC also has a deal with 20th-Fox for the coproduction of series for network airing.

8 for '61-'62 On Screen Gems List

Screen Gems is off to a running start for the '61-'62 season, inking eight coproduction deals with networks and advertisers. The coproduction deals call for financing, in varying degrees, of pilot projects.

National sales v.p. John Mitchell's scorecard at this early date runs three coproductions with advertisers and five with networks. Above and beyond present and future coproduction agreements, SG will come into the market with pilots for next season, uncommitted to anyone. The tally of eight at this date in all probability leads the national selling field for next

TRIBULATIONS OF BIG THREE

TV Cross-Breeds a Special

A unique one-hour special, combining all the characters in "Lassie" and "Dennis the Menace," is slated this season on CBS-TV.

Idea, originating from the Coast, is aimed at hypoing audiences for both shows, slotted back to back Sunday evenings from 7 to 8 p.m. The filmed show will be jointly produced by the Jack Wrather Organization (Lassie) and Screen Gems (Dennis). Same sponsors, Campbell, Kellogg's and Best Foods, will ride the 60-minuter, to be slotted in the normal CBS-TV period.

Plan, considered a natural for audience promotion, is to schedule the hour special tentatively on March 5, Sunday. Scripting for the special will be done by the regular writers of "Lassie" nd "Dennis."

If the cross-breeding succeeds, others might follow suit for occasional one-show, special outing.

Rod Erickson In as Filmways Prez, Cueing Expansion Move

Rod Erickson has joined Filmways Inc. as sident, with Martin Ransohoff moving up to the post of board chairman but continuing as chief executive officer of the company. Erickson move is keyed to a far-ranging plan of expansion and diversification for the company, with particular emphasis on program sales and production and international expansion.

Under the new setup, Erickson will concentrate strengthening the progr m activities of the company. These include an expansion of the Al Simon-helmed Filmways vidpix production operati n on the Coast ;an entry into live packaging here and in Canada; affiliations with other companies such as California National Productions on syndicated product; and a greater mphasis on network sales with Ericks s the spearhead.

Bas of the company's operations, of course, remain commercials nd industrial pix, which together with the rentals of Filmways' big New York studio setup, ill total nearly $6,000,000 in volume this year. Plans call for an expansion here as well, with greater shooting abroad. Filmways has had some 30 shooting days in Europe this spring on behalf of American advertisers and new affiliations sparked by Erickson and Ransohoff will bring the company's European activities up as ell.

Other plans call for entrance into theatrical filmmaking, with this not necessarily tied to the Gotham studio, though that's been busy with feature work. Also in work are possibility of such deals as overseas studio affiliations,

Jayark Acquires Cagney Features

Jayark Films has bought five feature films produced by James Cagney Productions for tv release in the U. S. and abroad. New titles boost Jayark's feature library to 57, with pictures put into distribution early this year now playing 104 markets, according to prexy Reub Kaufman.

Cagney titles are "Bugles in the After . ." a 1952 release; "Kiss Tomorrow Goodbye," 1950; "Only the Valiant," 1951; "Blood on the Sun," 1945 (which Jayark acquired for domestic release in January); and "Joh Come Lately," 1943 (which was briefly on tv in a few markets some years ago).

Jayark moved into feature distribution a year ago when it acquired a bundle of pictures, including "Cloak and Dagger," "Pursued," "The Enforcer," "Distant Dr ms," "Blowing Wild," "Marjorie Morningstar," and others.

Of the bundle of 57 features, Kaufman says 50 are post '50, and he is now negotiating for additional titles with indie American ducers.

In additi firm will augment its library of "Bozo the Clow cartoons with 52 new segs preparation at Larry Harmon Pictures on the Coast. Jayark also has a new half-hour series in production in Europe, "Operation Escape."

Scotch Rumor As MGM-TV Widens Weitman Sphere

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Robert M. Weitman, chief of MGM-TV production, will broaden his sphere of operations in the company's overall video activities. The announcement was made by Sol C. Siegel, studio head of Metro-Goldwy -Mayer, following the resignation last week of George T. Shupert, veepee of the tv arm.

Latter move, as frequently happens, set the rumor mill going with respect to Weitman. Siegel applied the brakes fast via a statement which said:

"Published speculation and rumors to the contrary, no change in the status of Robert Weitman, vice president in charge of MGM-TV production, has been or is being contemplated. In the overall MGM-TV operation, Mr. Weitman's responsibilities will be broadened appreciably. Opposing rumors have no basis in fact."

No replacement of Shupert will be made. As announced earlier, John B. Burns moves up from director of national sales for tv to newly-created post of general sales manager. Weitman will continue to make his headquarters at the studio in Culver City.

WFFA-TV'S BUNDLE OF POST-'48 FILMS

Dallas, Nov. 8.

With the sale of post-1948 motion pictures to television, WFAA-TV has just announced the purchase of the largest package of post-'48 films from 20th-Fox to be released for tv use.

Mike Shapiro, manager of the outlet, in announcing the film buy, said the package includes amongst its star roster 42 Academy Award winners and nominees.

The new package will be used in a special film feature to be titled, "Theatre 61" and scheduled on Thursday nights and Sunday mor Premiere date hasn't been set yet, but Shapiro indicated the series would start around the first of the year.

METRO, 20TH'S, PAR CASUALTIES

By BOB CHANDLER

The chronic inability of Hollywood's filmmaking Big Three — Metro, 20th-Fox and Paramount— to fathom the competitive mysteries of television was again demonstrated last week with the resignation of George T. Shupert as v.p. in charge of Metro TV.

Or, to go back two weeks earlier, 20th-Fox signed Roy Huggins as exec producer for tv. Not that the choice wasn't an excellent one — just that the post had lain vacant for over a year.

And a few weeks earlier, George Gruski was dropped as Paramount's telefilm bossman after less than a year in the post, marking an end to Par's first determined effort to get into the telefiim act.

All the shifting, vacillating, uncertainty and octacular lack of success stems simply from a basic refusal of the companies to face the fact that television is a bitterly competitive business — far more than films have ever been in the past 30 years, requiring for success men of toplevel and unquestioned ability, as tough and able as the motion icture business itself can muster.

The left-handed approach by the companies to television doesn't necessarily mean they don't care about getting into tv with both feet. On the contrary, as one network exec put it, "They care very much. They think they're the New York Yankees of show business, and their pride is hurt when they can't make it in tv."

Strictly Manpower Problem

Trouble is that if the companies are the Yankees, they've consistently failed to field their first team. Record of these majors television has been a painful picture of the use of second-raters from the picture business, unsuitable choices from televisi , or virtually total neglect of responsibility for their stakes in tv.

Taking them one by one, there's Metro first on the list. Going back to the first effort, studio assigned a publicity man to do its first tv show, "MGM Parade," a tasteless conglomeration of promotional film, trailers and cartoons that was an immediate flop. When Bud Barry took over to sell the Metro backlog, another effort at tv was made, and Barry installed Dick Maibaum, a good screenwriter, to head production. Maibaum had some abilities, but they lay in the writing area, and his total unfamiliarity with tv at the start was a major strike against him. And as before, television took backseat at the studio itself, virtually divorced from

Phil Rapp, Marx Bros. $561,000 Suit Charges Breach on TV Series

Los Angeles, Nov. 8.

Damage suit for $561,000 charging breach of contract has been filed in Superior Court by Phil Rapp and the four Marx Bros. against six defendants. Alleged is a breach of an oral contract by which the Marxes were to star in 39 issues of a half-hour comedy for tv titled "Deputy Seraph" which Rapp was to write and produce.

Attorney Peter R. Cohen charged in the action that the deal was made and terms agreed upon but when the time came for the defendants to post an advance of $42,500 for the scripts, the contract was repudiated. Harpo and Chico Marx were to appear all 39 episodes and Groucho in 13, with Guimmo to serve as business manager. Oral agreement was assertedly finalized Dec. 1, 1958 and films were intended for both the U.S. and British markets.

Defendants named are Sol Lesser Productions, J. Arthur Rank, Sidney Box, James Swann, Sy Weintraub and Harvey Hayutin.

Schiff, Big TV Toy Spender, Sez Stations Running Wild on Com'ls On Kid Shows; Revives FCC Beef

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

"Reeking overcommercialization" of kiddie shows throughout the country was condemned by Bernard Schiff, prez of Webb Associates, one of the largest toy spot spenders in the U. S.

Schiff said he would again take his beef to the Federal Communications Commission. The Webb prexy, who just completed a swing around the country, said it's not uncommon to find six minutes of commercials in a half-an-hour kiddie show. In Houston, he said he clocked five-and-a-half minutes of commercials in a 15-minute span, a situation, he added, not unique to Houston.

Webb Associates, headed by Schiff, spends about $1,700,000 yearly in spot tv throughout the country, as well as being represented on the networks in segments of "Captain Kangaroo" and Shari Lewis. Agency represents General Toy, holding company for Remco and American Doll and Toy. For an extra holiday push, Webb has bought three feature specials in the 27 top U. S. markets. (see separate story).

But when prexy Schiff sounded off on the overcommercialization of kiddie fare he didn't sound like merry old Saint Nick... "It's not morally right. It's about time somebody sounded off. There's an oversaturation of commercials," he charged. Webb prexy also darkly hinted of payola in the kiddie field, the payola coming from the local buyer as opposed to the national account, with the local buyer getting extra long commercials and cut rates.

In his 10,000-mile tour, Schiff said he monitored local kiddie shows. He said he found one-minute commercials stretched another 30 seconds, extra billboards all over the place, tie-in kiddie contests which were nothing more than a promo for sponsors, "live" emcees handling toys for another plug, etc. In a half-an-hour, 10 toys can be pitched to the kids.

Schiff acknowledged that he has a self-interest in his complaint. Overcommercialization dilutes the

ABC Huggin' Huggins

That names mean biz in vidfilms again is demonstrated by the appointment of Roy Huggins, as v.p. in charge of tv production for 20th-Fox. Soon after th Huggins' appointment, ABC-TV made a coproduction deal with 20th-Fox on two properties, both understood to be based on ideas by Huggins.

ABC-TV considers the reentrance of Huggins into vidfilms as welcome, indeed. Huggins had turned to feature production. While he was at Warners, he was credited with the success of such series as "77 Sunset Strip," and being the creator of "Maverick."

Shulton Spinning A '4th Network' For Holiday Pix

Shulton, Inc., the toilerties outfit, which spun a "network" last spring with "The Race for Space," has done it again with five half-hour vidfilm entertainment entries.

Firm has placed the shows in 97 markets, copping prime time in city after city, according to Charles Amory, head of tv for Wesley Associates, Shulton's agency. The five shows, to be telecast for the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays, are unsold pilots bought by Shulton.

For the national spot exposure and sponsorship of the five shows, Shulton allocated a budget of from $600,000 to $700,000. A budget two to three times next year for similar projects is planned.

Shulton, currently shying away from sponsorship of network specials, finds itself enamoured with the "fourth network" route. Placing the shows locally, it has found that affils will bump network shows for the Shulton programs, that prime time can be secured, and that stations promote the shows locally via on-the-air plugs, ads, tie-ins, etc.

The five vidfilm half-hour Shulton specials are "The Wonderful World of Little Julius," starring Eddie Hodges; "Underwater Agent," starring Red Hadley; "Ring of Steel," Margaret O'Brien; and "Invasion by Three," Chuck Connors. Agency Wesley secured the pilots from various sources, included Desilu, Bernard Schubert, Inc., and Cy Howard.

NEW HANNA-BARBERA ENTRY EYED BY ABC

Within the next month, ABC-TV will decide whether it'll have a second Hanna-Barbera animated entry in a prime time slotting next season. Web, "under certain circumstances," has rights of first refusal on H-B product, which is sold by Screen Gems.

H-B is now doing "The Flintstones," a situation comedy in animation, scheduled on ABC-TV. Apart from the cartoon half-hour for next season, Screen Gems is in the middle of dickers with ABC-TV to provide first a detailed treatment and then a pilot on a 60-minute film called "Riviera," which will bring together the same team that made the defunct half-hour CBS "Tightrope"—producers Russell Rouse and Clarence Greene and actor Mike Connors. (ITC, telefilm distribbery, meantime has already completed a half-hour pilot, "Mr. Riviera.")

General Toy 300G Holiday Splurge

General Toy is spending about $300,000 in the top 27 U.S. markets for a Thanksgiving and Christmas holiday splurge, buying three children's feature classics, as single sponsored General Toy specials.

Wherever possible, agency Webb Associates has endeavored to buy the three Paramount pix, "Tom Sawyer," "Huckleberry Finn," and "Alice in Wonderland" for its single sponsorship special deal. The three pix, distributed by MCA TV, were inked for telecasting in N.Y. by WCBS-TV, which bought the Par library.

Here and there, Webb Associates run into situations were substitutions were made, with such pix as "Hansel and Gretel," and Selznik's "Tom Sawyer," and others utilized. In most markets other than N.Y., the leading tv children's personality of the station will be used as emcee for the feature special.

Agencies Plotting How to Regain Program and Timeslot Control —On Other Madison Ave. Fronts

By BILL GREELEY

Advertiser and agency program plotters, who this year especially lost a lot of show and timeslot control to the networks, are coming up with new angles calculated to restore sayso and secure early prime time franchises for the '61-'62 season.

There's BBDO's do-it-yourself pilots, which worked in the instance of the Rexall-bankrolled "National Velvet" on NBC-TV this year and now sees General Mills financing a "Father of the Bride" pilot in hopes of landing an early web birth for next season.

Pilot financing calls for an investment of $70,000 or so. Even though it's relatively slight gamble against the odds of sewing up a $3,000,000 investment, there are sponsors who don't want to risk that kind of money without having a desirable web timeslot secured.

A newer and cheaper twist is the sponsor-bankrolled script. It requires an investment of only $5,000 and would firm up a network deal before any shooting at all. Both Lever Bros. and Bristol-Myers are said to be in the early stages of plotting the script approach with Screen Gems and MGM the packagers involved.

Idea is to get a pilot script that's satisfactory to both sponsor and packager, then pitch it to one or all of the networks in hopes of getting a time comitment for next year.

Advantage to the sponsor would be in show control, the early lockin with the web and a partial financial interest. The packager would retain at least 50% of a show that's insured network exposure. Network, of course, gets an early sponsor, would no doubt insist on and get a financial interest in the sh

Awards will be made during Ad Week, Feb. 5 to 11. Mailing of entry blanks was preceded by close to 11,000 brochures to advertisers, producers etc. inviting entry.

Madison Ave.'s Headshrinker

With Madison Ave.'s guilt feelings on the rise concurrent with the recent swell of criticism of the advertising industry, the American Assn. of Advertising Agencies last week called in a psychiatrist to ease ruffled psychies.

Among speakers at the 4A's Eastern Region conference in New York was Dr. Charles W. Socarides, who told the gathered it's no trick to be sick, but creativity takes a healthy mind—"creativity depends on inner freedom."

"Some of my best and most rewarding patients are creative people in advertising," said the doctor. "However, one striking thing they have in common is the mythology they share about the nature of their creative work and its bearing on questions of morality, culture and progress—both social and individual. But most important, this mythology interferes with their healthy functioning—and from the couch I hear talented, successful men denying both their talent and their success and sinking deeper into psychological and physical sickness in the process."

The doctor attacked the widespread myth that "so many unhappy ad writers and artists have that you've got to be sick to be creative . . it's no effort to be sick. It's simply a repetitive, stereotyped pattern very different from the creative act. When you create something, you're making choices—it's a free act, a healthy act. When you're acting neurotically, you have no choices, you're the helpless victim of inner processes over which you have no control."

He pointed out that advertising used to be considered a solid profession, that hardly anyone outside it, and hardly anybody in it, thought of it as a compromise choice of career. "Nowadays, though, the plumber will tell you confidently that 'You know—those advertising men prostitute their talents.' This dismal notion is based on a submyth, and that is the idea that the only decent or desirable goal for a writer is to produce immortal books, plays and poems, and for an artist to paint pictures for the Louvre."

Adsville: McCann-Erickson's Joseph Culligan will moderate a debate between Arthur Duram, Fuller & Smith & Ross tv topper, and Rod Erickson, former Y&R exec and now president of Filmways, on "Buying Audience Size or Program Environment in Network Television." With the Station Reps

Negotiations for sale of KGUN-TV, Tucson, to owners of WEHT-TV, Evansville, has resolved a "pitch" battle between two rep firms that's been underway for the last couple of months.

KGUN rep Headly-Reed was put on notice of cancellation last summer, and station management invited Adam Young Television Corp. down to make a pitch. Sametime, management invited Headly-Reed down to present arguments on why it should keep the business.

But the flip-flops flew to no avail. WEHT-TV is already repped by the Young org, so the Tucson station will go automatically to Young when the sale is approved by FCC. KGUN has been grossing an annual rep percentage of about $14,000.

Owners of the Tucson station are H. U. Garrett, Tom E. Foster and others. Edwin G. Richter Jr., Henry S. Hilberg and associates are owners of WEHT. Sale price is reportedly $1,400,000.

Petry Sesh

Petry has released the agenda for its fourth annual promotion roundtable to be held at the Broadcasting Promotion Assn. convention Nov. 13 at New Orleans.

Reppery queried its stations on what they'd like discussed at the meeting, which is attended by promotion managers and other execs of Petry-repped stations. According to station preference, first half of the session will be devoted to case histories of successful sales-through-promotion, audience promotion, national promotion and merchandising. Remainder will include discussions on research, trade paper advertising, cooperation with a station's rep and other topics.

Heading the meeting will be Petry veepee Bob Hutton and Bill Steese, firm's radio promotion manager.

THE TOUGH LUCK OF SUCCESS

Brit. Viewing Habits: BBC Vs. Com'l

London, Nov. 8.

Though the BBC, through its own audience research, reckons that more people viewed its programs than those of the commercial network, it concedes a 60-40 victory to the opposition webs.

According to a statistical breakdown for July to September, BBC's survey calculates that 24,000,000 people viewed its programs on an average day, and 20,000,000 caught the ITV shows. However, it's admitted that the duration of BBC viewing tends to be less than that of ITV, and that the audience for the average BBC program was 5,200,000, against the commercial average of 6,050,000.

Breaking the statistics down to viewers with a choice, the survey estimates that "on the typical day" half (19,500,000) viewed BBC and half the commercial outlet, while nearly 13,000,000 tuned to both channels. BBC claims about 80 minutes viewing time daily, while commercial programs collared two hours. That, in turn, is broken down to mean that viewers with a choice devoted 60% of all viewing time in favor of the commercial programs, and 40% to the BBC.

In the field of sound broadcasting, in which BBC still has a monopoly, the average daily audience rose from 23,400,000 in April to June, to 23,700,000 in the third quarter. Average amount of listening time now amounts to about one hour per day per head of the population, three-quarters of which takes place before 6 p.m.

Figures for the July-September period subsequently published by Television Audience Measurement Ltd. and covering commercial tv give 65% as the proportion of the time spent viewing commercial tv in homes equipped to receive same and BBC-TV transmissions. This compares with 67% during the immediately preceding quarter and with 72% for the July-September period in 1959, according to TAM.

Gulf Oil's Unique Deal for NBC's Hot-Off-the-Griddle News Specials

Gulf Oil is now on the threshold of signing that contract to buy news programs of moment from NBC-TV. A unique "open end" affair, the bankroller will be buying from NBC News any special journalistic reports that the web does in the remainder of the '60-'61 season, and Gulf has already given reason to expect that, if the concept proves satisfactory, it'll continue into next season.

Frank McGee will serve as host for the do-'em-when-they're-hot "NBC Special News Reports." At the time the network made its first recommendations to Gulf (two months ago) during a visit by Bob Kintner and a group of network salesmen and newsmen to Gulf's Pittsburgh headquarters), the oil company was asked to lay aside $1,200,000 as a maximum annual outlay.

The network will cover the events for Gulf as they arise. (Some may be hours, most are expected to be half-hours. They could fall within an hour or a day of each other or they could be weeks apart, and they may go before dark or in prime time. NBC will decide what steps to take as the news happens, and, on this basis, Gulf will have no say in what it buys or doesn't buy, because it is committing to buy what ever NBC figures is important enough to go on the air.

The $1,200,000 (not all of it will necessarily be consumed) goes to cover only the time charges for the "Specials." NBC will pay production costs, on the theory that it will still have to air news events whether they're sponsored or not. This way there's a guarantee of

McGee's Shell Shock

NBC commentator Frank McGee had to turn down the Sunday night news stanza on WNBC-TV, N.Y., because Shell Oil is the sponsor. He's just been appointed by the parent NBC network as host for a series of Gulf Oil news specials.

It's understood WNBC newsman Gabe Pressman will fill the local Sabbath slot, emptied with the departure of Ken Banghart, who first quit and then came up with a post at WCBS Radio, N.Y.

There's a Crack In CBS' 'Bells'

Although already in production on "Oh Those Bells," the Weire Bros. half-hour slapstick comedy series, CBS-TV is nonetheless yanking the show from the schedule. Series had been slated to kick off Sunday (13) in the 6-6:30 period, but failing to find a sponsor, CBS shelved the show and substituted "selected" reruns of "I Love Lucy."

"Bells" had already been kicked around somewhat; it was originally scheduled for Mondays at 7:30, but there were no takers, primarily because of the high price, somewhere in the vicinity of $55,000 per half-hour. Then CBS moved in to Sundays at 6, figuring on a 26 firstrun and 26 repeat pattern to lower the costs.

But as airtime approached and

Thomas & White Form Merit Prod., Set 2 TV Series

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Two experienced picture producers, Bill Thomas and Sam White, have formed Merit Productions for the packaging of television shows. Slated for early piloting are "Ski Patrol" and "Man From the Police Gazette." Two networks, ABC and NBC, have incepted negotiations for airing the two shows next season.

On the company's future schedule is also a 90-minute spec, "Barnum and Tom Thumb." They are hopeful of landing Jackie Gleason for the role of the great showman.

Files of the National Ski Patrol, a rescue unit operating in the snow countries, and the Police Gazette will be made available to the producers. Most of the action in the Gazette series will take place in Chicago based on actual incidents covered in graphic detail by the magazine. Locale of the ski series will be at Squaw Valley, scene of the winter Olympics. Because of the gay colored uniforms worn by the patrol it will be shot in color.

Thomas and his producing partner, the late Bill Pine ("the two Bills") made 74 feature pictures for Paramount and UA. White was long time producer at Columbia and other studios and in tv was associate producer of "Perry Mason" and created the still-due series, "Oh, Those Bells." Earlier he produced th "Flicka" series.

Selling agents for Merit will be GAC.

CONFLICTS POSING MAJOR PROBLEM

Growth of some Hollywood telefilm production houses into "major" status, along with the greater-than-ever ratio of telepix-to-live on the networks, has caused an unprecedented situation wherein some of the majors find themselves producing competing shows.

Time was when an ad agency, repping different clients, would incur some raised eyebrows when he happened to be represented with two different shows in the same timeslot. By now, that's commonplace. But this season is the first time this has happened on the production end, with the same company turning out competing programs for the same timeslot.

It's happened this year to four of the Hollywood outfits, Four Star, Revue, Screen Gems and Desilu, and the conflicts occur four nights of the week. Moreover, in two instances it's a dual-competitive situation, with one hour-long show in direct competition with two half-hours from the same shop.

That latter example is Four Star's situation on Friday night at 10-11. On NBC, it has "Michael Shayne" spanning the full hour. Directly opposite, on ABC, are two Four Star entries, Robert Taylor's "The Detectives" at 10 and "The Law and Mr. Jones" at 10:30. Another Four Star situation occurs Tuesdays at 9, when its Tom Ewell show on CBS meets head-on with "Stagecoach West" on ABC.

Revue has the other three-way situation, on Saturdays at 8:30-9:30, when its CBS-TV "Checkmate" competes directly with "The Tall Man" and "The Deputy" on NBC. Screen Gems is in the act Friday night, with "The Flintstones" on ABC running directly against the first half of the hour-long "Route 66" on CBS. Desilu gets the problem on Thursdays, when the Ann Sothern show (a 50-50 ownership split between Miss Sothern and Desilu) runs opposite the first half of "The Untouchables."

Unusual situation does not raise as many ethical problems as it does economic. In most instances, the shows involved are coproduction deals, with the production of each segment in separate hands under the same studio roof. In the case of Screen Gems, for example, "Flintstones" is a Hanna-Barbera show released via SG, while "66" is a Herbert B. Leonard production shot completely on location. Screen Gems exercises little creative control over either show.

Similarly, the "Untouchables" production setup is all staffed by Desilu, but Miss Sothern controls her own creative staff. In the case of Revue, "Checkmate" is wned primarily by Jack Benny's J&M Productions, with Revue coproducing and furnishing facilities. "Tall Man" is a Revue-Nat Holt partnership; "Deputy" is Revue-Henry Fonda. In the case of Four Star, "Shayne" is a house show, but the Taylor show is in partnership with Levy-Gardner-Laven and Taylor and "Mr. Jones" a partnership with Sy Gomberg and James Whitmore.

Problem is really that in today's competitive market, the same company's shows are liable to kill each other off. And Hollywood, with all its knack for solving problems, hasn't found an answer for that one yet.

Brit. Election Special

London, Nov. 8.

Commercial tv, same like BBC-TV, is opening up at 6:30 a.m. local time tomorrow (Wed.) for a "special" on the U.S. election. Program, mounted by Independent Television News, is skedded for two hours.

Plans include keeping open a direct line to New York for comment by Keith Kyle, making a phone call to Moscow for a report from CBS correspondent Marvin Kalb, and a similar sound transmission from Paris.

Nixon's Provocative TV Format In 4-Hour ABC Matinee Telethon

Sporting Gesture

Chicago, Nov. 8.

WBBM-TV performed an unusual public service for Windy City sports buffs last Sunday (8) by aiding the local pro football team in scouting the habits of two upcoming opponents. Station availed its main studio to the Chicago Bears for use as a classroom on a day when the team had no game scheduled and CBS-TV was carrying the Baltimore Colts-Green Bay Packers grid match.

The boys might have watched it anywhere else, but the local CBS studio was preferable because it could contain the entire team and because it's equipped with several large-screen monitors. Chief coach George Halas also wanted to be sure of optimum tv reception.

Gesture undoubtedly helped to make cozier WBBM-TV's new-found relationship with the Bears.

NBC Fri. Revamp Finalized; CBS To Get 'Westerner'?

NBC-TV has completed the revamp of its Friday night schedule. Nanette Fabray's situation comedy, which Westinghouse bought some time ago, moves into Friday night 8:30 half-hour on Jan. 6, replacing "The Westerner."

Four Star's "Westerner" is far from dead, though. CBS is reportedly negotiating with the producer to use it in the current "Mr. Garlund" slot, Fridays at 9:30 p.m.

Presence of the Fabray telefilm series in the NBC-TV Friday night lineup gives the network a solid 90-minute block of comedy shows, because on Jan. 13, a week after Miss Fabray kicks off for Westinghouse, NBC will install "Happy" at 7:30 p.m. and "One Happy Family" at 8 p.m. Latter two stanzas w picked last week to replace Screen Gems' "Dan Raven" hour-long action-adventure strip after a 13-week ride by latter.

At 9 p.m. Fridays on NBC-TV "Bell Telephone Hour" will continue in its alternate-week 60-minute slotting, and this week, after long negotiation, Mitch Miller's "Singalong" was chosen to go definitely into the matching hour.

"Michael Shayne" stays from 10 to 11 p.m.

BOB HOPE SET FOR LIFE MAG SPECIAL

Bob Hope will front "25 Years of Life," the $500,000 spectacular Life mag will underwrite early next year on NBC-TV. It's understood that the comedian wanted originally to do it from the Coast, and that delayed somewhat his signing.

Life, Young & Rubicam, however, wanted it from New York, where the magazine headquarters. It'll be a 90-minute stanza, beginning at 9:30, on March 2, a Thursday night.

Murrow Misses Elections

A mild case of pneumonia knocked Ed Murrow out of the CBS-TV election coverage last night (Tues.) first such major election the commentator has missed in many years. Murrow cancelled out of last Friday's (4) "Presidential Countdown" show, complaining of feeling poorly, and the pneumonia set in over the weekend.

The Dems and the GOP gave all three networks a bigger headache than usual the day before elections in their competitive rush to get in the last word. It created for ABC-TV, CBS-TV and in some measure for NBC-TV one technical problem after another.

On Saturday (5), the Republicans, certified check in hand, decided in mid-afternoon to stage on ABC-TV (where the time is least expensive during the daylight hours) a four-hour "Dial Dick Nixon Telethon" on Monday (7) between 2 and 6 p.m. It was a three-point origination, with vice-president Nixon in Detroit, Lodge in Boston and some stars for Nixon in N.Y.

It's estimated that the 11th hour tv splurge cost the two political candidates some $600,000, with the four-hour Nixon telethon accounting for about half that amount.

For the record, the Nixon matinee spread is significant, in terms of major candidate's embracing of the medium in the future, or it's generally agreed that it emerged as perhaps the most provocative format to date in terms of a candidate "finding himself" on tv. In contrast to his encounters with Kennedy via the debate technique, Nixon's naturalness unquestionably helped foster a viewer respect for his ability to handle himself.

On Monday (7) morning, after delaying a decision for several hours, the Democrats ordered a half-hour from 6 to 6:30 p.m. on Monday, directly after Nixon. Then they ordered 15 minutes, from 6:15 to 6:30 on CBS, and 15 minutes from 6:45 to 7 on NBC, latter to be taped.

Kennedy wanted to talk from Manchester, N.H., after Nixon spoke from Detroit, but lines from WMUR-TV couldn't clear lines through to Boston for a national feed. So Kennedy at 2 p.m. made plans reluctantly to cut short his New Hampshire swing and return to Boston.

Under these circumstances, Kennedy would have had to move into the Boston WHDH studio at 6 leaving Republican Lodge one-minute-30 seconds to vacate. Since CBS was to move in at 6:30, a jurisdictional problem was created

WB Reruns For ABC Late Night

ABC-TV has decided to make use of reruns of the Warner Bros. telefilm series next season. After considering the idea for several months, the network will go ahead in '61-'62 and fill either the 11 to midnight or 11:15 p.m. to 12:15 a.m. Monday through Friday with reruns of its large supply of Warner product, all of which has appeared —or is appearing—on ABC-TV.

Exact shows to be used in the latenight slot, opposite the early portion of NBC-TV's Jack Paar, have not be chosen, but ABC-TV and Warners are said to have dickered rerun prices on all available product.

Network has also laid out feelers to its affiliates, and evidently has seen enough interest indicated to make plans to go ahead.

Where the 3 networks have equal facilities, where the people have a 3-way choice, most homes watch ABC-TV most of the time. The chart on the left nails that proposition down beyond quibble. But it doesn't give you the whole story. For the time in question (week ending October 30) ABC had 26 firsts out of 51 half hour periods, more than the other two combined. Network Y had 14, Network Z, 11. In the nights-of-the-week department, ABC led with 4 out of 7. Network Y took 2, Network Z, 1. On a program basis ABC had the highest rated program and 3 out of the top 5. It's smart to do business with ABC TELEVISION

THE DEAN MARTIN SHOW
With Frank Sinatra, Dorothy Provine, Don Knotts, David Rose Orch, others Producer: Jack Donohue
Writer: Herbert Baker
60 Mins., Tues. (1), 10 p.m.
SPEIDEL
NBC-TV, from H'wood (color)

(Norman, Craig & Kummel)

One of these days, both the "Dean Martin Show" with Frank Sinatra and the "Frank Sinatra Show" with Dean Martin are going to hit the point of diminishing returns. Although last Tuesday's (1) spec was smooth and easy-going, it was not dissimilar in format, and in the ping-pong of personalities, to several others they have done in tandem. Martin kidded Sinatra about ass "broads," Sinat a again needled Martin about his drinking and both found it necessary to publish the news once more that they're Italian. Their running gags are standing still, and, with all respect to each one's superior salesmanship in song, it's difficult not to resent their conduct as a couple of overweened playboys.

Unlike the classic Jack Benny-Fred Astaire and Bob Hope-Bing Crosby show biz buddyships—both of which based in the personality differences and had enduring entertainment values—the Martin-Sinatra relationship is founded on what they have in common and, for entertainment purposes, is inflexible and limited. In fact, it's beginning to pall.

As a show, the outing last week might have been better off had Sinatra not appeared until the last 10 minutes, to do the sock song medley with Martin that served as the finale. His arrival at this half-hour shut off an excellent piece of business, in which he was being impersonated by the facile comic, Don Knotts, who can look alarmingly like Sinatra when he wants to. Knotts made a very funny routine of drinking himself drunk to the song, "One More for the Road."

Sinatra's arrival, which should have been the high point, turned out to be a letdown, and the program didn't pick up again until the aforementioned finale. Some 10 or 15 minutes were wasted with Martin giving his pal the "This Is Your Life" treatment, a predictable bit which didn't at all come off. The guess-who offstage voices were creaky and old, but of course they all belonged to gorgeous dames. Included in the segment were some gag clips from old Sinatra pix and a fat plug for the new one he's shooting in Hawaii with Spencer Tracy. He offered one solo number, "Old MacDonald Had a Farm," updated.

Dorothy Provine, abetted by a spirited chorus line, provided a delicious change of pace with a production medley from the Flapper Era, per her current video stint in the "Roaring Twenties" a show which got a big plug, although it's on a competing network. Miss Provine is an attractive, gifted and inspired performer, and her turn was one of the brighter elements in the show.

As for Martin himself, except for that irritating business vis-a-vis Sinatra, he was a goodly host who confined most of his singing to duets with his guests. Les

SPEAK UP
With Mariciarose Shestock
30 Mins.; Sun., 1 p.m.
WRCV-TV, Philadelphia

Tea-time setup, with Marciarose Shestock sitting beside the cups and saucers, gives a spurious flavor to this half-hour interview session. Adlai Stevenson, a coup for the producer, maintained his customary cerebral level but proved an uncomfortable guest and made his hostess over animated. Lensing helped mix the hoped-for cozy effect, by focusing separately on each participant.

While questions were pertinent and gave the feeling of preparation, the former Dem. standard-bearer, while probably ad-libbing, kept looking to his left and seemed to be using idiot cards. Here to beat the drums for Sen. Kennedy, Stevenson said a continuation of the New Deal was needed—and in a groping, hesitant but thoughtful manner declared our leadership was not as emphatic as need be.

Even in context his mention of "When I was drafted in 1952" seemed to grate. He didn't consider himself an expert on Russian objectives and suggested we sit down with the Russians instead of "standing up" to Khrushchev.

Program would benefit by clearing the table and getting rid of the crockery and providing better direction. Gagh.

CUBA: THE BATTLE OF AMERICA

Writer: Dr. Burke
60 Mins.; Tues. (1), 8:30 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
WNEW-TV (tape & film)

N.Y. indie WNEW-TV, in its public affairs kick, has found a strong assist in Dr. Albert Burke, a former Yale prof with some broadcasting experience.

The hour essay-documentary on Cuba Tuesday night laid bare an emotion-ladened problem on the doorsteps of the U.S. The show was mainly a lecture, carried by the force, knowledge and articulateness of Dr. Burke. He pulled no punches examining castro, Communism, poverty, and the role assumed by the U.S. in Cuban eyes, even before Castro's reign.

The outing didn't add up to a nice story. Who needs a Communist Party flourishing in an alliance with Cuban radical reform nationalism? Narrator Burke didn't supply any ready answer. But it appeared that he touched on the real pulse of the Cuban situation and if knowledge is a prime visite of fruitful action, he did a yeoman's job. What Dr. Burke's point seemed to be was that the U.S. must identify with and help the impoverished, thereby defeating Communism, not only in Cuba but in other poverty-stricken, rumbling Latin American countries.

Dr. Burke' talk was interspersed with film clips of anti-Castro units training in Florida, an execution in Cuba of former Batista leader, interviews, and a few other items. The film clips didn't match the ardor and clarity of the lecturer.

The Cuban special for the Metropolitan Broadcasting station was the first in a planned series, featuring the former Yale prof. His next one, a half-hour, on Sunday (13) will be on brain warfare.

Dr. Burke, in 1957, when he left Yale became an educational tv consultant for NBC, while he was associate producer for the web's "Survival" series. He received his doctor of philosophy in international relations at U. of Pennsylvania and was Director of graduate studies in conservation and resources at Yale from 1951 to 1957. Horo.

OEDIPUS
With Boston U. Stage 5 Players, Elliot Norton host
Producer - Director (WHDH-TV): Matt Connolly Jr.
Executive Producer (Boston U.): Samuel Hirsch
Director (Boston U.): Edward D. Thommen
30 Mins., 6 p.m. Monday
WHDH-TV, Boston (color)

At the early evening hour when too many unch up the "roll-cartoon" butto and turn the a s over to the moppets, Boston's WHDH- mbarked on an ambitious eight pla to ill Changing role Hero in Drama." This is being d ape tion with the division Boston U. Division of Theatre Arts, part of WHDH-TV's Monday-Frida "Dateline Boston" pu educational programs.

First of eight dramas to be presented monthly on "Dateline Boston" consisted of excerpts from Sophocle "Oedi us Re and "Oedipus at Colonus." Though first performed some 2,400 years ago, dramatic scenes still proved deeply moving nd meaningful in the hands of undergrad thesps of Boston U. Ian Brown w s stirring as "Oedipus" in two scenes from the Dudley Fitts-Robert Fitzgerald translation of "Oedipus Re." James Straley, as Oedipus 20 years later, was effective in the less bombastic death scene from "Oedipus at Colo us." Myrna Casas was Jocasta.

Producer-director Matt Conn lly Jr., transferred the staging of the college thesps to the video tube with crisp and sensitive surene. But Connolly and his crew of WHDH-TV pros gave the kudos to the Boston U. youngster, who handled everything from script adaptation through scenic and costume design to staging, make-up and final on-air performance. Elliot Norton, drama critic of the Boston Daily Record, introd the program ticing the segments together and relating them to continuing theme of overall project in distinguished manner. Norton, who also serves as lecturer in dramatic literature at Boston U., lent authoritativeness and pro critique-narration to the program. The division is a pro theatre school with pro staff and large pool of stude talent. Mating of the Stage group with "Dateline Boston" proved a natural since it was begun last season, when a series of seven original half-hour plays by New England writers were presented.

Switch to the new theme of changing role of hero in drama for this season's Boston U. series will extend from the early Greek of first presentation to contemporary drama. Next episode, Nov. 28, will be condensed version of medieval play, "Every " Gu

Dinah Shore Show

Color-filmed in Spain and Portugal a few months ago, last Sunday's (6) Dinah Shor NBC-TV li som standout Liberian performers and the striking backgrounds of various Spanish and Portugal cities. It was an excellent p rlay of music, dance and log with Miss Shore main at the continuity via her pleasing vocals, keyed to the ious locales, d her explanatory comment

Spanish segment of was highlighted by superb fla co dance exhibitions by he veteran Vincente Escudero in Madrid and by young Pacho De Rondo and his troupe in Granada. Also featured was one operatic solo by local tenor, Alfonso de la Mover, who belted an aria from "Aido. The switch to Portugal for th second half-hour was equally interesting with its closeup of a fishing village and some colorful local dancing. In Lisbon, Delinda Rodriguez was excellent in her delivery of a "fado" torch song.

This hour, which was in similar groove to the show's recent us of South Sea island film ch was another imaginative change-of-pace conception which revents this series from becoming just other musical offering. Horo

Ed Sullivan Show

Ed Sullivan's second "America" remote-taped segment, an entertainment's-eye view of Chic go, played at times like an obit of what the Windy City once was as a show biz centre. It wasn't completely intentional—Sullivan is stressing the historical angle in all his remotes—but his nostalgic bit, in front of the Blackhawk served to remind vividly that Chi ain't the town it once was.

Nonetheless, there were sufficient Chi alumni of old and recent vintage to make this Sullivan outing a whale of a variety show. It wasn't altogether satisfactory as a sightseeing tour of Chi—Sullivan missed Michigan Ave., Lake Shore Drive, the illuminated Wrigley Bldg., etc. But it was a show jam packed with good entertainment.

There w Benny Goodman and the quintet at peak form in union show at Hull Hous a later Benny with the Chicago Fine Arts Quartet at the Art Institute for the highbrow stuff. There w the turn-of-the-century street inside the Museum of Science & Industry as a backdrop for Dolores Gray. There were a couple of campus remotes: Charlton Heston from alma mater Northwestern, citing Carl Sandburg's "Chicag and Bob Newhart at Loyol giving out with his school for bus drivers bit. At a finale, there was ex-Chicagoan Edgar Bergen, als working out of Hull House. And in between, Mahalia Jacks sang pel in a church on the South Side, and Sullivan's cameras went int the Empire Room of the Palmer House for a pickup of a Danish vocal trio working the room.

Sullivan got a pile of entertainment value into the h ur; bit more of the feel of the ci itself would hav been in order. Chan.

Close-Up

"Bell & Howell's Close-Up" performed a definite service last Thursday (3) on ABC-TV, but except for the last five or six minutes it was a lacklustre service. Topic of the 10:30-11 pubaffairs stanza was voter apathy to local and state referendum issue. In Bangor, Me., a small voter turnout defeated an important school proposition; in Dearborn Township, Mich., voters twice rejected a minute tax increase to support an idle $3,000,000 school; in the State of Kentucky, all but one voter interviewed were ignorant of a proposition to alter the state constitution, which the governor considered ient and unmalleable.

But the point was made in the firts three minutes and worked to a farethewell in the next 20. ABC-TV had a good case, yet didn't seem to know what to do with it. The nature of the interviewing on this ABC-TV series has been rather poor right from the first show on Bigotry a few weeks ago. The grass-roots machinations of the Kentucky Governor, captured on ABC film, were stagey, a fault perhaps of an ABC crew too anxious to show a politician in action. Even talking to a handful of people, with a lavalier mike around his neck, and his arms around them, Gov. Bert Combs sounded like an orat

American Musical Theatre

A nostalgic half-hour that undoubtedly revived pleasant memories for older was the Gershwin program, aired Sat. (5) WCBS-TV's "American Musical Theatre." Vocalist Susan Johnson sang a number of the composer's standard and producer Vinton Freedley contributed son; delightful remi sce

Interviewed by host Jim Morske, Freedley explained the function of producer in preparing a musical for Broadway. He also touched on his early experience in playing th banjo, ong other instruments, which found a rapt studio audience in a group of New York City high school students who attend these weekly telecasts.

In keeping with the sentimental format was the presentation of a birthday cake to Freedley by a girl student. The producer, who presented a number of Gershwin musicals in bygone years, also recalled the pit band of "Girl Crazy" had such musicians as Benny Goodman, Gene Krupa, Red Nichols and Jack Teagarden. "Wouldn't it be nice if we could afford them now?" he co imented.

On th whole this was one of the better "American Musical Theatre" sessions. Musical arranger Irwin Kostal batoned the CBS orchestra with finesse while Neal Finn's brisk direction of the layout was a decided asset. Show, incidentally, is presented by the WCBS-TV Public Affairs Dept. in cooperation with the New York Ci Board of Educati Gilb.

The Twentieth Century

"The Twentieth Centur ... CBS-TV's Sunday-at-6:30 show (6), went back in time for a recap of the White House and the Presidents who have holed up there. It was lively, although sketchy, histor lesson that brought the importance of the job and the majesty of the digs into full perspective. The timing of the show s especially good since the selection of a new tenant was to be held two days later.

With the clever manipulation of prints, paintings and photographs, the White House story came across with pictorial savvy. In the narrator's slot, Walter Cronkite was supplied with a brisk and bright script that worked its way speedily to th Eisenhow move-in.

One of the program's most important assets was the original music score penned by Tom Glazer. He captured the spirit of the times with melodies that excellently complemented the narration and matching pictorial showcase. It was an Americana medley that brought added leaning to the chronicle. Alfredo Antonini's orch interpretation of the score was tops. Gres.

Play of The Week

Being Sarovancsque can be a b re—certainly dramatically and, depending on how a viewer inclined to view life, perhaps even philosophically. WNTA-TV, N. Y., this week is presenting on "Play of the Week" two works by William Saroyan, "Once Around the Block" and "My Heart's in the Highlands." When compared to other tv programs and this is true of the entire "Play of the Week" series) the Sarova plays had something to but no have said it less well,

THE STRANGE WORLD OF GURNEY SLADE
With Anthony Newley, Hugh Paddick, Edwin Richfield, Annika Wills, Joy Stewart
Writers: Sid Green, Dick Hills
Producer: Alan Tarrant
30 Mins., Sat., 8:35
Associated TeleVisi from London

Discovered on a vas disused airplane r nway, the figure of Gurney Slade nthony Newley. The camera pinpoints him in the distance, slowly racks up on him. Slade ens round to face it and scowls: "Took a long time getting here, didn't you?"

That set the mood of this comedy skein, certainly the most original effort of its kind on local tv screens since the commercial web experimented with the Goons in its early days. Slade, played by Newley as an endearingly timid character, was always wondering about the difficulties of social behavior. For instance, spied a pretty gal on the ru mused to himself how he would introduce himself without seeming fresh, and the episode ended with them dancing in the o making banal talk.

Then Slade dered about marriage. Most wed the girl who was handy, their ideal. So he persuaded a sband to desert his wife, and go hunting the perfect wife. Which landed him in the arms of the police.

Scripters Sid Green and Dick Hills kept the whole thing from toppling into whimsy. But it owed a great deal to the quiet, slightly sombre, appeal of the star. Newley, with a hefty disk following, didn't sing a note in this. But he proved himself a fine clown, pathos jostling with terior high spirits to make a potent mixture.

Producer Alan Tarrant directed wittily, and so long as it can maintain its delicate balance, Gurney Slade might haunt the screen for quite a while. Otta.

CHINA AND THE WORLD
With Chou En-Lai, Felix Greene, Richard Haarris, C. , Venkata char., Roderick, MacFarquhar, Joseph C. Harsch
Producer: Derek Holyroyde
60 Mins., Thurs., 10:15 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Chief reason for this discussion program was the acquisition by C-TV of an interviewing scoop. Writer Felix Greene was granted a session with Chinese Premier Chou En-Lai in Peki . Questions were submitted in advance, and the answers read by Chou from prepared typescript. A condition for showing the film, which is controlled by the Peking Government, was that it should be run without alteration cuts. Chou's responses were simultaneously translated on th sound-track, and the film ran for close to 30 minutes.

In general, nothing novel

VARIETY - ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week ten different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U.S.

VARIETY-ARB FEATURE CHART

VARIETY's weekly feature chart, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau covers one market. Each week the 10 top rated features for the one market will be listed.

Factors which would assist distributors, agencies, stations and advertisers in determining the effectiveness of a feature show in a specific market have been included in this VARIETY chart. Listed below is such pertinent information regarding features as their stars, release year, original production company and the present distributor included wherever possible along with the title. Attention should be paid to such factors as the time and day, the high and low ratings for the measured feature period and share of audience, since these factors reflect the effectiveness of the feature and audience composition, i.e., a late show at 11:15 p.m. would hardly have any children viewers, but its share of audience may reflect dominance in that time period. In the cities where stations sell their feature programming on a multi stripped basis utilizing the same theatrical throughout the week a total rating for the total number of showings for the week is given, the total rating not taking into account the duplicated homes factor. Barring unscheduled switches in titles, the listed features for the particularly rated theatrical filmed show are as accurate as could be ascertained.

the mainstream of creative operations, through receiving cooperation on the physical production, backlot operational end.

Choice of Bob Weitman to succeed Maibaum as v.p. in charge of production was also a questionable choice. Weitman's not inconsiderable abilities lie primarily in talent relations; a tv production head, on the other hand, must be strong on the creative end—in an ability to come up with and choose program ideas, in a strong script sense, in abilities in casting and editing. These have never been Weitman's strong points. Consequently, announcement this week that Weitman's duties will be broadened makes sense in that Metro will take advantage of his experience in areas other than straight production.

At 20th-Fox, the start was made with the old "20th-Century-Fox Hour," and the effort was made with "B" picturemakers and so-so talent in charge. Then came a hiatus until two years ago, when the studio tapped Martin Manulis to head tv production. On the face of it, Manulis seemed a good choice—but he wasn't. For one thing, his heart wasn't in it—he wanted to produce features and admittedly viewed the post as a stepping-stone. For another, his talents [illegible] the direction of quality not commercial series. So [illegible] was shortlived and his record inconspicuous.

[illegible] of Huggins by 20th tv to [illegible] so Levathes claims itself a [illegible] choice for the top post, with plenty tv experience and a direct line to top company brass via hispre-Young & Rubicam role as assistant to prexy Spyros Skouras marks the first step in the right direction by the company. Huggins is a tv pro and a creator of the first order. At Warners, he produced the studio's first successful series in "Cheyenne" and thereafter created its two most successful shows, "Maverick" and "77 Sunset Strip." The WB operation hasn't been the same since he left, and 20th must benefit by his presence.

The Par Story

Paramount is the saddest story of all. In hiring Gruskin, they got a top salesman. But they neglected the studio end completely, assuming that in making coproduction deals, they could leave all production responsibilities to the indie producer. Moreover, they assigned overall responsibility to a v.p. in New York totally familiar with television, and left the major programming and policy decisions to him. That the entire effort didn't work isn't surprising; what is the fact that Gruskin actually succeeded in selling one show, though of course it's now earmarked for early cancellation.

Right now, the Par situation is a complete vacuum and will probably remain such until prexy Barney Balaban decides to hire an experienced all-round administrator to run the entire tv show, then sets able and responsible execs both at the sales and studio end with enough authority to make the decisions and deal with networks and sponsors on their own.

Warners and Columbia remain the only major companies successful in television, Warners partially because of the fortuitousness of getting the abilities of a Bill Orr, a Hugh Benson and a Huggins, but also because the company has realized that tv is a tough, fulltime business, and has acted accordingly. Disney can't be counted a tv failure—the reason he hasn't expanded as his abilities and facilities warrant is his tendency toward perfectionism, a trait which however laudable has resulted in costs far out of line with tv's ability to absorb.

Columbia got in on the ground fl[illegible] gave Screen Gems virtual complete autonomy under the banner of the able Ralph Cohn, and saw the company build and prosper. Screen Gems since has built its top personnel, and when it has gone outside, hasn't stinted in finding the best available. There's a lesson to be learned here, too.

Rod Erickson

station rep outfit in the U.S. to rep the new Canadian stations, and even, where "the price is right," acquisition by the company of tv stations.

Erickson claims to have already sold one daytime strip on a network basis for a January start, and this would be brought into Filmways as a house production. Company has already sold one vidfilm package for January, "Mr. Ed," half-hour comedy series which Studebaker-Lark has bought for spotting in 140 markets. In addition, Simon has four other pilot projects in work on the Coast.

In Canada, Erickson is partnered with Bill Byles in CanTel Productions, which will produce live-tape stanzas for the new privately owned Canadian stations which start operations the first of the year. His share of the company goes into the Filmways pot, as do his other diversified interests. Naturally, he's getting a substantial stock interest in Filmways in return for his assets.

Erickson, longtime Young & Rubicam veep, has most recently been repping Sam Goldwyn in the sale of his pix to tv; Goldwyn has cooled off in his desire to sell, however, and while Erickson's agreement has no cutoff date, to all intents and purposes he's free of that deal. If Goldwyn should decide to sell, however, Erickson's take would also go into the Filmways pot.

Schiff

value of General Toy commercials, he said. He also felt it is morally wrong to hammer so many commercials at kids in such short spaces of time, ignoring the need to entertain as well as pitch. "That's unfair advantage. We would rather spend more money then get away with contest gimmicks and what have you," he added.

"Unfortunately there's not enough interest in what the child is watching. Parents should be more aware of the programs and commercials," he went on.

Schiff said he plans to write another protesting letter to the revamped FCC. About a year ago, he said he complained to the FCC regarding overcommercialization of kiddie programs. In a responding letter, according to Schiff, the FCC said in effect that it wasn't in its province to look into the number-of-commercials issue.

tv network selling season. A pilot that CNP will probably pull off the shelf, where it was deliberately placed a few months ago, is the fully animated half-hour Bob & Ray situati produced by Goulding, Elliot & Graham. CNP should have the complete rundown of pilots (some of which will undoubtedly and up in syndication) within a fortnight.

"Angels" was sold off the bat to Conoco in 68 tv markets on alternate-week arrangement. Then Carling Brewery, which like Conoco had defected from CBS Films, bought Backus in 51 markets. CNP could have lost on such an rangement, despite the size of the regional sponsorships, if it weren't also for the fact that both series are fully sponsored on skip-weeks by local and other regional buyers. And, all told, each is sold in better than 100 cities. "RCMP" isn't quite that well off, but then it doesn't have to be, since CNP didn't undertake the original production nut.

CNP's success story in a sea of syndicated misery is all the more interesting when the firm's new state of eminence is compared with its having been, just a couple of years ago, kind of a weak sister in the NBC empire.

Incidentally, Stern said a couple of weeks ago that he'd probably continue as acting president for another several months (six or eight or maybe more). For the time, put the CNP camp in the forefront of his varied NBC activities, which ranges from merchandising to NBC International.

OREN'S OMINOUS 'OPRY' TUNE

P&G: 'Let's Hold the Line'

Procter & Gamble, a major television advertiser, is said to have notified its many advertising agencies to hold the line against AFTRA-SAG demands for in eased fees actors and performers who appear in tv commercials.

This word may have been leaked deliberately by Madison Ave., it is thought, because now is the bi-annual period when both the unions and management start mounting their propaganda guns. AFTRA and SAG, for the first time joined in a contract negotiati , are present negotiating with the networks and agency "observers" on a new TV Code contract, which includes commercial rates. The contract ends Nov. 15.

P&G is supposed to have threatened its agencies with a withdrawal from spot television, if higher rates are won by AFTRA and SAG. This, naturally, would lower agency billing figures. P&G agencies are Compton and Benton & Bowles, but there are many others.

At present, according to the word, P&G annually puts aside about $750.000 to pay the cost of actor residuals for blurbs. It was estimated by one ad source that if AFTRA gets its way in the present negotiations P&G would have to lay aside in excess of $2.000.000 to cover the blurb re-use factor. The network negotiators are apparently still working out, on the basis of the complex AFTRA blurb demands, how much it would cost if the union got all it wanted, thus making the P&G estimate merely an estimate.

Actually, the reserve could conceivably need to be $3.000,000 or $4.000.000 per annum.

French Radio, TV Threatened With Budget Axing Unless 'Anarchy' Ends

Paris, Nov. 8.

Because radio and television are ationalized, under the governmental Radiodiffusion-Television Francaise, they showed high on a recent report by a special committee, under the Ministry of Finance, which lambasted the mixed anarchy that reigns there and proposed a cutting off of the budget if things were not straightened out befor the end of '60.

Radio and tv get their income via licenses paid by set owners, and the committee opined that this would hit $98.600.000 in '61. Committee head, M. Nungesser, reported that in studying last year's budget the then head of the RTF, F. Chavanon, was asked how many employees he had and answered that it was almost impossible to answer this but guessed at 7.000 while the committee finally found it was nearer 9.297. Nungesser underscored that this showed how badly organized the whole RTF was.

In Feb. '59 the RTF was given a status of a nationalized industry rather than a civil service affair to try to ameliorate things and lead to better organization and the hiring of important talents to clear this up as well as give better shows. But Nungesser stated that this was only partially done and disorder still was the keynote of the RTF.

Nungesser also rapped the extreme partitioning between different services and the lack of cooperation this brought on. Under this system many key people were under technical and administrative departments making it hard for the creative elements to get needed people. This led to delays in locating cameramen equipment for immediate news items while jurisdictions were mapped out. It was stated that in many instances news heads got beats by laying out needed carfares, etc., from their own pockets and then finding it hard to make it up and necessitating many reports while further work was stymied at times.

Nungesser also said that fiscal reforms were necessary with each department head having full responsibility for all his needs instead of the unclear status of most workers today. Finance approved this and is now waiting for Information Minister Louis Terenoire's rebuttal, for the RTF is under his jurisdiction. Then this will be put before the National Assembly which could cut off RTF funds if positive indications of needed changes and more cohesion in the RTF were not forthcoming.

LANDAY'S D. C. POST

Washington, Nov. 8.

Jerry M. Landay became national news editor for the Westinghouse Broadcasting Co. this week. Washington Bureau chief James L. Snyder is his new boss.

Landay shifts to the key Washington post from WBC's Boston radio station, WBZ-A.

KHOW Fetches 625G

Denver, Nov. 8.

The second Denver radio station to change hands in the last fortnight, KHOW, ABC affiliate, was sold this week to the Townsend Corp., for a reported $625,000.

The new owners also own three other radio stations, WKDA, Nashville, KNOK, Ft. Worth and KITE, San Antonio, according to General Th mas B. Wilson, chairman of the board of Townsend Corp. which also owns 83⅓ interest in Resort Airlines, Inc., through which KHOW was purchased.

ATV in Bid for Moscow TV Pickup of British And Soviet Trade Fairs

London, Nov. 8.

Associated Television has started negotiations with the appropriate Soviet organizations with a view to televising the British Trade Fair in Moscow next year and the Russian State Fair which will follow at Earls Court, London. The British exhibition will be housed at Sokolniki Park, which was the venue of the American exhibition in Moscow last year.

It is also announced that the Pye Group which, incidentally, is partnered in ATV, will be displaying electronic equipment at the Moscow Fair. The company's display will include transmission equipment, a radio controlled tv camera, tv receivers which will be adapted to receive Russian transmissions, and a full range of communications equipment including radio-telephones for ground-to-air, land and marine use.

ZENITH SALES UP BUT NET IS DOWN

Chicago, Nov. 8.

Despite its having set a new consolidated sales record for the first nine months this year, Zenith Radio Corp. reports a decrease in net consolidated earnings from th same period in 1959. Sales went up 4.5% over the first nine months of last year. Net income for the period was $8,577,752, or $2.88 a share, compared with $9,888.982, or $3.15 a share, for the first three-quarters of 1959.

Decrease in profits is attributed, by Zenith, to "a continuation of unrealistic pricing and liquidations" by several principal competitors, placing pressure on Zenith's wn prices. Also, it's pointed out to stockholders, the strike last August which shut down the company's main plants had an effect on sales and profits in the third quarter.

B'CASTERS GET A 1961 ALERT

Washington, Nov. 8.

Rep. Oren Harris (D.Ark.) went to the 35th anniversary celebration for "Grand Ole Opry" and struck up the overture of what could be a sour tune for broadcasters when the next Congress gets down to business.

Harris' speech, made at the Nashville ceremonies, was released by his Washington office.

Here is the pertinent part:

"The general standard of the public interest is the foundation of the American system of broadcasting, and as early as 1927, Congress placed the basic responsibility for all matter broadcast . . in the hands of the station licensee . . . Today, we are faced with the fact that when it comes to television, network programming rather than local programming is the order of the day . . . (Quoting from a Federal communications Commission report:) ' . . . In reality, the tv station licensee has little part in the creation, production, selection and control of network program offerings.'

"Further," Harris continued, "we m st face the fact that many radio and tv stations have become speculative properties in the market place, and capital gains rather than public service to the community has become the watchword for some speculators who are broadcasters in name only.

"Under these circumstances, Congress will have to reexamine some of the premises on which our American system of broadcasting is based. Congress must ask and answer such questions as: What happens to the opportunity for local self-expression on radio and tv stations? What happens to the need for developing and using local talent in radio and tv programming? What happens to programs designed to serve minority groups and special tastes?

"Congress will have to determine whether the networks shall be held accountable as co-trustees together with individual broadcast licensees in serving the public interest. Congress will further have to decide what limitations should be placed on the transferability of broadcast station licenses.

"Certainly, we in the Congress do not want to hand control over radio and tv programming to the FCC or some other federal department or agency. And, I certainly do not believe that the American people would want us to give such a mandate to any group of Government officials no matter how admirable their background and how benevolent their intentions might be.

"On the other hand, the airwaves belong to the American people, and they are not licensed to individuals and corporations to be used exclusively for their own personal financial gain, but they are licensed so that the American people may receive the benefit of an important public service

Tucson KGUN-TV's $2,000,000 Sale

Cincinnati, Nov. 8.

A Cincy syndicate, owner of WEHT, Inc., radio and tv stations in Evansville, Ind., has purchased KGUN-TV station in Tucson for $2.000.000. Group is headed by Henry S. Hilberg, wholesale meat dealer, and the R. L. Bus mily, whisky brokers.

The Tucson station was purchased three years ago by Texas business and oil men for $533,000 its second year of operation.

Howard Duncan, formerly of Taft Broadcasting Co., here, moves up from sales manager to president of WEHT, Inc. He succeeds Edwin G. Richter, also an ex-Taft stations exec, wh becomes president and general manager of the Tucson station.

Industry Beset By Two New Strike Threats as SAG & AFTRA Contracts Expire; Call Emergency Meets

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Two new strikes in the television industry, one involving the Screen Actors Guild and the other the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists, are a step nearer realization as the two guilds reveal they have reached an impasse in current negotiations with networks, advertising agencies and producers.

SAG's contract talks cover television commercials only and are being held jointly with AFTRA. Talks between AFTRA and management, however, cover areas of television, radio, transcriptions and staff announcers, as well as commercials.

SAG is now polling its 14.000 members, asking for strike authorization. AFTRA has stated three separate membership meetings in its key cities of Los Angeles, New York and Chicago and, at the sessions, will seek strike authorization. All contracts in question expire Nov. 15.

In television, SAG's jurisdiction covers film work, with AFTRA covering live tv (and, of course, radio). Tape is handled by both unions, all network taping covered by AFTRA.

SAG national exec secretary John L. Dales, assistant Chester L. Migden and general counsel William Berger returned here over the weekend from the two-week-old New York negotiations and brought the Guild's board of directors up to date. Board thereafter voted the strike authorization ballot, though it was anticipated no vote would be necessary until membership meeting here Nov. 21. Strike authorization, given "in the event such action becomes necessary to obtain an adequate contract," requires a 75% majority approval.

According to SAG, employers "have refused to make any offer which we could in good conscience recommend to the membership. They have agreed to make pension and welfare payments, their only offer of substance, but they refuse to correct rank injustices which exist in the Guild's present commercial contract and, in fact, their wage offers are substantially below the existing rates for taped commercials."

It was reported here that AFTRA has reached an impasse in all four areas of its negotiations. Union, for instance, made some 50 proposals in the television network code alone," and it's understood agreement has yet to be reached on any of the 50. In general, working conditions appear to be the most significant areas of concern in tv, with the question of salary minimums playing a major role in the radio, transcription and staff announcers field.

AFTRA's Los Angeles meeting will be held Nov. 13, with New York and Chicago sessions set for Nov. 11. Claude L. McCue, director of AFTRA's western region, here for local negotiations, returns to New York for the national negotiations which got underway Oct. 11 on behalf of AFTRA's 15,000 members.

B-M Yanks 'Father' Coin

"Father Knows Best" apparently isn't as strong a rerun attraction —or maybe because it's a Tuesday night attraction— as it was a first-runner on Monday nights at CBS-TV. As a result, the show is losing one-third of its sponsorship, with Bristol-Myers pulling out after 13 weeks, on Dec. 27.

Drug company had two alternate-week minutes in the show, or one-third of total sponsorship. So far, Scott Paper and Kellogg are holding onto their thirds.

War-Ace Phil Cochran, 'Terry & the Pirates' Inspiration, to KDKA

Pittsburgh, Nov. 8.

Phil Cochran, whose wartime exploits as an Air Force Colonel was the inspiration for the Flip Cochran character in "Terry and the Pirates," will soon become a regular on KDKA-TV here. While no date has been set for his air debut, he has been making tapes regularly for his already set sponsor.

Cochran is an Erie, Pa., trucking executive and a simple series of events starting with a Jack Paar clowning attempt to link him with Betty White led to his signing for the show. His brother, Tom, is a talent coordinator for Paar and had him on the late show twice last summer when Paar tried to make a match between him and Miss White. He came to Pittsburgh when the singer was appearing in "The King and I" for the Civic Light Opera and she introduced him to Tad Reeves, general manager of KDKA-TV who conceived the new show Cochran is going to do.

$3,750,000 'VERDICT' SUIT IS TOSSED OUT

Los Angeles, Nov. 8.

Damage suit for $3,750,000 brought against CBS in Superior Court by writers Homer Canfield, Ludwig Gerber and John E. Miller over CBS' "The Verdict Is Yours" teleseries has been found in favor of the network. Decision was handed down by jury after viewing a segment of series.

Writers, who also charged breach of contract, claimed series was based on material they had submitted for another show.

Wagner Exits Bartell, Sets Up His Own Org

San Francisco, Nov. 8.

Morton J. Wagner, exec veepee and director of Bartell Broadcasting Corp., has resigned to head a newly-formed broadcasting group, which plans to buy at least two radio stations by year's end.

A 20-year broadcast veteran, the 35-year-old Wagner has been Bartell director for the last eight years. For the group, he opened and operated WMTV, Madison, Wis.; WAKE, Atlanta; WYDE, Birmingham; and KYA, San Francisco.

Lee Bartell, managing director of the Bartell group, will take over management of KYA in addition to his supervision of KCBQ, San Diego.

Westheimer Quirs Texas

Houston, Nov. 8.

David Westheimer, novelist and longtime tv-radio editor for The Houston Post, has quit to take an editorial post with the Literary Projects Co. in Beverly Hills.

Miss Edith Honholt, who has been assistant tv-radio editor, will step up to editorship.

WGN's Chi Symph Sales

Chicago, Nov. 8.

WGN-TV's syndication sales arm notched seven more markets for "Great Music From Chicago," bringing the current total of takers to 12. Skein for sale is the one aired last year on WGN-TV, the one that copped a Peabody Award.

Latest purchasers of the hour-long taped show, featuring the Chicago Symphony Orch and guest artists and conductors, are WNTA, New York; WSM-TV, Nashville; WFMY, Greensboro, N. C.; KTVU, Oakland; KGW, Portland, Ore.; WAVY, Norfolk, Va.; and KING, Seattle.

CAN IT SE

Highest with Women:

More women were reached more often by The Play of the Week than any top-rated network program in the New York area, according to survey data by the A. C. Nielsen Company for a typical height-of-the-season eight-week period, ending February 7, 1960. It topped all network programs, bar none, with a total of 36,012,173 women viewer home impressions – fully 12,306,101 more than were attracted by the second-ranking Wagon Train. Can The Play of the Week sell soap, cosmetics, household goods, or anything else aimed at the feminine contingent? Put that down as the most academic question of the year.

CAN IT SELL CIGARETTES?

Highest with Adults:

When you examine the figures for adults – the ones with the real purchasing power, not possessed by the juvenile set – you have the real clincher. The audience for The Play of the Week is 98% adult. Its delivered audience of adult viewer home impressions totaled 59,439,469 – the highest of any top-rated network program in the New York area, for the eight-week period studied. Reach the people with the dollars to spend... for higher sales and profits on the most economical basis... through The Play of the Week.

CAN IT SELL EVERYTHING?

No. 2 in reaching more different homes in the New York area:

Television's foremost dramatic series, The Play of the Week, attracted more different homes than any other top-rated network program in New York except Gunsmoke, according to the Nielsen data for the period studied. It attracted more different homes (2,780,860) than these highest rated television programs in the New York area: The Untouchables, Maverick, 77 Sunset Strip, Father Knows Best, U.S. Steel-Circle Theatre, What's My Line? Have Gun, Will Travel and Ed Sullivan show.

THE PLAY of the WEEK

It is later than you think, Mr Station Manager and people (in 1960) are brighter than you think. A new wave is sweeping the land. A wave expressing the hunger and clamor for finer television entertainment that will stimulate people's minds, nourish their souls, prevent them from being reduced to pablum.

Dreamers, are we? Hopeless idealists and utopianists, too? Well, Mr. Station Manager, perhaps you're the one that's in that Ivory Tower – out of touch with the mainstream and pulsebeat of the nation. Want figures? We've got them! Read them (at left) and rejoice, not weep. Read them – and you'll discover that if you want the vehicle to sell soap or cosmetics to women ... cigarettes or cars to adults, or anything – from soup to nuts – you can do it via The Play of the Week.

It's the vehicle that delivers for you class-in-the-mass ... on the most economical basis possible. And it will deliver, too, a vast audience with a plus no other television program can claim – a loyalty and responsiveness from Play of the Week viewers that translate themselves into extra sales and extra profits. Take a good look at the 56 stations which are presently alive ... and kicking up their heels for joy ... for being associated with television's most spectacular dramatic series, The Play of the Week!

Daytime: Looking and Listening

By THYRA SAMTER WINSLOW

With critics expressing disappointment over nighttime television, it would be redundant and ridiculous for me to criticize new daytime tv entertainment. Outside of a once-a-month program, important new shows are non-existent. So daytime listeners and watchers will have to be satisfied with mildly pleasant live and nearly-live fun and quiz shows, soap operas, serials and re-reruns, with some good radio and an occasional bright tv spot.

Certainly, one of the better daytime television programs is that of Dr. Joyce Brothers. She is on at one—and it doesn't matter which one— for she's on both a.m. and p.m., at one o'clock, on WNBC-TV. Dr. Brothers has a Doctorate in Psychology and she got her start in television by winning a lot of money answering sports questions on a quiz show. As she's never been up publicly for questioning, she undoubtedly answered the questions honestly and without rigging. Which brings up what seems like an interesting angle. Some of the less fortunate boys and girls are again up for perjury. With tears in their eyes and voices, the poor dears, who got the answers before they got the questions, and gladly grabbed the loot, are so sorry about the whole regrettable affair. Expose meant losing all those good jobs they'd never have landed without the publicity of the quiz programs, to say nothing of sudden wealth. But not one of them has repaid or offered to repay any of the moneys they couldn't have made any other way. They paid part to the government. And undoubtedly spent part on unaccustomed luxuries. But surely they must have saved something! Shouldn't they hand it back to the companies, who could give it to charity? Which, luckily for her, has little to do with Dr. Brothers.

Dr. Brothers offers enough variations of psychology to make her programs decidedly interesting and rewarding. She reads two letters each day, presumably from readers, and covers everything from adulterers to zealots, including most angles of modern living, the frigid woman—quite as well as the first of that once-a-month-program, juvenile delinquency, youngmarrieds, old age. Her advice, though neither drastic nor startling, is sane, sensible and understanding. Her programs are so full of ideas that writers of soap operas and serials could stretch the answers to any one of the letters into half a dozen installments—and probably do. It is impossible to determine how helpful her program is to the emotionally distressed, but as most afternoon listeners love to pry into the lives of other people, these glimpses, seemingly into true life problems must delight the Peeping Peggys. Incidently, either the makeup man on NBC or the extra money Dr. Brothers is making or her consciousness of her audiences has changed Dr. Brothers' appearance for the better. She is chic, smart and poised.

At one o'clock, at the same time Dr. Brothers is on her daytime program, there's a simple little quiz show that certainly is neither rigged nor fraught with payola, and that has neither social nor psychological signifiance. This is "About Faces," with the genial Ben Alexander, no longer a member of the police force, but a pleasant master of ceremonies. This is on WABC-TV. One of the features of the show is a large jigsaw puzzle, showing an incomplete puzzle—part of a face. Three people from the audience try to guess, in turn, to whom the face belongs, a piece of the puzzle being added before the second and third guesses. The face usually belongs to a feminine movie star, and every at-home watcher probably guesses the identity before the first guess, gets a nice feeling of superiority—and wishes she were there to cop off the unimportant prizes. Then one person—usually someone of fair importance, is confronted with someone from the past. One man, one day, was asked to guess when and where he'd met the pretty girl who stood near him. It turned out he'd been her baby sitter, when she was a year old. Peter Graves, back from Australia, where he'd filmed "Whiplash," which, by some strange coincidence, will be shown on ABC-TV, tried to guess the identity of another pretty girl. She turned out to be a distant cousin he hadn't seen since, years before, they were at the wedding of another relative. One day, a boy with an incurable kidney illness was brought in, given simple questions and won toys and—you guessed it, the ubiquitous camera. There aren't too many heart-touching cases, not nearly so many as on some of the other daytime programs—nor are the rewards too generous. Ben Alexander's warm personality helps make this time-killer a pleasant though not remarkable half hour.

"Daywatch" is back on WNTA-TV, Channel 13, an independent station. This rather puzzling program runs from 10 in the morning until 4:30 p.m., has canned music, some of it rather pleasing, typewritten news and temperature — new, bits of hints—household and beauty, taped, by Richard Willis, drawing contests and games for children, a miscellany of facts, fiction and commercials. This program is used, it is said, in grocery stores, though I've never known anyone who has encountered it. I can't imagine watching "Daywatch" for any length of time—but it may prove an interesting time killer as well as a source of information.

Brasselle's Package

Keefe Brasselle, under contract as a performer to CBS-TV, has turned packager as well and has pitched an hourlong private eye series, "Joey Trouble," at the network. He doesn't plan to appear in the series.

Project is currently in the outline stage, with possibility that CBS will okay a script, and if collaborating with Brasselle on the package and is handing the scripting. If the show jells into pilot stage, it would be a Brasselle package in association with CBS-TV.

Doerfer plan. Local ABC outlet is answering its every-third-Tuesday obligation to the web's "Expedition" series with a science-oriented entry created by the team that did "Inside Argonne," a distinguished local documentary, earlier this year. Ross and McElroy apparently have the flair for science shows, and they've got a lot to work with in Chi, where research is widely conducted by government agencies, universities, medical institutions and private industry.

Episode caught was on research into dreams, specifically that being done by Drs. Allan Rechtschaffen and William Offenkrantz of the U. of Chicago's Dept. of Psychiatry. Cameras exerpted a nightlong experiment with two subjects, each of whom was wakened whenever his brainwaves (recorded on a graph) showed he was dreaming. The scientists termed it "dream watching." They were lucid in their explanations and fascinating with their information.

It came out, for instance, that in the first stages of deep sleep people still think they're awake, and that talking is done from deep sleep rather than from dreams. The dreams in the early part of the night tend to relate to the ordinary concerns of waking life, while those dreamed later tend to involve the wishes and fears of the unconscious. Their method of dream watching, the doctors said, gave them a total picture of their patients' dream life, which clearly is more useful than a haphazard sampling.

They eschewed Freud as much as possible and ventured only slightly into dream interpretation, but they did speak quite frankly of sex dreams, making the subject acceptable for the 6 p.m. juve audience by couching it in scientific terms. Program did not set out to explore thoroughly the subject of dreams but merely to show some of the experiments being done. On that score it was most interesting.

Norm Ross, who did the reporting, was never at a loss for a pertinent question. Les.

315 Immunity On Ike's Frisco Talk

Washington, Nov. 8.

Federal Communications Commission has held that the equal time requirement of Section 315 does not apply to a speech made by President Eisenhower in San Francisco last month. It upheld the refusal of five S. F. radio and tv stations which aired the speech to bow to the equal time demands of the California Democratic State Central Committee.

However, FCC called attention to the Section 315 proviso (part of the 1959 Section 315 Amendment) which obliges broadcasters to "afford reasonable opportunity for the discussion of conflicting views on issues of public importance."

The President's speech before San Francisco's Commonwealth Club Oct. 20 was dubbed non-political by the White House, but the Californi Democratic committee disputed this classification and complained to FCC when the stations denied its equal time request. In a wire to the committee, FCC said:

"It is the Commission's views that a speech alleged to be political should be considered in the light of whether it involves a discussion of controversial issues of public importance. If it does, then the station has an obligation to afford reasonable opportunity for the presentation of opposing views."

FCC pointed out that the obligation to air opposing points of view is largely left up to the discretion of the broadcaster, and as a matter of policy, the Commission doesn't order a station to discuss specific issues or provide air time for specific groups or individuals.

As for the equal time issue, FCC simply said that since the President is not a candidate, it does not apply.

The stations which carried the speech were KRON-TV, KPIX-TV, KGO and KGO-TV and KCBS.

3 More Witnesses Appeal FCC Right To Subpoena Them in Coast Probe

Washington, Nov. 8.

Three more witnesses who balked during the recent network programming inquiry in L. A. have lodged appeals with Federal Communications Commission.

Dick Fishell, Mary Rothschild and Betty Langley of the p.r. firm of Dick Fishell & Associates asked FCC to quash subpoenas ordering them to appear and produce information at the proceeding. FCC Chief Hearing Examiner James D. Cunningham, the inquiry's presiding officer, refused their request Oct 25, and they declined to answer questions at the probe.

Their petition, filed by attorney Oliver B. Schwab of Beverly Hills, came on the heels of a similar move by MCA v.p. Taft Schreiber who sought relief from the Commission after walking out of the programming inquiry in defiance of Cunningham.

Schwab cited four reasons in asking Commission to overrule Cunningham and quash the subpoenas

—The ground rules as laid down by Cunningham and FCC attorney Ashbrook Bryant, who's conducting the inquiry, don't give witnesses proper access to legal counsel in violation of the Administrative Procedures Act. Contrary to Cunningham's stance, an attorney representing a witness has the right to raise objections and otherwise speak out when he believes his client is being abused, petiti . claimed.

—Nothing in the Commission's orders authorizing the programming inquiry furnish any basis for going into the p.r. field, which Schwab contended was wholly outside its scope.

—If his clients were forced to testify, they would be required to divulge confidential business information without any guarantee of non-disclosure. The names of companies with which Fishell does business as well as detailed financial arrangements would be brought out contrary to the firm's best interests.

The subpoenas are "oppressive" and should be quashed because they are vague about the information sought. To be valid, Schwab argued, subpoenas must spell out specifically the material to be offered.

Batjac Restraint Bid Vs. WB Is Refused

Batjac Productions bid to enjoin Seven Arts Associated from licensing seven Warner Bros. pix to tv was denied by N. Y. Supreme Court Justice Owen McGivern.

Judge McGivern said in his decision that Warners and Seven Arts were "acting within their rights in licensing the pictures." However, he went on to say that "the facts disclose the need for an early trial."

Batjac challenged the right of WB to make a tv licensing deal involving its pix, five of which star John Wayne. They are "Big Jim McLain," "Island in the Sky," "Hondo," "The High and the Mighty," and "Blood Alley." The others are "Plunder of the Sun," starring Glenn Ford, and "Track of the Cat," starring Robert Mitchum and Tab Hunter.

Brit. Vidpix Quota To Get An Airing

London, Nov. 8.

The proposal, mooted a couple of months back, that there should be a quota regulation covering vidpix, analogous to the quota act relating to the showing of British films in cinemas, will figure in the memoranda to be submitted to the Pilkington Committee by the Federation of British Film Makers and the British Film Producers Association. Committee is the one appointed by the Government to consider the whole future of sound radio and tv in Britain.

General shape of the vidpix quota scheme, as at present envisaged, is that of all tv fictional films shown not less than a given percentage should be of British origin, this percentage to be subject to review each year. The British pix would have to be made specially for video and of recent origin, this stipulation being made to exclude vaulties, and the quota would be so calculated to vary in peak and offpeak viewing hours.

New Selmur Execs

Peter G. Robinson has become vicepresident in charge of programs and Leon I. Mirell vicepresident in charge of administration and business affairs for Selmur Productions, ABC's wholly-owned film-tape production subsidiary. They were upped by Selmur prexy Selig J. Seligman.

Before the push upwards, Robinson was program director for Selmur and supervisor of "Day In Court" and "Morning Court," the company's two ABC-TV daytime entries. Mirell, from MGM-TV, joined Selmur when it was formed two months ago.

Monte Carlo TV Fest Off Till Jan.

Paris, Nov. 8.

The committee of the first International Television Festival, to be held in Monte Carlo under the patronage of Prince Rai ier, has put it off from late this month to January '61 due to the troubles of various participants in readying their vidfilm entries on time. The fest will now be held from Jan. 16 to 21.

The affair was originally skedded to begin Mon. (14). Invited worldwide press, and the local and visiting public, will be allowed to see the showings as well as a special jury. There will be six awards for the video film, taped and kinescoped programs plus three special prizes. These will be made up by Cartier.

Titles and publicity materials must be sent in by Dec. 1 and the films themselves by Dec. 15. All programs will be shown via Tele Monte Carlo arranging large screen beaming at a local film house, the Gaumont, plus many to be shown on tv itself. Prizes will be handed out Jan. 28 at a special gala at the Monte Carlo Opera House. Awards will be known officially Jan. 23. Several Yank tv networks have supposedly made bids for rights to televise the prize ceremonies.

Cranton's NTA Slot

Harold Cranton has been named director of advertising and promotion for NTA o&o stations and spot sales, effective immediately. NTA's sole stations now are WNTA-TV, AM and FM, Newark-N. Y.

Cranton came over from Metropolitan Broadcasting, where he had been director of advertising and promotion.

SERIES ON ESKIMOS AS CANADA ENTRY

Toronto, Nov. 8.

Contract has been inked between the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. here and Robert Anderson Associates, a Canadian film company, whereby latter will produce a series of six 30-minute documentaries dealing with the last of Canada's primitive Eskimos.

Camera crews will travel immediately to the Arctic Circle to record the customs and culture of the Eskimos—who have not been influenced in their way of life by the white man. Tentatively called "The Last Hunters," series will be presented on the CBC tv web.

Director is Douglas Wilkinson, who has lived with the Eskimos and one of the few white men who has been adopted by the tribe.

WGA-West Sets New TV Execs

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Fenton Earnshaw, board member, replaces Kay Lenard as prexy of television branch of Writers Guild of America-West, and Hy Freedman steps up from secretary-treasurer to succeed Joel Kane as vp. Pair were named to posts last week by board of directors, who also selected Mary McCall Jr., Barry Trivers and Christopher Knopf to fill three of the six vacancies left by recent recall movement voted by membership. Both Miss Lenard and Kane were swept out in recall ballot.

Eight writers now comprise the board, also constituting a quorum. Next step will be nomination of a slate of writers to fill the remaining three gaps on board, with nominating committee, headed by board member David Harmon, already set: Albert Aley, William Cowley, Doris Gilbert, Jerry Gottler, John Hawkins, Al Martin, Sloan Wibley and Henry Sharp.

Election for the three remaining board posts cannot take place until a 30-day period has followed announcement of nominating slate. During the 30-day period a two-week period will be allowed for nomination by membership petition. If all goes as anticipated, election should be held during first week of December.

WGA constitution provides up to three board spots may be filled by appointment, with remaining to be filled by election. Five board members—Earnshaw, Harmon, Nate Monaster, Freedman and Phil Leslie—were left after the recall which ousted six board members and officers. Leslie takes over the secretary-treasurer post vacated by Freedman.

In accepting post of prexy, Earnshaw made a statement to Guild members, calling for unity and listing ways the tv branch must now move forward. Two of the specifics he mentioned were protecting Writers' new contract and dealing with strike-breaking writers.

New UAA Deals

United Artists Associated has made deals in 18 markets for its pix and cartoons.

Station sales of UAA features include WKRC, Cincinnati; WBIR, Knoxville; WEAU, Eau Claire, Wisc.; KCTV, San Angelo, Tex.; and KTVO, Ottumwa, Ia.

"Popeye" and Warner Bros. cartoons were sold to WNEW-TV, N.Y., WTTG, Washington; WMT, Cedar Rapids; WSBA, York, Pa.; and WHP, Harrisburg, Pa.

ADVENTURES OF WILLIAM TELL
With Conrad Phillips, Jennifer Jayne, Richard Rogers, Willoughby Goddard, Edwin Richfield, Alfred Burke
Producer-Writer: Ralph Smart
Director: Terry Bishop
Distributor: National Telefilm Associates
30 Mins.; Sun., 6 p.m.
KABC-TV (film)

Ask any kid, or adult for that matter, who William Tell was and you'll be told right off that he was the guy who shot the apple off his son's head. This makes him a big hero with all ages and despite the early Sunday evening slotting of this syndie on KABC-TV, it could hit a good core of audience.

As with these imports from abroad (this from England) in the category of action-adventure, they are given more sweep than the domestic brand (shot on back lots). The actors may be some Joe you don't know but act they can in the British tradition. Sunday night's overture to William Tell drummed up enough action to send it on its 39-week way with a good splurge of derring-do. The suspense element is built-in, the home sitters awaiting the night when Tell will draw taut his cross bow and split the apple dead-center.

For openers, Tell was marked for death by a pair of hired killers as the price of liberty for doing in the Austrian butcher prince. They gain Tell's confidence but their perfidy is discovered in the nick of time when huge boulders are flung at him. There are 38 more episodes to go so Tell turns the tables and the assassins are rocked out of their black deed. Young Tell, one whose head will rest the apple, had a bead on the conspirator just in case the stone missed its mark.

Conrad Phillips as Tell, Jennifer Jayne, his wife, and Richard Rogers as young Tell, perform capably. KABC-TV was guilty of twice slotting spot commercials back-to-back. Helm.

CBS' Virgin Is. Sales

VITV, new tv station on the Virgin Islands, has made a deal with CBS Films for 10 series. Deal was negotiated between Charles Michelson, representing the station, and Ralph Baruch, CBS Films foreign topper.

Series include "Annie Oakley," Phil Silvers, "Perry Mason," "Trackdown," "Border Patrol," "Whirlybirds," "San Francisco Beat," "Honeymooners" and "I Love Lucy."

Des Moines—Charles W. Stone, Wilmington, Del., has been named general manager of radio station KIOA, Des Moines, and replaces J. C. Dowell, who has been appointed v.p. in charge of national sales for Public Radio Corp.—KIOA's parent firm.

Minnesota Mining & Mfg. has cut the price of raw video tape by 10%, the fourth price reduction in the past two years. Standard roll of hourlong tape, when purchased in lots of 48 or more, now costs $205.57, compared with the previous level of $228.41.

In all, the four price cuts have reduced the cost of the tape by some 33%; an hour reel originally sold in 1956 for $306.77 in the volume lots. 3M's ascribes the cut to improved production methods. Same hourlong reel purchased in lots of one to five runs $233.60.

Television Bureau of Advertising has finally started its long-sought "commercial library." Outfit, which moved from the Newsweek building on Madison Ave. to Time-Life's old Rockfeller Center building, has gotten the space and in the three months since the move has laid in 2,000 tv commercials on tape and film.

Idea of TvB's topper Pete Cash is to build a commercial library thousands of times its present size and arrange the spots by category, so that advertisers can borrow freely from each others old ideas. He's letting all advertisers use the library whenever they want to and, to make things comfortable for them, he's built a screening room in the offices.

Jewish Theological Seminary, a longtime NBC associate, last Sunday (6) honored the network as JTS' and NBC's collaborative effort, "The Eternal Light," entered its 10th tv year. NBC chairman Robert W. Sarnoff accepted a citation for the network, which JTS said had "enriched Judaism as a faith, and American democracy as a citadel of cultural and religious freedom."

Citation was signed by Herbert Lehman, who is chairman of the JTS board of governors, Louis Finkelstein, chancellor of JTS, and Alan Stroock, chairman of the board of directors.

"Top Ten Dance Party," th "live" tv series slanted for teenagers, started its sixth year in syndication.

The show, produced by Alan Sands and packaged by Victor & Richards, is sponsored in the main by local soft drink bottlers, plus several department stores. Some of the sponsors have been with the show three or four years, and in one case—the Coca-Cola Co. of Memphis—for over five years.

Recently, the Jiffy Pop-Pop Corn Co. bought segments in many of the "Top Ten" markets.

between technical unions, but that was cleared up by 4 p.m.

But AT&T finally came through with the lines at 4:30 p.m., enabling Kennedy to finish his Manchester tour and to appear via WMUR on ABC-TV at 6 p.m. And because the Dem didn't feel up to three consecutive telecasts (he had decided not to tape the 6:45 NBC stanza), the NBC show was rescheduled from 6:30 to 6:45 (via simultaneous feed with CBS). He then rescheduled again for the last time, taking quarter hours on CBS at 6:30 and at 7 and on NBC at 7.

When it was thought at 2:10 p.m. Kennedy was going to emanate from Boston, ABC-TV dispatched to Boston two executives in case the Dems had any major problems. According to all available information, the ABC men were still in Boston when Kennedy spoke from Manchester. (There wasn't a plane from Boston to Manchester in time to get the web officials to Kennedy in time for the telecasting).

in the main, than "Peter Gunn" says nothing.

"Block," the shorter of the two, was presented as the opener with Walter Matthau, Orson Bean, Larry Hagman and Nina Wilcox working over an eccentric trifle that started no place, went around the block, and ended no place. But the cast was good and the "Block" was short enough to be durable.

As a utty Hollywood scribe, Matthau was fine, but that was during "Block." His strong personality didn't seem to be as well suited to the role of the poet in "My Heart's in the Highlands." As the bugle playing old man (his music was a series of dirges, meant to pass for sweetness), Myron McCormick, dressed up in a Santa Claus beard, was grating. Eddie Hodges, as the son of the literally starving poet, was warm and winning, which was all the more reason for wanting to punch his individualistic father right in the nose for preferring poetry to worldly things. Saroyan believes "people want poetry, but they don't know it." This may be true, but Saroyan didn't convince at least one viewer; his strange world of individualism was unreal, not whimsical; annoying, not provocative.

SONGS OF OUR POLITICS
With John Harrington, Northwestern U. Glee Club, WBBM Orch
Producer-Director: Allen Burns
Writer: Marty Marcus
Music Director: Frank Smith
60 Mins., Sun. (6), 7 p.m. (CST)
CBS, from Chicago (WBBM)

As a mood piece for the political season, "Songs of Our Politics" was a worthy CBS entry, tracing the evolution of Presidential campaign ditties from the homage to George Washington, per Handel, to "I Like Ike," per Irving Berlin. Show was created by the pubaffairs department of WBBM, the CBS o&o in Chi, and like the earlier "Ballad of the North and South," it earned an airing on the network because the subject matter is national and the quality of the show professional.

It proved a unique and entertaining way to rummage through U. S. history, and Frank Smith's musical arrangements managed to capture, whether accurrately or not, the distinct flavor of each political era. Of particular interest was the evolvement of the songs from stately tributes to electioneering razzamatazz, with their use as derisive propaganda beginning as early as 1840 (when Van Buren was given the politician's needle to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne"). Not all the songs were tuneful or interesting of themselves, but the selections were fairly brief, and in tapestry they made for a fascinating excursion into political Americana.

Sole point of cavil is that the lyrics were seldom clear enough to be understood, a fault which falls either on the Northwestern U. Glee Club or on the sound engineers. Whichever, the haziness of the words cost the show a vital dimension.

In all other respects, however, it was expertly done. The Northwestern singers, with male and female soloists, gave out stout-heartedly; and under Smith's baton the WBBM orch gave the score a spirited reading. John Harrington was a proper narrator, mature-voiced and not overly dramatic, for Marty Marcus' intelligent script.

VICE—DADE COUNTY
Producer: Brad Sherman
Technical Director: Lee Manson
30 Mins., Oct. 5, 6:30 p.m.
WCKR, Miami

Under supervision of news director Brad Sherman, WCKR newsmen Dave Crane and Bill Paine worked undercover and via interviews with Miami officials to compile a bold report on the city's B-girl and prostie rackets

As clearly indicated by this well-documented and expertly put together half hour, Miami's vice setup is American traditional for "open cities." From officials, the newsmen gathered a fascinating conglomeration of straight talk and double talk. Interspersed were undercover tapes featuring B-girls and call girls, talks with tourists who had been subjected to the gouge and commentary on facts and figures concerning the rackets.

Angry director of the Greater Miami Crime Commission Dan Sullivan put the finger of blame on the cops. He said the B-girl joints clearly operated outside the law and there had to be a payoff or they wouldn't flourish. Miami's police chief countered with "we're doing all we can." He said about 90 cases had been instituted, but "legal loopholes" made prosecution tough. He pointed out that Miami had closed up its red light district in 1954.

The chief's remarks were followed by a Grand Jury report that the city's prostitution was a $50,000,000 a year racket, and a recording of a phone call to a call-girl's answering service and the follow-up negotiations, including bickering over price ($50 a night, which "I can make right at my doorstep").

Other graphic bits included an interview with a Ft. Lauderdale business man who bandied a credit said. Chou reiterated that Formosa was part of China and there could be no bargaining about it. He blamed the U.S. for world tension, and dwelt on his own desire for peaceful co-existence. In fact, his tone was firm, but not belligerent. He scoffed at the suggestion of differences with the Soviet Union, emphasizing that an attack against any member of the Socialist bloc would involve China.

Chou blamed American domination of U.N. for his exclusion, and was drawn out on China's population problem. There's a two percent population increase in China each year, but, Chou claimed, this could not lead to aggressive policies outside his territory. Both agriculture and industry are expanding at the rate of around 10 percent annually under the Red regime.

Main conclusion from all this for the outside world was that Chou was not a man to tangle with, if only because his position was firm and he wouldn't budge from it. The rest of the program's scheduled hour was made up of comment from experts. America's Joseph C. Harsch (NBC) took the orthodox Government view that the first move must come from China. India's C. S. Venkatatachar opined that China should be met with understanding. And local authority Roderick MacFarquhar took a middle view.

But the program was made by the Chou disclosures—even though they weren't as fever-raising as they might have been. Otta.

THE TWO FACES OF JAPAN
With Tom Harrison, Shigeko Yamasaki, Seichi Kubota, Uzuki Shoji, Shizu Yamaoka, Inijiro Asanuma
Director: Peter Morley
Writer: Cyril Bennett
60 Mins., Wed., 9:35 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London

No more revealing picture of presentday Japan has been offered the British public than this expertly produced 60-minuter, with its visual and verbal emphasis throughout on the curious fusion of East and West that forms the country's social pattern. Whether or not it made ratings, bucking peaktime fare is neither here nor there. The job was eminently worth doing, and was eminently well done with a technical perfection—in camerawork, sound, and especially editing—that calls for a round of applause.

If anything was lacking, it was a recurrent restatement of the theme: that the Japanese, whatever occidental ways they may be absorbing, still return to their time-honored customs at home, still exhibit a singleminded dedication to some inner feudal force, still cling to their own code of morality. True enough, the camera illustrated these facts constantly, but nonetheless the emphasis on the people's bedrock immutability did not come through clearly enough to give the payoff comment—that Japan may change again to a "way of life much older and much uglier"—the proper inevitability.

The script was beautifully conceived, picking out four individuals and illustrating their activities and reactions. Kimona-clad housewife shopped in a supermarket, fashion model doffed her shoes on entering her paper-walled home, and so on. Impact moments included the assassination of opposition leader Asanuma who, in an interview shortly before his death, gave his reasons for opposing close links with the U. S. Incidentally said reasons, which seemed to make some sense, were not afterwards explored by the program, which seemed a grave omission even though it's realized that an hour's show doesn't give unlimited scope for exhaustive investigation.

Tom Harrison did some competent interlinking, but the most eloquent storyteller throughout was the camera. Erni.

FRIEDHOEFE
(Cemeteries)
With Rene Deltgen, Bum Krueger, Heinz Reincke, Josef Sieber, Wolfgang Stumpf, Ursula Lyn, Hans-Helmut Dickow, others
Producer: Hessischer Rundfunk
Director: Rolf Haedrich
Writers: Marek Hlasko, Helmut Krapp, Rolf Haedrich
110 Mins.; Thurs.; 8:25 p.m.
W-German TV, from Frankfurt

Despite directorial and other flaws, "Cemeteries" emerged as one of the most interesting and important programs of the season for which the acting and, in particular, the literary original can be made responsible. "Cemeteries" was written by Marek Hlasko who, some years back, was hailed as the star of Poland's young writer generation until he fell into disgrace with the Commie regime there. Hlasko left his country and never returned. "Cemeteries" was published in the Parisian emigration paper, "Kultura." The Commie authorities in Poland certainly didn't like his frank (on Communism) piece and called him a "traitor."

"Cemeteries" is a heavy attack against the Stalinistic system that ruled Poland until Gomulka. In the form it was presented via the W-German video, one may describe it as heavy anti-Commie stuff. But, basically, Hlasko leaves no doubt about his (at least when he wrote this) feelings: One should save Communism from the Commies. Also, his big love for his mother country, Poland, becomes very much evident in this.

Central figure here is Kowalski, a faithful adherent of Communist ideologies, with whom, at least in parts, can be identified as the author himself. Piece shows how even a convinced Commie can get, quite innocently, into the treadmill of a totalitarian system. For a silly reason, Kowalski is thrown out of the party. His own son turns away from him, his daughter is even driven to suicide because she too had to feel the consequences of her father's "betrayal." Kowalski, who also loses his job, is finished. And what's so ironical about his fate: he, in fact, never betrayed the Party.

The unusual title ("Cemeteries") tries to make this plausible: The inhuman system as it is executed in Communist countries doesn't need idealists but just blind followers. He who starts thinking might get, at least some day, different opinion about the Red party's ideologies. It's shown here how those people land, symbolically, in cemeteries.

Hlasko, who's still remarkably young (27), has given his work a fascinating, nearly documentary sharpness. His characters (Kowalski's pals are all former partisans who fought against the Germans) come very much alive.

There's however, no denying that both the adaptation for the tv screen as well as the direction tended to exaggerate the various details depicted in the original. Offering had often a false satirical and parodistical touch; also, at least occasionally, gave the impression of distortion. It speaks for Hlasko's work that even those flaws couldn't kill its message and literary depth. Also in this form, "Cemeteries" is gripping, never dull and, of course, very depressing. Hans.

Armchair Theatre

"My Representative," aired Sunday (30) by ABC-TV in this weekly drama series, was a first play for tv by Kenneth Jupp, and it shouldn't be the last. Which comment is intended as an encouragement, not as an accolade, because "My Rep" was in fact a dire failure, but showed considerable writing merits along the way before disintegrating into cliche and near-bathos.

The plot had a young, ambitious salesman, Ronnie Page (Paul Massie) eager to find a line of goods that would, in the peddling, give him something "useful" to do in life and promote him materially too. When the proprietor of his small firm, Herbert Pratt (Laurence Hardy) got a lien on a smash fashion item from the Orient, Ronnie made use of the new contacts then managed to grab a top job with a major house. Said house eventually got the fashion item for itself, Ronnie heard a few home truths about loyalty versus self-seeking from an ex-colleague, and w full of bitterness when the ruined Pratt shot himself.

Maybe the big fault was in over-condensation and over-simplification in the third act, where everything tumbled into a neatly conventional pattern in almost absurd style. Till then, though, there was much to arrest in the interplay of character, sly shafts of humor and often sparkling dialog. Performances were as good as the best of the material, with Paul Massie showing charm and assurance as Ronnie, Helen Cherry scoring with delightful feminine authority as the gal in the big outfit who lured him away from the small one, Sylvia Kay sympathetically essaying the role of a loyal girl friend who finally says goodbye, and Glyn Owen offering some standout stuff as the ex-colleague who tells the erring one what's what. Direction showed insight, and the settings were lush. Erni.

There's No End To Beaumont TV Case

Washington, Nov. 8.

For the fourth time, the Federal Communications Commission reached the decision that Beaumont Broadcasting Corp., shall have the Beaumont, Tex., television channel 6 grant—and the stormy case seems headed back into federal court agai

It is the oldest tv license grant still in controversy.

Leonard Marks, Washington attorney for the Enterprise Co., wn- of Beaumont's two daily newspapers and the competing applicant for channel 6, said he will appeal the latest FCC decision to court.

The Court of Appeals has twice remanded the case to FCC for further consideration. But before it ever got into court, FCC handed down two decisions on it. All four decisions favored Beaumont Broadcasting.

WORK BEGINS ON EIRE TV STUDIOS

Dublin, Nov. 8.

Building starts this month on first stages for Radio Eireann's tv studios at Montrose, four miles from city centre. Two studios are the first block which is to be ready for service by November, 1961. Designer is Michael Scott, architect of new Abbey Theatre on which site clearance work also started this month.

Transmitter construction is in progress with completion of main transmitter the Dublin Mountains due in April. Four satellite transmitters are also to be built to provide countrywide coverage.

Part of area to be served by Radio Eireann's tv service also gets fringe reception from BBC and Ulster Television transmitters and it's estimated that by the time RE's commercial service gets going next year there'll be around 100,000 sets in the Republic.

start its coverage an hour earlier than CBS, at 7:30, and (2) thereupon notified NBC that it would carry its feed and would cancel CBS.

By the time it got to CBS to cancel, that web informed WGAL-TV that it too, was moving its coverage up to start even with NBC at 7:30. Thereupon WGAL-TV told CBS it had made a commitment to NBC, but would nevertheless review the situation and get back to CBS with a final answer.

That answer arrived Monday (7), and WGAL-TV told CBS that in view of its promise to NBC, and also in view of the fact that as a dual affiliate it had carried CBS' convention coverage and therefore it would only be equitable to give NBC a crack at the elections, it was going through with the switch after all.

Nobody was saying just how much of a factor Huntley-Brinkley was in the moveover.

20.9, according to the Nielsen Oct. 3-16 scorecard.

On paper, the CBS showing beats anything in the old days, even when Jackie Gleason was riding high. Its four shows are "Gunsmoke," No. 1 on the Nielsen lists with a 37.0; "Have Gun, Will Travel," No. 3 with 32.5; the new "Checkmate," No. 10 (only new show so far to hit Top 10 status this report), with a 23.9; and "Perry Mason," No. 13 with 23.5.

But NBC's "Bonanza" is right behind the competing "Mason" in the same 7:30-8:30 period, up in the 14th slot with a 23.2. Right behind "Bonanza" is the new "Tall Man," in 15th position on the Nielsen rankings, with 23.1. That's a mere eight-tenths of a Nielsen point behind the hourlong average for its "Checkmate" competition. And at 9, "Deputy" ranks in 34th position with a 20.9, only three Nielsen points behind "Checkmate," which straddles both "Tall Man" and "Deputy."

ABC thus far is out of the running, to all intents and purposes. Its "Roaring '20s" showed up with a mere 9.5 on the Nielsen books, and ABC was pinning its hopes on the WB entry to get it off and running Saturday nights.

reasonable reimbursement for the effort.

NBC News will have the staff correspondent most expert in the situation or closest to its occurrence (or both, when possible) backstop McGee. In other words, NBC is laying open its entire press corps to Gulf.

If by any chance, the $1,200,000 is eaten up in the course of the season, the network (at least when the proposal was made) promised to give Gulf right of first refusal on any additional "Specials" that arise.

Price for the time on each show will differ for reasons other than length. A lot will depend on the hour of the day and also on how many NBC affils can clear on short notice.

Young & Rubicam, the Gulf agency, has been involved in the negotiations almost from the start.

gers inherent in projecting the 24-city reports into anything like a national pattern. Trouble is that tastes vary from urban areas such as the 24-city lineup to the greater urban-rural mix in a national report; also, the 24-city covers cases of complete competition rather tha than the scatter involved in program competition nationally.

Most of all, the comparisons between the 24-city and National reports hit ABC hard because of the new national base used by Nielsen in the national report. Instead of measuring ratings for program only in those areas where a program is shown (and thus compensating for short station lineups), National Nielsen now measures on the basis of total U. S. tv homes, meaning that the larger a program's lineup, the better its chance for a higher rating. ABC, though its clearance problems are improving, is still on the short end of the three-network race for station spreads.

Mexico's National Chamber May Toss Out All TV-AM Rating Services

Mexico City, Nov. 8.

Audience ratings statistics and audience checks may get the bum's rush in Mexico. At least this is what the National Chamber of the Radio Broadcasting and Television Industry plans to recommend to authorities. At present the organization is busy gathering supporting evidence to prove that the ratings system is "incompetent and completely false."

This information was the highlight of meetings of industry executives during round table discussions as part of the celebration of Radio and TV Week on a continental basis the first week of this month.

While other discussions concentrated on purely local problems and the need to standardize radi and tv procedures in Latin America, the attack on ratings services is a matter that apparently will be pushed vigorously. Radio and tv execs here unanimously agreed that all organizations, groups of persons or individuals making audience checks or ratings, including "famous institutes and organizations," operate on "a completely false basis outside of all reality."

The ratings, according to the Chamber, are not "working legally nor are they true and carefully collected statistics." Instead, there is considerable falsification and misconstruing of data gathered, the Chamber added, with this working to the detriment of radio and television stations at one time or another.

As a remedy, the Chamber plans to urge for the suppression of the ratings services and the institution of a new division in the Department of National Economy's Bureau of Statistics. This new agency would handle audience checks with its statisitcs more in conformity with reality as well as having "a firm legal value."

In messages by the four chief executives of Mexico, the U.S., Argentina and Uruguay, stress was on the need to expand guarantees of freedom of expression throughout the continent. As President Adolfo Lopez Mateos of Mexico said, "radio and television are valuable, potent arms which must be placed at the service of truth and right." He added that the mediums have contributed enormously to harmonious relations and coexistence based on cooperation between nations offering a solid front for peace and justice. This has been achieved by "shrinking ideas."

WALES TV POST FOR JOHN BAXTER

London, Nov. 8.

Indie film producer John Baxter has been named executive controller of TWW, the commercial tv company operating in Wales and the West of England. The appointment, which will rank second to that of managing director Alfred Francis, is effective as of this week.

One of Baxter's best known films is "Love on the Dole," and in more recent year she was guiding light behind Group Three, the company set up under the aegis of the National Film Finance Corp., to encourage new creative talent in the industry.

25 Years Ago This Week

(From VARIETY Nov. 6, 1933)

Mutual Broadcasting Co. became the third major radio network with inking of a 10-city lineup cludi g KNX Los Angeles, WGN, Chicago, WOR, Newark, and WLW, Cincin among the keys. Finalization of the Coast outlet was the holdup; start of operations was w set for Jan. 1, 1936.

The Nazis banned all "Negro jazz music" from their and the director of Berlin radio warned it would not be "permitted to creep into broadcasts in disguise."

The informal "house party" format came along in the form of a 26-week deal for a "Mary Pickford House Party" to originate from her Pickfair home in Beyhills NBC. Ice Manufacturers of America was the sponsor. Donahue & Co

Al Zugsmith was fired as band manager of the CBS Artists Bureau in a spat with Ralph Wonder.

Billy Rose originated his radio series version of "Jumbo" from the Hippodrome in New York. In appraising the idea, VARIETY's Odee found the sh good, and noted that "Jimmy Durante is brought into his own for the first time" as an air performer; Land, however, reporting from the Hippodrome itself, said that the on-the-spot broadcast didn't help th show any.

Legit managers were mplaining of a shortage of youthful actors; they had either gone to Hollywood or were radio-minded. Some projects were being held up because key roles couldn't be cast.

Space-time swaps — newspaper ad space for radio commercials for the dailies — were swamping Philadelphia, but the staid Bulletin nixed such deals.

A front page VARIETY editorial indicted the growing booking of strippers as "the killer of vaudeville." It advised theatres booking the strip shows to think twice about what it w uld do to their theatres.

Rehearsal pay was blamed for the high number of quick legit folds this season on Broadway.

Musical director Rick Shaw backed the production with an unobtrusive score out of the disk files for solid dramatic effect. Bill.

"Press Table," featuring Hardy Burt as moderator in a discussion of th Presidential campaign's ress coverage with Reader's Digest European editor Eugene Lyons and NEA syndie's Leon Dennen, was a one-shot experiment by WOR, New York indi which features a lot of talk sh ws through the day but few on the loft subjects.

After bandying the religious issue in the Presidential campaign to little effect, the roundtable discussed th and s of newspaper bias election coverage. While the newsmen at first hedged, at windup they were getting around to specifics of the coverage on the New York scene, particularly regarding the Times and Herald Tribune.

Burt handled the brief se. in okay fashion, but had a tendency to toss around meaningless labels ("Kennedy's a liberal candidate—of course, Nixon is liberal, too . . He (Walter Lippmann) is an influence on the intelligentsia").

As a regular entry, show could nceivably gain a distinctive iche by sticking to press criticism by professionals. Bill.

WKAT NEW AFFILIATE FOR CBS-AM IN MIAMI

WKAT, the Miami Indie operated by Mrs. A. Frank Katzentine, will affiliate with CBS Radio effectiv Nov. 28. It succeeds WGBS, the Storer flagship, as the CBS affiliate, with the Storer station in turn going indie.

Affiliation takes effect the same time the web's new Program Consolidation Plan modifications, eliminating the soaps and upbeating news coverage, goes into effect. WKAT, which cooperates with a strong accent on pubaffairs programming, affiliated with CBS because of the expended news; ironically, WGBS dropped CBS because of the news expansion, since it interferred with its own extensive local coverage.

Godfrey, Art Linkletter or a Garry Moore into such ming pattern.

There are any of clients riding Garrow Linkletter and Godfrey on their res ing shows, ith Paar in the late-late segment, who would crave that extra excitement and shot in th arm through a prime time identification with their favorite star. This particularly applies to sponsors eager for a special merchandising job preceding major holidays such as Easter, Mother's Day, Father's Day, Thanksgiving, Graduation Day, Christmas, etc To a late-nite Paar client or an early morning Garroway client, it's more than worth the additional tariff to ride with them in prime time posure and retaining the star-product identification.

While it's readily conceded (and even established on the charts that the participation formula on hour programming leaves much to be desired in terms of sponsor identification, with a lot of advertisers walking away from it, the idea of having your own star plug your product in prime time, or even doing the lead-i , has a fascination that can't be minimized. There's hardly a client up and dow Madison Ave. who doesn't relish it.

Idea for the participating Garroway special was the joint brainchild of Jerry Danzig and Bill Storke, NBC execs attached to the Participating Programs Unit (Garroway & Paar). Once they got the go-ahead they had the show sold clean even before the talent or format were known.

RIAA Fighting N.Y. Withholding Tax With Appeal to Gov. Rockefeller

The Record Industry Assn. of America is trying to block the possibility of an exodus of recording activities from New York State. The possibility of diskers scramming N.Y. stems from a recently-enacted regulation requiring withholding taxes to be deducted from royalties of non-resident artists who record in N.Y.

In its first move to prevent the exodus, the RIAA, in a petition through its legal counsel Ernest S. Meyers, has asked Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller to have the regulation repealed or modified and pointed out that hundreds of local musicians and technicians are faced with loss of employment if record companies transfer their recording sessions to other parts of the country.

The petition also pointed out that many artists who do not live in N.Y. have already indicated their willingness to be saddled with another tax and are pressuring to have the recording sessions held elsewhere.

It also made the point that the basis of the tax on a non-resident artist's royalties , in itself, unrealistic because only a small portion of his activities are represented in a recording session. "In the case of a non-resident artist," the RIAA said, "the overwhelming proportion of the activity is performed outside of the State. It is beyond the borders of N.Y. that such an artist rehearses the repertoire to be recorded and the taped recorded performances are customarily sent to other states where the actual phonograph records are then manufactured and sold throughout the U. S."

The RIAA called the regulation wholly inconsistent with the public interest and without legal basis and requested the Governor's aid in repealing or changing the law.

37 L.A. Tooters On AFM Carpet

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

The American Federation of Musicians has intensified its crackdown on musicians violating union's "antitracking regulation by bringing charges against 37 Los Angeles musicians that worked a Jerry Lewis recording date Oct. 19.

Union is charging that batoneer Lou Brown, music contractor Al Lapin and 35 Local 47 musicians violated the AFM's existing labor contracts by first recording five vocals with Lewis and then later recording the same five arrangements minus Lewis' singing. The violation took place at Pattie Ent. Inc., a company which operates under an AFM recording license issued to Lewis. The union did not disclose what disciplinary action, if any, it would take against the comic.

This marks the second crackdown in less than two weeks in a drive headed by AFM prexy Herman Kenin to put a halt to "tracking," a device by which instrumental accompaniment is recorded separately for subsequent dubbing in of vocals.

"Tracking is an unartistic shortcut that further reduces the work hours of musicians already distressed by widespread unemployment," Kenin declared. He added that the Federation will proceed in every instance where proof may be obtained against its own members and the AFM-licensed recording companies that practice "tracking."

L.A. Grand Jury Indicts Septet For Disk Forgery

Los Angeles, Nov. 8.

The grand jury of Los Angeles county moved last week to indict seven persons who were previously arrested for alleged disk counterfeiting. Named in the indictment were Brad Atwood, Pete Korelich, Leonard T. Warren, Eugene Allison, Robert E. Allison, Charles L. Richards and William Thompson.

The men were arrested in raids made on Oct. 2 by the L.A. district attorney's office and 35 detectives. Approximately 3,000 bogus disks were seized at that time. At the Korelich Manufacturing Co. plant, the detectives discovered Verve labels hidden behind a secret panel and masters hidden in a false barrel bottom.

The defendants were indicted on the following four counts: (1) conspiracy to commit grand theft and violate the California trade mark statute; (2) grand theft against Command and ABC-Paramount

WANT CRACK AT ALL PIC WRITERS

An "agonizing reappraisal" of the longstanding policy of 100% loyalty to the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers on the part of the top publishers is now taking place in light of a new situation brought about by internal Society stresses and stepped-up competition by Broadcast Music Inc. It's known that some of the top publishers, exclusively ASCAP, are now seriously thinking about opening BMI affiliates purely as a matter of self-preservation.

One major publishing exec pointed to the Hollywood situation where a flock of top film score writers have indicated their intention to defect from ASCAP to join BMI at the start of 1961. "If we can't get the Government to equalize the competition for talent between BMI and ASCAP, in which the former can offer substantial guarantees in longterm deals, then how are ASCAP companies going to get film music without opening BMI firms?"

He said: "No publisher can or wants to dictate to any film producer what composer he should use. The producer is interested in the best talent for the assignment and if it's a BMI writer, then there's no reason why he shouldn't be hired. But where does that leave the 100% ASCAP publishers in an important area of the publishing business?"

Performing rights societies have their idealistic aspects, the publisher said, but they're basically business enterprises. "If publishers can operate more efficiently with ASCAP and BMI affiliates, then that's the way to conduct business," he said. "As far as having BMI-affiliated publishers on the ASCAP board, that's only a bugaboo with some ASCAP loyalists, but now they are going to have to live with the fact that Edwin H. (Buddy) Morris, who has a major BMI firm in Meridian Music, has already been elected to the ASCAP

Col Expanding South-of-the-Border; De Rougemont V.P. for Latin Am.

With South America steadily developing as a potent market for Columbia Records, diskery is prepping a step-up in activity there and has set Peter de Rougemont as veepee for Latin and South American operations. It marks the first time that Col has had a veep on the international level.

De Rougemont, who has been associated with Col's S.A. operations since 1953, will have full responsibility for the company's subsids in Argentina, Brazil and Mexico as well as licensing arrangements in Chile, Columbia, Ecuador, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela. Col has recording studios in Rio de Janeiro, Buenos Aires and Mexico City and has manufacturing facilites in many of the Latin and S.A. countries.

According to de Rougemont, Col has now captured about 30% of the S.A. market with Argentina and Brazil leading the way with a $2,000,000 and $1,200,000 take, respectively. This is a development that started eight years ago when Col only had the Mexican outlet.

There'll now be an increase of the release schedule there and some of the S.A.-made platters will also be keyed for U.S. distribution. Nat Shapiro, head of Col's international artists & repertoire, will screen the S.A.-produced platters for their sales possibilities in this country. There are now about 100 artists under contract to Col in the various S.A. countries.

It's also expected that there'll be a bigger flow of U.S.-made disks into S.A. and on this level de Rougemont suggests that the American publishers should prepare Spanish lyric versions of their songs along with the English. He points out that there should be no difficulty in getting a close Spanish translation since the teenagers there are quite similar to their Yankee counterparts in habits and ideas.

De Rougemont joined Columbia Argentina as manager when it was founded in 1953. In November, 1959, he was named director of S.A. operations.

High Court KOs Rose's Claim To 'Gang' Renewal

Billy Rose's application for rehearing of his ... against Bourne Music on the renewed assignment on "That Old Gang Of Mine" has been denied by the U. S. Supreme Court. Ros had appealed the decision of the U. S. Court of Appeals. Supreme Court decision winds up any further legalistics on the "Gang" hassle.

Case was a key significance for the music biz since it challenged a type of renewal assignment used in contracts covering hundreds of top standards written during the 1920s and right up to 1932 when the Songwriters Protective Assn. (now the American Guild of Authors & Composers) was formed. Under the old pacts, songwriters generally handed over the renewal assignment to the publishers at the time of the original contract.

Rose, joined in the case by "Gang" co-writers Ray Henderson and the late Mort Dixon, said this renewal was invalid because there was no "consideration" given to the songwriters. The lower courts, however, stated that the contract was legal.

BMI Laughing Up Its Roster

Latching onto the new vogue of comedy LP disks, Broadcast Music Inc. has moved to sign up a flock of comedy performers who write their own material. Already signed with BMI are Bob Newhart, Shelley Berman, Andy Griffith and Mort Sahl. Dave Gardner, another comic on disks, is now dickering with BMI for a deal.

Interest of BMI in the comics stems from the big potential of broadcast plays of their LPs. As copyrighted material, these disks can earn performance coin just like songs do.

BMI has also inked novelist Max Shulman, as a songwriter. Shulman wrote "The Ballad of Dobie Gillis," with Lionel Newman for the tv series which Shulman created.

Three More Disk Firms In FTC Payola Parade

Washington, Nov. 8.

Federal Trade Commission has okayed consent orders barring three disk firms from shelling out payola to get their product broadcast.

Involved were: Scepter Music Inc., New York; Old Town Record Corp., N.Y.; and James Higgings and Robert West, doing business as B&H Distributing Co., Detroit. The consent decrees were worked out jointly by FTC staffers and the companies and don't carry any admission of guilt.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Don Meehan (Joy): "AN OPEN LETTER TO MR. KHRUSHCHEV" (Joy) is an effective propaganda side with a religio-o anti-Communist lyric strongly delivered by Don Meehan with a brief intro by Victor Ivanimets, the Soviet sailor who recently jumped ship to remain in the U. S. "BEAUTIFUL LADY IN WHITE" (Joy) is a good religioso vocal side.

The Innocents (Indigo): "PLEASE MR. SUN" (Weiss & BARRY) a bit of a few years ago, returns in the peculiarly cool style of this rocking team. "GEE WHIZ" (Records) is a teen-angled side also due for wide play.

Mickey & Sylvia (RCA VICTOR): "WHAT WOULD I DO" (Aladdin-Ben Ghazi) a good rocking item, is given a stylish slice by this combo, now on the comeback trial. Frederick†) is a solid rhythm side.

The Harptons (Coed): "ANSWER ME, MY LOVE" (Bourne*) is a strong rocking ballad projected with potent commercial impact by this combo. "RAIN DOWN KISSES" (Winneton†) is another neat rhythm slice.

June Valli (Mercury): "WEEP FOR ME LOVER" (Regent†) is a potent rocking torch song sharply belted by this fine songstress. "BORROWED KISSES" (Prentice*) is an okay ballad in a similar groove.

Champ Butler (Five-Ten): "ROCK HUDSON ROCK" (Mamaleen†), a cute jumping tune, gets a slick ride by this singer. "LET'S YOU AND ME" (Mamaleen†) is a smooth ballad in a swinging format.

Lori Phillips (PRI): "FALLING

Best Bets

ELVIS PRESLEY (RCA Victor) — ARE YOU LONESOME TONIGHT / I Gotta Know

Elvis Presley's "Are You Lonesome Tonight" (Bourne-Cromwell) clicks up another smash hit in this restrained workover of the oldie. "I Gotta Know" (Alamo) is a bright rhythm tune also due for lotsa spins.*

MARV JOHNSON (United Artists) — HAPPY DAYS / Baby, Baby

Marv Johnson's "Happy Days" (Jobete†) is a solid rocking ballad projected with solid commercial impact by this young singer. "Baby, Baby" (Jobete†) is in a familiar rhythm groove.

RAY CHARLES (ABC-Paramount) — RUBY / Hard-Hearted Hannah

Ray Charles' "Ruby" (Miller†) is a standout workover of this film type hit of a few years ago and should repeat the click pattern. "Hard Hearted Hannah" (Advanced) is a colorful slice of a potent oldie which should share the plays.*

GUY MITCHELL (Columbia) — SUNSHINE GUITAR / Ridin' Around In The Rai

WANDA JACKSON (Capitol) — ... MEAN, MEAN, MEAN / Happy, Happy Birthday

Wanda Jackson's "Mean, Mean, Mean" (Central†) is a hard-driving rhythm number belted to the hilt in a lowdown groove aimed for the juke set. "Happy, Happy Birthday" (Arc-Donna†) is a good reprise of this rocking standard.

DEBBIE REYNOLDS (Dot) — SATISFIED—PART 2 / Rain In Cherry Blossom Time

Debbie Reynolds' "Satisfied—Part 2" (Jenera†) is another rollicking rhythm number projected in an allout style due to mop up with the teenagers. "It Looks Like Rain in Cherry Blossom Lane" (E. H. Morris) is a neat, straight slice of the oldie.*

DORSEY BURNETTE (Era) — THE RIVER & THE MOUNTAIN / This Hotel

Dorsey Burnette's "The Mountain and the River" (Sherman-DeVorzon) is an excellent ballad in a big vocal and instrumental setting that'll nab spins. "This Hotel" (Bamboo) is an interesting jail-house piece of material.*

"THIS IS MY STORY" (Aladdin†) is a less effective slow ballad.

June Christy-Jonah Jones (Capitol): "SOMETIMES I'M HAPPY" (Harms*) turns up in a swinging vocal with some nifty trumpet work in the background. Solid for all programming situations. "TOMMY, TOMMY" (Sunbeam†) from the "Tenderloin" score, also gets a slick workover.

Kitty Kallen (Columbia): "THE THING, YOU LEFT IN MY HEART" (Lewis*) is a big ballad which this songstress projects with forceful impact. "I BELIEVE IN YOU" (Skidmore*) is another okay ballad side.

Carl Dobkins Jr. (Decca): "LOVELIGHT" (Sequence*) is a bright rocking ballad belted in a pleasing countrified groove by this singer. "TAKE TIME OUT" (Kavelin Maverick†) is another rhythm ballad with chances.

Mark Dinning (MGM): "SHE CRIED ON MY SHOULDERS" (Sigma*) is a good teen-angled weeping ballad handled in suitably sentimental style. "THE WORLD IS GETTING SMALLER" (Milene*) has an interesting lyric idea which could stir some noise.

Lonnie Donegan (Atlantic): "LORELEI" (Tiger†), a clever, racing saga-type of folksong, gets a colorful workover by this British skiffle artist. "JUNCO PARTNER" IN LOVE WALTZ" (Marlen*), a lilting number, showcases his songstress' big voice and style with good warm effect. "ALL ALONE" (Berlin*) is a fine reprise of the oldie.

The Challengers (Triodex): "LAZY TWIST" (December†) is a pounding instrumental in a highly commercial groove. "GOOFUS" (Feist*) is a more frantic-sounding slice.

Ray Sharpe (Trey): "THE STREET WHERE YOU LIVE" (Chappell*) the showtune hit, turns up in a pleasing rocking version that should earn a new round of spins. "JUSTINE" (Gregmark) is routine.

Hollywood Argles (Lute): "SO FINE" (Eldorado†) is a solid straight rocking ballad in a manner which this combo has clicked with previously. "HULLY GULLY" (Arvee†) is a good workover of a basic rocking number done before by The Olympics.

The Originals (Brunswick): "A KISS FROM YOUR LIPS" (ARC†) smacks of familiar rocking ballad stylings and will appeal to those who like a repetition of that beat. "LET ME BE YOUR GIRL" (Merrimac†) has all the rocking touches but they don't add up to much.

Christmas season in the Nutty Squirrels' "Please Don't Take Our Tree For Christmas" (Jason†), a lilting number with an occasional zany squirrel sound. Flip is "Nutty Noel" (C-Hear-Dougal†) is another cute-sounding side. On the same label, Mitch Miller & His Gang have a standout moppet-angled tune in "Must Be Santa" (Hollis†), a cumulative song done with full chorus. Backing is another excellent holiday entry. "Christmas Spirit" (Korwin*) done in the same manner. Another pleasing straightforward Xmas item is Ruth Lyon's "All Because of Christmas" (Candee*), also on Columbia.

On the Kapp label, the Pete King Chorale has come up with a tasteful holiday entry: "The Little Shepherd Boy" (Garland*) while Verve has Ella Fitzgerald swinging "Jingle Bells" (Jatap†) at the top of her form.

Orchestra of America Latches Onto Jazz Via Goodman, MJQ Dates

Orchestra of America, which begins season number two at Carnegie Hall, N.Y., on Nov. 16, is recognizing jazz. First concert will have Benny Goodman, second the Modern Jazz Quartet. Single ticket sale for the first two (of five) concerts is better than the series ticket sale. The hope of innovator-impresario Richard Korn, is that those attending the jazz concerts may be tempted to try the others.

Experience of first year has indicated a prevailing ignorance with the public that "American" music does not necessarily imply modern dissonance. Korn's reper-

Don Costa: "Echoing Voices and Trombones" (UA's Ultra Audio). United Artists Records is kicking off its new Ultra Audio line with striking impact on the "sound conscious" package market. One of five LPs in the initial release, Don Costa has come up with a series of superlative vocal ensemble and instrumental arrangements with accent on massed trombone effects. The stereo effects are brilliant, but without intruding on the musical selections which include such fine oldies as "Day In, Day Out," "The Breeze and I," "Just In Time," "I'm Beginning To See The Light," "Thou Swell" and "Nice Work If You Can Get It."

"Frankie Avalon Facade"-"Fabian Facade" (Chancellor). These are two teen-slanted LPs which may set a whole new fashion in packaging. Along with a conventional disk, there's a three-dimensional plaque of each performer attached to a velvet-type backing which the kids can frame. And the teeners who go for the singing talent in these LPs, will also probably be sold on these ikons. Each of the sets include a group of oldies with some new song material tailored for these young singers.

"The Alamo" (Columbia): Dimitri Tiomkin is the big wheel in this soundtrack set from John Wayne's big picture, "The Alamo." As composer-conductor, Tiomkin is in complete charge of the musical work and it's a work that he can be proud of. He's captured a number of stirring musical moods in addition to a lively cakewalk and a latino-tempoed item. It stands up as a potent soundtracker. As an added plus there are vocals by The Brothers Four on "Green Leaves Of Summer" and Marty Robbins on "Ballad of The Alamo," both of which have become solid single entries. The lyrics are by Paul Francis Webster.

Mort Sahl: "The Next President" (Verve). Mort Sahl has come up with his sharpest politico-comedy LP to date in this offering. Pegged to the Presidential campaign, which ended yesterday (Tues.), this set should carry over beyond the elections because it highlights some of the enduring absurdities of the political and social scene along with the more ephemeral topical comments. Once again, Sahl has cut this disk before an appreciative audience.

"2,000 Years With Carl Reiner & Mel Brooks" (World Pacific). This set could launch a new disk career for Mel Brooks, scripter for Sid Caesar and Jerry Lewis, among others. As writer and dialectian in this LP, Brooks reveals a zany wit with frequent flashes as brilliant as any comic now around. Brooks, with a strong assist from straight man Carl Reiner, plays a 2,000-year old man, an ex-Nazi turned Peruvian Indian, a psychiatrist, beatnik, etc., each done with needle-sharp point.

James Komack: "At The Waldorf" (Ember). James Komack, young veteran of the nitery circuit, has come up an amusing medley of songs and chatter, adding to the growing stream of comedy packages. Komack has a sharp script this time out in ranging over psychiatry, Japanese show biz, "Lady Chatterley's Lover" (an off-color routine), prize-fight announcing, the Beat Generation and "The Man With The Golden Arm." The gab is much better than the singing.

Harry Jerome Orch: Brass Goes Hollywood" (Decca). Henry Jerome, who hit paydirt with his initial "Brazen Brass" offering, has followed up with the same kind of stereo-angled instrumentals based on a tunes deriving from Hollywood films. Once again, the arrangements are tailored for sound effects on numbers like "Around The World," "Moonglow" "Picnic," cha-cha version of "Three Coins In The Fountain" and "Tammy," "Colonel Bogey March" and others.

Della Reese: "Della Della Cha Cha Cha" (RCA Victor). This is a fresh showcasing of this fine songstress. She's been given a collection of standards set to cha cha cha tempo which she swings with a colorful variety of rhythmic accents. Included are numbers like "Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend," "Come On-a My House," "Whatever Lola Wants," "Tea For Two" and "Love For Sale." Sharorch backing is under the baton of O. B. Masingill.

"A Date With The Everly Bros." (Warner Bros.). This is iftily packaged collection of recent hits and new entries by the click Everly Bros. Along with the disk, there's a folio of photos aimed for the teenage market. As usual, this duo delivers in its unique and listenable rocking style, covering numbers like "Made To Love," "That's Just Too Much," "Sigh, Cry, Almost Die," "Love Hurts," "Lucille" and "Cathy's Clown," among others. Herm.

Bill Randle Now Sticks To Deejay Trade After 3 Straight Impresario Flops

Cleveland, Nov. 8.

Bill Randle, the disk jockey who finds it relatively easy to pick hits, found himself $6,000 out of pocket in a brief fling at the impresario game. In brief, he is no longer in that field. The loss came from three concerts here arranged by Randle.

The appearances were those of Odetta, folk singer; Theodore Bikel, and, most recently, clarinetist Pete Fountai

In view of these losses, Randle is pulling out and has canceled the last two concerts in his series, a repeat appearance by Odetta and the appearance of Jonathan Winters.

"I've had . ." said Randle. "What's the answer? I wish I knew. Look at Shelley Berman. When he first appeared here he wasn't yet well know He took a bath. When he returned recently he filled Music Hall."

This is not a local phenomenon, Randle said. The trend toward concert performances losing money i national, with the exception of New York, Chicago and maybe Los Angeles, where population concentration is greater.

Television has a double impact on this problem, Charles Kenley has found that he can fill the Packard Music Hall in Warren, O., by merely hiring television personalities to appear in summer stock stage performances.

"This is Jack Paar land," he has said in the past. "Half the population sits up to watch that program. And when we bring in Genevieve, they all want to see her."

On the other hand, when Randle or some other importer of talent brings a performer into Cleveland for a one-night stand, most of the population stays home to watch TV.

Chi Jazz Show Fizzle Spotlights Over-Exposure, Over-Pricing

Chicago, Nov. 8.

In consequence of the flop of a stageshow jazz layout at the southside Regal vaudfilmer, the feeling grows that this town's lush jazz pickin's may have become "too much of a good thing" — to the detriment of boxoffice and talent.

The fizzled show, which had Miles Davis topping, plus the Modern Jazz Quartet and vocalists Lamberts, Hendricks & Ross, also generated an attack on rising talent fees, specifically Davis,' and more pertinently his $7,000 take for the one-week stand. Co-promoter Lou Alport, in a strongly worded handout afterward, roundly razzed his star attraction for lack of b.o. magic and claimed that the price paid Davis "contributed heavily to the financial loss" of the show.

Alport noted to VARIETY that Davis and Dakota Staton racked up a whopping gross at the same theatre only a few months ago. This time, he and Monte Kay (the MJQ manager) were banking chiefly Davis to rival that earlier gross. Instead, business nosedived to a reported $6,000 loss. But Alport doesn't explain how a fancy fee takes the rap for fewer customers.

The talent fee issue to one side, flop of the Regal gig is compelling the theory that over-exposure has hit the Windy City jazz market, thanks to a highly competitive nightclub situation which rotates the bigger names around town to the ho-hum point, and to zealous concert impresarios who move in and out for a fast ride.

The disenchantment has affected a number of prime jazzmen in recent months, among them Dizzy Gillespie, Count Basie and Chico Hamilton. Several other bands and combos are close to being in the same position.

It has come to a point here where the jazz cognoscenti can afford to be standoffish in the correct assumption that if a group is missed in one spot, they only need wait some weeks till it shows up another. The peril in this for cafe bonifaces is obvious; yet apparently it hasn't anguished the ones most concerned to a point of action so far.

Th over-exposure theorists illustrate with Cannonball Adderley, current at the Cloister nitery, who will have played three dates here in less than six months. Couple of months ago he was at the Sutherland Lounge (operated by the aforementioned Lou Alport), and in February is booked into the new Birdhouse.

It's that kind of exposure, observers contend, that has hurt recent appearances here of Basie nd others. As for blame, the agencies are seen as only doing their duty by talent and cafe clients alike, which leaves the finger pointing at the club owners for joining a talent tug-of-war that's wasteful and which pushes prices up.

It may be noted, for racy, that over-exposure isn't a rampant condition — yet. But biz has become sufficiently spotty, and in some cases, considering the talent, downright embarrassing, for the trade to feel a growing concern.

As for Alport's blast at Davis, it's seen as possibly the start of a campaign to knock down talent costs, and the impresario makes no secret of the fact his beef was intended primarily to alarm other bonifaces. Alport, who has played Davis three times at the Sutherland, says his price has gone up each time. Referring to Davis' take for the Regal stand, the promoter stated, "He just wasn't worth it."

Monte Kay's Side

Monte Kay, who co-promoted the Miles Davis package with Louis Alport in Chicago, stated that business was off because there was no promotion by Alport. He said only a few ads were taken in the Chicago press and these were "Ghetto-styled" displays aimed strictly at the Negroes in Chi's south side. Kay said biz at the Regal Theatre was half of capacity.

William Morris' Oratorios; Tom Scherman's Troupe Hits 22 Cities in 15 States

Thomas Scherman's Little Orchestra of Manhattan is on its longest road tour, covering 22 cities and 15 states in four weeks. Dates were booked by William Morris Agency. Accompanying the musicians are the members of the Choral Art Society and choirmaster William Jonson. The complement of 85 all told will travel in two chartered buses.

What makes the tour special is that it will present 18 performances of Berlioz's "L'Infance du Christ" and four of Handel's "Judas Maccabaeus." Both are heavy singing oratorios usually associated with the week of Christmas. "L'Infance" has become the Little Orchestra's seasonal trademark, as "The Nutcracker Suite" is the N.Y. City Ballet's Christmas stock-in-trade.

Upon returning from the tour, the two oratorios will be presented at Town Hall as regular items in the Little Orchestra's subscription.

Elvis Elevates Reich 'Never' Sale to 400,000

Berli Nov. 1

Elvis Presley's RCA platter, "It's Now Or Never," registered a sale of 400,000 copies in West Germany within a few weeks. Teldec, which handles the RCA repertory in this country, says over 70,000 copies had already been ordered before this disk was even out on release. Under its Germ title, "O Sole Mio," it holds No. 1 spot on the German lists.

Artist-Disk Deals

UA Records: Sauter-Finnegan

The Sauter-Finnegan orch, which was organized in the early 1950s under the RCA Victor banner, has now been signed by United Artists Records. Orch will work for UA's new Ultra Audio label with the first package due in February.

Ed Sauter and Bill Finnegan, two top arrangers, originally set the band as a concert and disk organization, using new instrumental combinations. The team subsequently broke up when Sauter went to Germany for a couple of years radio sultant.

Decca: Bob Wilson

Decca has signed singer Bob Wilson to a five-year pact, with a&r exec Harry Myerson to handle the singer's pop output. The 22-year-old Wilson, currently playing the niter circuit, returned recently from abroad, where he spent three years touring in concert stands.

Deal was set via Beverly Schechter, Wilson's personal manager.

AFM Pact With Major Pic Studio Accents U.S. Music for Films, TV

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Agreement on terms of a contract to cover employment of musicians in major motion picture studios was wrapped up last week by Herman D. Kenin, prexy of American Federation of Musicians, and Charles Boren, exec v.p. of Assn. of Motion Picture Producers. Extending three-and-one-half years, it also covers telefilms made by the majors.

Principle items in agreement are:

(1) All films produced in the U.S. or Canada will be scored in the U.S. or Canada.

(2) No "canned music," that is, music not scored by persons covered by the agreement will be used in television films on which production starts on, or after June 1, 1961. Additionally there is a guarantee of a minimum of 18 hours of scoring time for each 13 half-hour episodes of a television series.

(3) Re-use payments of 1% for all theatrical films whose principal production began after Jan. 31, 1960 and which are released to free television were agreed upon.

(4) Rates or pay will be increased by 5% on Oct. 1, 1961 and by an additional 7% on Nov. 1, 1962 the same rates will apply to television film as to theatrical film.

(5) Pension contribution of 3% of scale begin immediately into a musician's pension fund.

(6) Standard AFM soundtrack regulations are made applicable to all pictures produced since 1958.

Universal-International no longer an AMPP member, will conduct its own parley with AFM. In the AMPP deal with AFM the scale is presumed to be that enjoyed by Musicians Guild of America. The AFM last summer wrested back major studio jurisdiction from MGA in an NLRB election. Two years prior MGA had taken the jurdisdiction from the then striking AFM in a similar election.

Terms

Term of new agreement is for three and a half years from Nov. 1, 1960 to May 1, 1964. Agreement was reached following daily negotiating meetings which started on Oct. 26, 1960.

Conducting the negotiations were for the musicians: Herman D. Kenin, AFM president; Stanley Ballard, secretary; George Clancy, treasurer; Board Members: E. A. Stokes, William Hawes, Walter Murdock, Lee Repp and Charles

Jerry Blaine Hit By $35,000 'Cover' Heist

Thieves pulled a "cover" heist at the Manhasset, L.I., home of Jubilee Records prexy Jerry Blaine last Sunday (5). Jewels and furs valued at $35,000, nearly all of them just recovered from a previous robbery, were lifted from Blaine's home.

Blaine and his wife, Anne, lost $73,500 in jewels, furs and cash to two stickup men who broke into their home last April 26. The robbers were caught and are now in prison. Only a week ago the last of the loot, two mink stoles worth $2,800 were returned to the Blaines by detectives.

The Blaine theft was part of a raid that took in six other Manhasset homes for a haul of about $77,000.

Jack Benny's Boff 36G With Cincy Symph Hikes Benefit Total Over $2-Mil.

Cincinnati, Nov. 8.

All records for any performance in the city's history were broken Sunday night (6) at the 85-year-old Music Hall when Jack Benny's appearance as violin soloist with the Cincinnati Symphony orchestra, Max Rudolf Conducting, grossed $36,100 with all proceeds going to the orchestra's pension fund. A capacity audience of 3,718 paid from $100 down to $2.50 for tickets.

In the past five days, Benny has raised $119,570 in three concerts, grossing $37,200 for the Indianapolis Symphony, $46,270 for the Cleveland Orchestra plus last night's total. In 20 concerts over the past four years, Benny has raised a grand total of $2,110,770 with his symphony tours, in all cases contributing his services gratis.

In the midst of his hectic symphony schedule, Benny also flew to Detroit last Wednesday (2) and raised over $500,000 in a single three-hour stint in behalf of Bonds for Israel. The comedian planed to New York yesterday (Mon.) to originate two Sunday evening CBS-TV programs there prior to returning to Hollywood.

CADENCE IS CANDID FOR JAZZ OPERATION

Candid Records will now be the name of the new Cadence jazz operation. The line was all set to roll with the Coda tag several weeks ago when it was discovered that there was a conflict with another record manufacturer.

With the Candid name locked up, diskery's general manager Bob Altshuler is rolling with a series of artists signings and a heavy recording schedule. Heading the list of artists to join the Candid roster is Charlie Mingus. The first album by Mingus for Candid is due in a couple of weeks.

Other artists signed by Candid are vocalist Abbey Lincoln and blues singer Otis Spann. Miss Lincoln was signed to a Candid pact after she vocalized on Max Roach's "Freedom Now Suite," an upcoming Candid package. Another package being readied for early release is by trumpeter Richard Williams.

Award 1,075 ASCAP Writers 470G

Longhairs Get Two-Thirds of Coin for Works Of 'Prestige' Not Logged on Radio-TV

Over 1,000 standard composers and pop songsmiths shared in the initial grant of $470,000 in awards money made by the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers under terms of the new consent decree. An additional $130,000 in award money is due to be distributed shortly to account for a total of $600,000, representing a 5% deduction of the total writers' share of $12,000,000 for the year 1960.

The awards, made by outside panels in both the standard and pop fields, went to 485 longhair writers and 590 pop writers for works that were of unique prestige value for which adequate compensation would not otherwise be received and to writers whose works are performed substantially in media not surveyed by the Society, such as concert halls, night clubs, etc.

The awards money has been divided on a ratio of approximately two-to-one in favor of the longhairs, whose works both have prestige and few radio-tv performances as against the pop songsmiths. In the longhair field, no member was eligible for an award who received $25,000 a year or more from the Society. In the pop field the eligibility ceiling was set at $15,000 on the theory that those receiving above that amount had works of sufficient pop appeal to be adequately compensated without a cial award. The awards are for a one-year period and will be reconsidered each year from now on.

In the pop field, recognition was given to many jazz writers whose works have been frequently performed in jazz clubs and niteries. Recognition of jazz was due primarily to Dr. Marshall W. Stearns, English professor at Hunter College and jazz expert who was

Disk Forgery

Records; (3) grand theft against Verve Records; and (4), attempt to commit grand theft against Balt Yanez. Yanez is an investigator in the L.A. d.a.'s office who had, as an undercover agent, arranged for the purchase of counterfeit disks from the ring.

Eugene and Robert E. Allison entered pleas of not guilty while the other defendants have not as yet entered pleas.

District attorney William B. McKesson said that his office has over 2,000 cubic feet of evidence against the defendants. Art Talmadge, prexy of the American Record Manufacturers & Distributors Assn. which has been sparking a nationwide drive against the disk counterfeiters, has assigned Sigmund H. Steinberg, of the law firm of Blanc, Steinberg, Balder & Steinbrook, to go to L.A. to meet with local authorities to review the evidence and to cooperate with the L.A. police authorities.

Orch of America

tory is to embrace some 200 years of native composers. "Jazz" is but an incidental aspect of what he has in mind.

His 92-piece symphony will be augmented by pianist Marjorie Mitegel (Jan. 18), soprano Blanche Thebom and tenor Enrico Di Giuseppe (Feb. 22) and on March 22 by marimbist Vida Chanowith, repeating from a year ago, and violinist Roman Totenberg.

Because of the emphasis upon native American repertory the Korn symphony has sold season's boxes to such wellwishers of the home talent as ASCAP, BMI, Federation of Music Clubs, etc. Korn himself is past president of the Society for the Publication of American Music.

A main objective of the recitals, not realized last year, is to induce the recording companies to disk the unusual music numbers which Korn selects. Most of his American pieces, as selected so far, are virginal so far as prior recording goes.

Just as 'Western' as Anybody, Japan's NHK Symph Wows Gotham

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Failure of the New York ad-copy to make clear that the NHK Symphony of Japan was playing "western" music may have kept Hunter College aud from going capacity Nov. 2. But the critics were there in force and many a musicologist, all for the sake of international relations and of their own education. What they heard amounted to this: a genuine surprise of the pleasurable sort. Japanese abilities in a new area were at once established.

This white-tie orchestra is excellent, whatever reservations may be expressed as to the French horn. It shows every evidence of hard rehearsal and discipline under its German conductor, Wilhelm Schuchter. The musicians are very young-seeming, possibly because few wear glasses and few are bald. Certainly the doll-like pianist, Hiroko Nakamura, was young indeed, a mere 16. That fact combined to make her artistry not less than astounding.

The program opened with the respective anthems. There was audience disagreement as to the "Star Spangled Banner" but to the ear of this VARIETY reviewer it was played with more than ordinary liveness, in which that French horn figured notably. The first two numbers were by a young Japanese composer, Toyama, who later took a bow. His "Lullaby," strongly scored to flute, and his "Rhapsodie," using wonderful percussion effects, were both authentic and appreciated musical novelties to the New York audience, of which perhaps 40% was Nipponese.

Then came the doll. Dressed in a lovely kimono, she addressed the keyboard with a quiet authority which became steadily more impressive, section by section. Especially remarked is her fingering, which has a dainty, crisp, nerveless quality that for want of a more precise comparison may be termed "very Japanese," in the sense that people there are often super-deft with their hands in "working small."

Chopin's E Minor Concerto is full of runs (in thirds and sixths) which tax any virtuoso. There was never a fault. Yet the true wonder was not the manual dexterity, not the aplomb but the fully adult artistry. There was variety and shading, and great delicacy of tone. One waited in vain for the "yes, but—" which flaws the recital of many young pianists. At 16 the girl is already absolutely first class, with no reservations.

Following intermission Schuchter guided his men through Beethoven's Third. Here the results were as fulfilling as the promise of the orchestra's discreet accompaniment for the soloist. The strings stand out for their subtle tone, in which one is justified in recognizing a blend of the Japanese, and to the listener's satisfaction in the standard work.

In the now-lengthy parade of international musical organizations to come this way, this radio system's symphony covered itself, and its homeland with distinction. Newspaper critiques were nearly all fulsome raves.

Flender's Phone Follies Into UA Comedy LP Disk

A gag which American-in-Paris writer Harold Flender started, i.e. zany telephone conversations and having them tape-recorded, has been put on wax by UA Records, titled "Dial for Laughs." It is all in English now that Flender is back from France where the tv writer and novelist resided the past two years.

A sam le of Flender's madcap approach is to phone a taxidermist to buy a monkey, wanting to know if "it's the right quality to make monkey soup," and the irritated shopkeeper expressing opinion she "doesn't care what you do with the monkey after you buy it." Or the druggist routine, "After having taken Metrecal I'm now down to 90 lbs. and how to kick the habit," etc. Releases of the actual telephonic vis-a-vis had to be cleared.

RIAA Probing Taping of Disks For Backgrounds

The Record Industry Assn. of America has launched an investigation into the unauthorized taping of phonograph records for background music purposes.

With few exceptions, the RIAA pointed out, certain background music services do not obtain permission for the use of a record either from the record manufacturer, from the artist, from the music publishers, or from the copyright holder. The fact that they pay no royalties has resulted in deprivation of a considerable source of revenue to the music's creators.

Moreover, says the RIAA, such unauthorized actions have placed at a competitive disadvantage those companies who do secure authorization and pay royalties to the various groups involved.

In order to protect their own proprietary rights, as well as those artists who record for them, the RIAA legal committee is considering legal action against those firms found to be selling a service composed of material which they re not authorized to use.

Col Gets 1-Year Pact To Press, Provide Disks For 60 Gov't Agencies

Columbia Records is going into Government service. The U.S. Government has awarded Col a one-year contract to provide recording services and pressings for all Government agencies.

Under the terms of the pact, which went into effect Nov. 1, Col's transcriptions department will manufacture in its Bridgeport (Conn.) and Los Angeles plants records of all sizes and speeds for approximately 60 different Governmental agencies, including Armed Forces Radio Services, National Guard, Treasury Department, Veterans Administration and the Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization.

Of these agencies, AFRS is the largest Governmental agency consumer of recordings. Commercial radio broadcasts recorded in the U. S. are reproduced for rebroadcast on AFRS networks to the armed forces stationed all over the world. Each week AFRS produces 140 record sides, the equivalent of 3,500 individual record releases per year.

New record devices for education are constantly explored by the Government. For example, last year, census takers were instructed with the aid of longplaying records.

A. B. Swank, Jr. is prexy of the new civic, non-profit organization. Season tickets for the five-event series are $10 and $7.50 unreserved seats. Memberships in the Jazz Society are tagged at $5 for adults and $2 for students under 21.

AFM Pact

Kennedy. Assisting the committee were: Henry Kaiser, AFM, general counsel; Phil Fischer, studio representative; Sam Middleman, assistant studio representative; Ernie Lewis, AFM traveling representative; and Local 47 reps James D. Michael, John Tranchitella and Leroy Collins.

For the producers: Charles Boren, Alfred Camie and Ben Batcheider from the AMPP; E.L. DePatie and Arthur Schaefer, Warner Bros.; Saul Rittenberg and E. C. De Lavigne, MGM; Ted Leonard and Bud Ward, Paramount; Gordon Stulberg, William Hopkins and Al Fisher, Columbia; Eugene Arnstein, Allied Artists; Bonar Dyer, Disney.

Conspicuously, the contract terms as announced did not make any provisions for post-'48 pix sold to tv. A demand for such residuals, by the AFM in pact talks in January, 1958, was rejected by AMPP, triggering a five-month AFM strike, culminating in Musicians Guild of America being formed and getting its briefly-held AMPP jurisdiction. There was also no provision for studio staff musicians.

board and there's nothing we can do about it, even if we wanted."

Meantime, top publishing firms like Chappell Music and Big Three are pressing their fight to change the new publishers' distribution plan. Both firms claim that the logging basis for 42% of the publishers' dividends was made in a period of 1958-59 when there was flagrant buying of tv performances by some of the company.

A meeting of ASCAP's publishers classification committee was held Monday (7) and it's understood that pressure from such heavyweight firms as Chappell and the Big Three will result in a change of the logging period to minimize the effect of any payola performances.

"Minsky's Follies of 1961," with Lili St. Cyr, Three Monarchs, Staneks (7), Esmeralda & Pepe Lara, Sabra Samarr, Alan Conroy, Tommy Moe Raft, Irving Benson, Murray Briscoe, Dolores Reed, Enrique Heredia, Gillian Grey, Minsky Showgirls, Dance nd Nudes, Bill Reddie Orch (13); produced by Harold Minsky; choreography, Madame Kan $4 minimum.

Lili St. Cyr headlines "Minsky's Follies of 1961" which is one of Harold Minsky's lesser efforts here. Show is big, bawdy, brings back baggy-pants burlesque comics, has 12 dancing girls, 10 showgirls, and 14 nudes—so it should serve its purpose of filling the showroom three times nightly mostly with males, many of whom will linger in the casino afterwards.

Miss St. Cyr is as beautiful as ever, and undulates her shapely torso through a provocative strip which ends with the inevitable on-stage bath. The exotic turn handsomely showcases her as an ethereal goddess of sex.

Tommy Moe Raft, Irving Benson, and Murray Briscoe, vets of many Minsky shows, provide the ancient burlesque skits which are still good for yocks. Trio gets decorative assistance from Dolores Reed.

Th Three Monarchs, British harmonica comedians billed as "directly from th London Palladium," don't quite score with their sometimes obvious, sometimes subtle humor. The Staneks (7) is a fast-moving acrobatic team complete with skilled seesaw bouncing; teams of Sabra Samarr & Alan Conroy, and Esmeralda & Pepe Lara with guitarist Enrique Heredia contribute flair to the festivities; former with a nude dance, latter with a flamenco terp. Gillian Grey, a pretty redhead, i outstanding with production vocals.

"Follies," expertly guided by the Bill Reddie orch (13), runs through Dec. 28. Duke.

Slate Bros., H'wood

Hollywood, Nov. 4.

Will Jordan, Reiko; Tommy Oliver Trio (3); $1.50 cover, two-drink minimum.

Will Jordan, who, tradition has it, has the unique ability to make Ed Sullivan laugh, is the Slate Bros.' current comedian. He has a wide variety of material and much of it funny.

It was inescapable openin night, however, to avoid impression that he wasn't in best of form; first, because he used notes; second, because a good deal of his aterial was local to New York. It seems likely that he will write in the Coast slant as his engagement progresses, and, being more comfortable with his material, become more confident.

His bits include: Hitler's career being managed by a theatrical agent; satire on Sammy Davis Jr.; a combination character, Sabu-Peter Lorr ; satire on sci-fi, monster and war pix. Tendency exists for the bits to anticlimax but his gift for construction of visual images via sound effects is top rate.

As usual, those on the "in" at the Slate Bros. will appreciate that the racist jokes are so much blowing-off-steam, possibly in reaction to television's supercautiousness, and that lampooners and lampooned understand no offense is intended or taken. However, this reviewer thinks such jokes are out of line.

Reiko, Japanese singer in native garb, holds over with her comic contrast between demure old country manner and blatant stateside tune belting. Tommy Oliver's three-man combo provides good backing and does the up, Oliver singing.

Jordan's booked for four weeks. Glen.

Joe Howard's, N. Y.

Fran Warren with Sanford Gold Trio, Jimmy Mitchell; $5 minimum.

It's too bad that most of the young femme singers today get their start in a recording studio instead of with a big band. It they did, their piping techniques would be based on basic song selling rather than gimmicked sounds and multi-tracked effects. For th value of a big band incubation, the tyros can look and listen to Fran Warren as a case in point.

During the 1940s Miss Warren was vocalist with such high-powered band crews as Charlie Barnet and Claude Thornhill and what she learned in their service has not been in vain. She's got a style, a strong sense of lyric values and a stage demeanor that adds strongly to the overall singing segment. She knows how to fill her songbag with varied moods that showcase her vivid vocal capabilities to the hilt and she can keep a 30-minute session going without a letdown.

Miss Warren is the first in the room's new policy to spotlight "name" performers. In for a three-week run, sh should start the patronage ball rolling for this eastside intimery.

Although her background is with the big bands, the thrush is just as much at home with a trio backing in a light jazz groove. Sanford Gold's trio gives her the brisk downbeat that brightens her vocal displays. Gold leads at the piano and is assisted neatly by Ernie Furtado on bass and Maury Feld on drums.

The repertoire consists mainly of standards out of the Rodgers & Hart, Gershwin and Arlen catalogs as well as "Nice 'n' Easy," recently disked by Frank Sinatra. There are also her trademarked "Sunday Kind Of Love" and the rhythmic "Bye, Bye Blackbird" and "Swinging Down The Lane" to add punch to the performance. It's a slick job that could open up new avenues for her on the small-room circuit.

Piano interludes between Miss Warren's stints are deftly handled by Jimmy Mitchell. Gros.

Blue Angel, N. Y.

Dorothy London, Irwin Corey, Maysa Matarazzo, Jimmy Lyon Trio; $6-$7 minimum.

The eastside intemery featuring repeat fave Dorothy Loudon along with Professor Irwin Corey, who leaves the old downtown stand, sister club Village Vanguard, for this upt wn whirl. Spread also intros Brazilian singer Maysa Matarazzo to New York audiences (see new acts).

Miss London, a polished commedienne-singer, mes on with the Angel audience as though she were whooping it up for friends h Her and comedy are consistently top-drawer sophisticated material, and the projection is likewise sock and inviting. Jimmy Lyon tri gives expert backing, probably by memory.

Professor Corey doesn't alter the routine much f the uptowners, except, perhaps, to slightly downbeat the cerebral comedy and upbeat farce clow ing. He brings upfronters into the act, but never roughs them up to the point of hurt feelings. Bill.

Beverly Hills, Ciney

Cincinnati, Nov. 4.

Gordon & Sheila MacRae, Jimm Edmondson, Moro-Landis Dancers (8) with Charlie Hines, Gardner Benedict Orch (16); Jimmy Wilber Tri Larry Vincent; $3-$4 minimum, $1-$1.50 cover.

This date is a homecoming for the MacRaes, rewarding their smash intro a year ago at Greater Ciney's ace cafe. Their stellar performance with new trimi ings points more playbacks and rooters. Jimmy Edmondson, the "Professor Backwards" and long-time local fave, supplies the yocks for the current topnotch session. Spice and beauty additions are by the Moro-Landis ensemble in two colorful production numbers.

Gordon MacRae, and his wife Sheila do a near-full hour of songs and comedy. Paired at start, he in tux and she in white gow and do a special "Show Time" medley. MacRae sol "If I Love You," "So In Love," "Sound of Music" and "Tonight" between impreshes of Ed Murrow, Godfrey, Como and Dea Martin, all sold to the hilt, and hits heavy with a medley of his film and record top tunes.

Sheila registers with carbons of Carol Channing, Lena Horne, Zsa Zsa Gabor and Dinah Shore. For a tandem song and dance specialty, in straws, she does a neat on-stage makeup of tights and tails for emphasis on a trim figure. Norman Leyden ably conduets the Gardner Benedict orch, which has six extra fiddles.

Edmondson, surefire with liners and gags on assorted topics and in rich Dixie accent, makes use of his trusty blackboard for nly several minutes of his 21-minute turn to spell and mingle words in upsidedown and backward writing.

Roosevelt Grill, N. Y.

Warren Covington and Tommy Dorsey Orch (16), Al Conte Trio; $1-2 minimum.

Continuing its policy of using name bands to attract the dancing wd to this eastside hotel room, John Horsman, general manager of the Roosevelt Hotel, has brought back the Tol Dorsey band, led by Warren Covington. This outfit roved a draw last year, and likely will be as successful on its current six-week engagement, judging from the reception opening night.

Covington made a rep for himself with his recording of "Tea For Two," cha-cha version, for Decca. And he was fine fettle for preem night. For his date here, he employing both pops and old-time faves, many of them from the Dorsey book. One of the most popular, of course, "Marie," a Dorsey trademark.

Covington warbles often but varies the monotony with sax and trombone solos. His current crew has five saxophones and the combo is at its best when these reed men have the spotlight.

Al Conte Trio again is in for relief, and has made a real niche for itself in this room. Per usual, it the pianistic leadership of Conte himself which seems to make the outfit jell. This three-some has been here for the last seven years. "Fascination," "Dancing in the Dark," "Night and Day" and "Mack the Knife" are examples of the dancable tunes the trio plays. Wear.

Trade Winds, Chi

Chicago, Nov. 3.

Marie McDonald, Marsh & Adams, Joe Parnello Trio; $2.50 cover.

Marie McDonald, very decorative. Chi-bowing in this Rush St. smallery with a turn that's dismiltingly all vocal for lack of stagespace. She simply is not up to the demands of standup thrushing, displaying a pleasant that requires more control and gination than she now manages.

Her catalog ranges from uptempo to torchanting (e.g. "Party's Over"), and includes a couple of special items in dubious taste. One is a biographical kidder, the other a blues-style satirization of Zsa Zsa Gabor. Neither is especially clever. Partly for a tepid reeeption, it's supposed, she steered her 25 inutes or so with hesitancy, also incing some regrettable touchiness with customers.

Comics Lou Marsh & Tony Adams, registered well with lotsa unabashed corn in the predictable clown (Marsh)-straightman (Adams) pattern. Act covers some dependable sex-and-pansy slants, parodies on obvious radio-tv vices, warbler impreshes, and a windup clamor of trumpets.

Team makes a sympathetic pair, displays a fine flair for their stuff, but manifestly needs some fresher gimmieks. At opener, Adams is on solo for five minutes in gag delay of Marsh's entry, and that is too trusting of most audiences.

Joe Parnello Trio backs ably. Vic Damone and Allen Drake are next, Nov. 16. Pit.

Barclay, Toronto

Toronto, Nov. 2.

Larry Steele's "Sin Affairs Revue of '61"; with Slappy White, Roz Croney, Carlos & Mike, Amanda Thigpen, Andre Pitts, Minnie Murphy, Beige Beauties and Boys (16); Larry Steele, producer and emcee; Paul Grosney Orch; six four imported players (13); $2 admission.

Apart from the smiling but languid emceeing of Larry Steele, producer-composer, and the relaxed story-telling of Melvin (Slappy) White, cast of "Smart Affairs Revue of '61" ckays the claim that this is the swiftest-moving unit to hold the stage at Al Siegel's Bar-

It's the musical's first visit to Canada and the opulence and high spirits of the performers are evident from the teeoff routine when 10 girls in evening gowns and six boys in grey toppers and tails get roceedings underway. From there on, speed and color is the keynote.

Carlos (Arroyo) & Mike (Ramos) are in the second spot for their cha-cha taps and concerto eccentries, alternated by clever challenges.

Amanda Thigpen does torrid song-styling of "All of Me" and "After You've Gone"—in interpolated bouncy and ballad treatment—complete with fine gravel-voiced finish in takeoff of Louis (Satchmo) Armstrong.

Minnie Murphy, as the Harlem deb who goes to Africa because "She's in Love with the Rhythm of the Drums," leads into a story-drama. This is notable for the voodoo moods of Andre Pitts, the incantations of the chorus, and the exciting finish when Roz Croney, as a limbo dancer, orders the bamboo spear lowered in four successful climaxing with a foot-above-the-floor barrier under which she slide—with undulations.

For a change of pace, Slappy White proves a good story-tellering comedian who kept in clean but funny for 20 minutes when caught; with Steele singing "It's the Beat" and leading into the dance finale. It's a smart revue, with rhythm of song and dance, color and speed, predominant. McStay.

Additional Night Club Reviews page 60.

Chateau Madrid, N.Y.

Tun-Tun, Henry & Leonella, Estelita Salinas, Angel & Carmelilla, Chateau Madrid dancers; Chino Orch, Caney Orch; $5-$6 minimum.

Angel Lopez has one of his better shows with this layout, tabbed "A Night in Acapulco," for no particular reason. The pop midtown room, which has grown under Lopez in recent years, has a real anchor in the half-pint Tun-Tun. He was here last December, but his current act is far better than on that appearance.

For thing, the Mexican dwarflike comic has speeded up his routine and eliminated too much gagging. The stunt of singing a song in Spanish, Italian and then English is retained as is the bit with the tall, comely chorine who looms almost twice his size. His takeoffs on Ed Sullivan, Nat King Cole, Vaughn Monroe and even Elvis Presley are solid. The miniature bull fight still is his final but it's put across with more ease.

Henry & Leonella provide a swift-moving dance act that is far different from the turns usually spotted here. Acrobatic, adagio and typical ballroom stuff is effected by the pair. She's a very tall femme, but graceful while he is even taller. Made a hit here.

The flamenco dance combo of Angel & Carmelilla scores handily. Besides many slick heel-and-toe routines, Angel, male member of combo, has a terp solo that is the fest of its kind seen in N. Y. for some time. All this act seems to need is a bit more polish to qualify for dates in larger rooms. Estelita Salinas, attractive blonde, does well with three songs, all chirped in Spanish.

The Chino orch and Caney combo provide music for the dancing, the former being credited with playing the show. Wear.

Freddie's, Mpls.

Minneapolis, Nov. 1.

Sue-Danes (3) with Bendt Hallberg, Herb Pilhofe trio; $2-$2.50 cover.

Their appearance here this fortnight, following their U.S. debut at the Cocoanut Grove in L.A., must seem like home coming to the Swe-Danes, a jazz trio with a lot of native appeal. Heav. demand for table reservations indicates there's considerable interest in the group, despite its lack of local reputation, in this predominantly Swedish and Norwegian rea.

Swedish thrush Alice Babs and h two male companions, Svend Asmussen and Ulrik Neuman, are talented and attractive young people. Their routine is a radical departure from standard bistro fare, but it's loaded with melody, humor and charm. They're at their best harmonizing "Side by Side," swinging "When Your Time Comes to Go" and providing instrumental sound effects the "Swe-Danes Symphony."

Miss Babs adds a novel touch, yodeling "Cuckoo Bird," a Swedish folk song, and the boys, accomplished violinist and guitarist, accent the international flavor with a multi-style version of "O Sole Mio." Act bogs down a bit when the men indulge in a comi bit of patter, but otherwise it's all on the plus side. Rees.

Tidelands, Houston

Houston, Nov. 1.

Lenny Maxwell, Toni Carroll, Don Cannon Orch (6); no cover or minimum.

Lenny Maxwell belongs to the current school of young comics who write their own material and are as out as a .150 hitter. He opens to varied response, but builds during his 45 minutes as auditors begin to understand him. Material is generally good, and he'll do even better when hepsters get the word and start to pour into club.

Appearing before election, comic defends Republican foreign policy: "We're still friendly with Canada." He's devastating with comments on surplus farm products, explores the weirdniks—"They're having a party in a brand new project of condemned buildings"—and tears up "Wagon Train" on tv.

Perhaps best of all is the prison community sing, with Maxwell as the old con m.c. shouting, "All right, now the murderers." Then, "O.k., tax evaders. EVERYBODY!" Maxwell may wax an album while at Tidelands, and hopes he'll hit it as big as Bob Newhart and Dave Gardner, whose longplays cut here did better than okay.

Toni Carroll has added touch of production to her act since she was here about a year ago. She's added Van Moreno as musical conductor, and he takes turns at 88s and skins. A former Miss Missouri, she could perhaps carry act by just standing on stage for her 28 minutes. That she's capable with vocals seems almost like a bonus.

Show plays for two weeks. Skip.

La Rose, Frankfurt

Frankfurt, Nov. 1.

Cheri Hell, La Zuidema, Eddy Georgia, La Conchita, Esmeralda, Romance, Micaelli, Girani Orch (3); cover $1.25.

While Frankfurt nightclub life generally centers around vaudeville and cabaret, the town's most enterprising club owner (who has half a dozen clubs, pubs and restaurants under his aegis), Helmut Dettmer, has come up with something different—a show of transvestites.

The German burghers, international tourists, and jaded GI's who comprise the nitery-going audience, are crowding in to see the first different nightclub show that the town has offered in a long time. Although the club is expensive going for Germany ($1.25 cover plus about $2 for drinks, double that of other clubs), business is excellent, proving that something novel will always draw here.

The newly-decorated La Rose nightclub looks like the lush, lavish drawing room of a successful Paris cocotte. It has heavy satin drapes, thick Persian carpets covering the floor (except for a postage-stamp area reserved for dancing, which offers only a simple sort of wall-to-wall carpeting), heavy cut-glass, leaf-entwined candelabra and murky lighting.

And the transvestites are extremely good, clean and clever instead of tawdry as some of these European boy-girl-switch shows tend to be.

Master-mistress-of-ceremonies is Cheri Hell, a Mae West-y sort of creation who slinks around in a padded red lace gown singing in a husky voice and introing the other acts. Blond singer Eddy Georgia, advertised as "back from New York," sings French love songs in a voice as low as the lighting, while brunette Romance sings and dances.

Exotic Javanese dances are the specialty of La Zuidema, billed as Indonesian guest. Micaelli is an enormous blond boy-girl who plays the accordion, but the absolute stunner of the show is Esmeralda, a South American import, who does a strip right down to the bare bosoms and G-string.

Even those in the front-rows are forced to wonder how this beautiful "babe" got the chest-full of appeal, because only a thin gauze veil separates "her" from the audience.

While the transvestites are standard show biz for the Parisites, this is a something new approach for Frankfurt. And the fact that the show is done as a tasteful travesty instead of being downright dirty makes it all the more amusing.

The "girls" wear exquisite evening gowns, and there's not a single hairy leg to spoil the illusion. Haze.

Cover Charge Ban K.O.'s Mexico City Nitery Biz, Ops Drop Foreign Names

Mexico City, Nov. 8.

A sudden, unexpected decision by the Office of Public Entertainments which bars minimum cover charges in night clubs has aroused a storm of controversy and uncertainty here.

Night club managements claim they are being discriminated against and public will "suffer" since they cannot hire international performers. They also infer that if the ban continues they may drop local acts as well.

The cover charge veto has repercussions in that contractual negotiations for about a dozen international stars are now off. Included in the group are Marlene Dietrich, Frank Sinatra, Sammy Davis Jr., Josephine Baker, Louis "Satchmo" Armstrong, Caterina Valente, Domenico Modugno and others.

Protest to Mayor

Club owners have been closeted with Mayor Ernesto P. Uruchurtu, and will attempt to reach President Adolfo Lopez Mateos to obtain a cancellation of the cover charge prohibition. Consensus is that the measure is "totally prejudicial to the economic interests of our business."

Mayor Uruchurtu, it is learned, was directly responsible for imposing the ban. He said he ordered elimination of the cover charge as "protection for the public." Previously clubs had been going far overboard in minimum charges and strongly worded complaints had been registered about high cost of liquor in niteries, and even in package stores.

A spotcheck of a few of the luxury clubs before the ban was im-

Hong Kong Beauty Contest in Foldo

Hong Kong, Nov. 8.

Cancellation of the "Miss World Hong Kong Contest for 1960," because of lack of entries, didn't cause any raised eyebrows here. It was generally to be expected because Chinese girls, traditionally speaking, frown upon entering such beauty contsts.

However, at least one previous beauty contest winner, Miss Judy Dann, had done rather well for herself. As her prize, she went to Hollywood where she appeared in two films, in one of which, titled "The Painted Veil," she played opposite George Sanders.

Soon to be released films like "The World of Suzie Wong" (Par) may tend to give the impression to the outside world that Hong Kong girls are so typed. This is viewed here as misleading. Because Hong Kong girls, coming from good families as a rule, just don't think of entering beauty contests.

Marlene's 30G, Mont'l

Montreal, Nov. 8.

Despite plenty of publicity during her stay last week at Her Majesty's Theatre, Marlene Dietrich and her vaude-type offering drew a disappointing $30,000 at a $3.95 top in this 1,704-seater.

Reviews for the most part were solid for La Dietrich but panned the balance of show.

Industrial Show Review

General Motors

General Motors presentation of "Magic Man," with Hal England, Cynthia Scott, Illona Murai. Created and staged by Feuer & Martin; songs by Bob Haymes; choreography, Bob Hamilt musical director, Peter Matz; costumes and lighting, Robert Fletcher; production under supervision of Campbell-Ewald. At Waldorf-Astoria (N.Y.) rand ballroom; Nov. 2.

Genral Motors more or less annual Motoramas have always been industrial showmanship of the Cadillac class. The current production, "Magic Man," while no great shakes on entertainment value, still serves as an effective vehicle through which to showcase the '61 line of GM cars and, additionally, is an effective shill to lure the public. Luring the public even with a free show, may not be easy as it might seem at first glance as all of the new models already have appeared in dealers' showrooms and the public has had ample opportunity to audition the merchandise.

This is one of those shows where one goes away whistling the costumes. The music by Bob Haymes is strictly lowercase and the lyrics also by Haymes, are, of course, expected to do double duty legitimate numbers at the sam time showcasing the various cars. This was managed via a slim plot line of a boy (Hal England) dreaming he was in a sort of an "Alice in Wonderland" world where he was required to compete against an evil witch (Illona Murai). He did this by matching her charms with a GM car and, in the end comes off a winner, natch. Principals Hal England, Cynthia Scott and Illona Murai came through in acceptable fashion considering the paucity of the material.

The real heros of the show were the cars themselves (particularly the new compacts) which, once again, are mounted on outriggers on the stage and come down to the audience for a bow and a closeup looksee. The various supplementary exhibits by the various GM divisions and subsidiaries are all topnotch, particularly since most require some degree of personal participation to make them work.

If this 1960 Motorama, when taken from an overall viewpoint, is in the Cadillac class, then the 45-minute show must fall somewhere between Pontiac and Buick. Syd.

London, Nov. 8.

The acquisition last week by Stoll Theatres Corp. Ltd. of a voting majority of Moss' Empires Ltd. stock swiftly ended what promised to be the biggest takeover battle in British show biz for years.

This move, helmed by Stoll topper Prince Littler, followed closely on the heels of a bid of $15,960,000 made by Investment Registry for th Moss' preference and ordinary share capital on behalf of a private company headed by real estate tycoon Charles Clore, another property giant Jack Cotton, and impresario Bernard Delfont.

The Stoll victory ended a lot of speculation and reports on what the Clore group intended to do with the 16 Moss' Empires theatres, including fears that some houses would be torn dow and converted into office blocks.

Littler, wh forecasts that a complete merger betwen Moss' and Stoll is highly probable, is on record as saying that "it's business as usual for all our theatres," including the London showhouses, London Palladium and Victori Palace.

Stoll pulled off its coup by grabbing "several hundred thousand Moss' shares, ordinary and preference, on the market.

Latino Countries Ink Jane Russell

Buenos Aires, Nov. 8.

Jane Russell is booked to open a four-day stand next Mon. (14) at the Lococo circuit's major "Opera" showcase. Her date there comes two weeks after Harry James and his band closed a seven-day stint in the same house. Appearing at the tail-end of the season, James' twice-daily performances did not sell out, possibly because the public felt the orch could be seen on tv for free.

Meantime, Brazilian agent Cela, through Mario Hernandez, has made a fresh bid to Frank Sinatra's demand for $70,000 weekly for a South American tour. Cela is offering $50,000 per week, free of all expenses and taxes, for a four-week tour which would clude appearances in Argentin Brazil, Uruguay and Chile.

Cela's bid works out to a record 4,500,000 pesos, apart from cost of plane fares, hotels, bands, advertising, etc. It would involve fixing admissions at $5 for front row stalls. The promoters believe that the Buenos Aires public would pay that and more to hear Sinatra, but the booking would have to be at a favorable time of the year to be successful.

A special musical show will be built around Miss Russell's date at Lococo "Opera." Following her appearance there, she goes to Montevideo for one day, returns here for nitery work and heads to Santiago de Chile for four days. She'll wind up her stay in this sector with a tv performance on a Buenos Aires station.

Pat Boone reportedly also be booked for appearances here before the year is out. Although tv may detract from the American stars' b.o. pull in theatrical bookings, it helps cover the high cost of importing them.

Dink Freeman to Chicago

Dink Freeman will be master of ceremonies for the show opening New Year's Eve at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago.

Booking is for four weeks.

Maria Tallchief and Andre Eglevsky will dance the leading roles in "Raymonda" with the Washington Ballet Nov. 11-13, at Lisner Auditorium at the Capitol.

'New Wave' Comics May Rap Niteries But They'll Be Back, Say Vet Bonifaces

"They'll all be back playing nightclubs," say the bonifaces looking over the list of the new wave comics who have defected from that medium. The cafe owners are peeved at the fact that these comics who first came to national prominence in the cafes now find that they don't like to work for itery audiences. However, they point out that the history of the entertainment industry is filled with examples of performers who turned their back on one medium only to return when they believed everybody had forgotten their rash promises.

The most conspicuous example, it's pointed out, is Danny Kaye, who nearly 15 years ago vowed that he would never perform in a cafe following a date Florida. Thi was kept for 15 years, but Kaye recently played the Desert Inn, Las Vegas.

The major peeve by performers such as Shelley Berman and Bob Newhart, who recently voiced opposition to nitery stands, is that drunks and other varieties of inattentive and heckling listeners make life difficult for performers and sometimes degrade their act. The bulk of bonifaces are sympatico with that viewpoint, since they don't like noisy hecklers anymore than a performer does. They also feel that it doesn't do their establishment any good to have one patron spoil the show for a roomful of people.

However, they point out that the cafes were important in the development of both of these performers. Both grew up learning to cope with these evils and both overcame them. At this point, the operators point out, their services are wanted in concert halls and elsewhere. It is true they do not need niteries at this point. But there will come a time when they do. Their big b.o. can decline in concerts in a season or two, television dates may not come with their accustomed frequency, and they had better keep in contact with an occasional cafe date in preparation for the time when cafes may comprise the major source of income. Cafe owners, generally, aren't vindictive. They'll still play 'em if the draw is still there.

Sahl's Tour May Roll Up $250,000

The first 11 one-nighters by edian Mort Sahl on his current cross-country concert tour grossed $91,173. With 17 grosses yet to be tabulated, it's estimated that Sahl will pull in between $225,000 and $250,000.

SENNES SEES OVER-EXPOSURE

"Names" Las Vegas have reached the point of diminishing returns. Within a year, there won't be a dozen names that will pack 'em in," says Frank Sennes, who books the Desert Inn, Stardust and Riviera in Las Vegas and operates the Moulin Rouge and Ciro's, Hollywood. Sennes, who is currently in New York, has inked "La Plume de Ma Tante" for the Riviera, Las Vegas, Dec. 22 for a minim m of eight weeks.

Sennes is scouting around for bookings based on ideas. He points out that Le Lido shows at The Stardust have had long runs. It's expected that the present edition which opened several weeks ago, will remain for at least 18 months. In three years there have only been three shows there, except for the fill-in shows between Le Lido exhibits. He also points out that the Minsky shows at the Dunes have also done exceedingly well, and the "Folies Bergere" at the Tropicana has been a strong magnet. In addition, it's pointed out that the initial Japanese show the New Frontier was also a powerful puller.

Sennes who recently took on the Riviera following the resignation of Sammy Lewis, will continue the policy of trying to get le iters for the spot. "La Plume" is the third show from the atelier of David Merrick to hit that spot. Others were "Destry Rides Again" and "The World of Suzie Wong."

Sennes says that nai have had frequent exposures in Las Vegas, television, films and cafes around the country, come with few new facets for Las Vegas. It's

A Trend

Chicago, Nov. 8.

Current Palmer House Empire Room layout includes harmonicist Leo Diamond. Next bill will have another mouth organist, Johnny O'Brien.

So where's Larry Adler?

The season of agency changes is again plaguing the major offices. Again, there is a lot of performer movement from one office to another. The net gain or the net loss for any particular agency is virtually nil, since most offices get probably as many acts as they lose. However, the percenters dread the shifts that is normal for this time of year.

One important shift is that of Pearl Bailey from the William Morris Agency to Joe Glaser's Associated Booking Corp. This ends an association of many years. Reason is said to be the more advantageous booking setup for Miss Bailey's husband, bandleader Louis Bellson. The Morris Agency, on the other hand took over the bookings of Georgia Gibbs. Miss Gibbs, with the Morris office some years ago, has made the complete swing of agencies since then, hav-

MCA Opens In Tokyo, Sydney

Hong Kong, Nov. 8.

Music Corp. of America TV Ltd., international division, with headquarters in Toronto, Canada, is expanding its business to the Far East and Australia, according to Berle Adams, touring executive.

MCA offices will be opened in Tokyo and Australia by the first of 1961, Adams revealed, who came in from Australi where he had been on an extended stay primarily to set up the MCA office there. Peter McFarland, a Canadian, will be in charge of the Sydney office. The Tokyo office will be managed by Henry T. Wakabayshi and Bobby Hirai.

Decision to open offices in the Far East and Australia fundamentally means that MCA recognizes there is plenty of native talent, especially for tele, in these areas. Adams said obviously there was considerable talent in Japan. A Japanese show, "Holiday In Japan," which was brought out of Japan by producer Steve Parker under MCA presentation, has been doing great in the U.S.

Martin Jurow Returning To Morris; Ex-Indie Prod.

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Martin Jurow will return to the William Morris Agency after several years in other spheres of the entertainment industry. Jurow, upon completion of "Beach Pad" for Paramount which will follow the current shooting of "Breakfast at Tiffany's" resumes agency chores.

Jurow has served with both MCA and Morris, and left the latter office some years ago to become executive assistant to the late Harry Cohn, Columbia Pictures prexy. He later formed a production partnership with Dick Shepard, also a MCA alumnus. Shepard's plans are unset.

FRANKIE FORD and GARY REYNOLDS

Now in their

4th SMASH WEEK at the LATIN QUARTER NEW YORK

HELD OVER FOUR MORE

Thank you Mr. Loew and Mr. Risman for the record breaking distinction of returning us to the Latin Quarter within a six month period.

Management: AGNETA AGENCY Americas Bldg. Radio City, N. Y.

GAC

New York Post, Oct. 15
EARL WILSON
"In the New Latin Quarter 'Viva la Femme' Show FORD and REYNOLDS, the comedy team, get the big applause."

New York Journal-American Oct. 1
LOUIS SOBOL
"That's a sizzling show at the Latin Quarter. There are two comical fellows—FORD and REYNOLDS who had the crowded room howling and guffawing with their precious tomfoolery."

New York Journal-Ameri Oct. 14
GENE KNIGHT
"Nobody can beat a Latin Quarter show, but last night somebody did. It was a new Latin Quarter Revue, 'Viva la Femme'. Socka success from start to finish. Best on a long program were Frank Ford and Gary Reynolds, comedians, real finds; they sang, danced, played musical instruments. Crazy, man, crazy."

New York World-Telegram Oct. 14
ROBERT DANA
"Blockbuster quality to 'Viva la Femme' presented last night at LATIN QUARTER. Show stoppers of the evening were FORD and REYNOLDS, one of the most talented comedy teams in the nation. They work clean and furiously."

New York Mirror, Oct. 16
LEE MORTIMER
"'Viva la Femme' opened at the Latin Quarter and Broadway is Broadway once again. FORD and REYNOLDS, a comedy team I never seen before are two of the zaniest guys to hit the stem in a long, long time. And they'll be around for a long, long time. They're fresh, silly, crozy, and what is more—funny."

VARIETY
"Frank Ford and Gory Reynolds form a comedy team to be heard of plenty. A mad clowning act. Too infrequently has a pair of comics created such waves of hilarity."

CHEZ PAREE, CHI, HIT BY FORECLOSURE SUIT

Chicago, Nov. 8.

The shuttered, and apparently kaput, Chez Paree has another woe—a suit seeking foreclosure of a $130,561 mortgage balance. The action, filed by an insurance firm, claims the Chez management defaulted on its July payment of $2,625, and also charges that 1959 real estate taxes totaling $3,111 plus unstated insurance premiums are likewise in arrears.

Nitery has been dark since mid-July.

ing hit General Artists Corp. and MCA in the interim.

GAC has also taken Celeste Holm in recent weeks. While it would be hard for that agency to compensate for the loss of Johnny Mathis to MCA, it has lined up a net gain in the number of performers going over to their office.

MCA, on the other hand, scored a heavy coup with its acquisition of Bob Newhart. Comic was being booked by the Morris office sans contract. However, strong commitments by MCA to Newhart in teevee caused the comedian to make a firm alignment.

The reasons for the shifts . . Some moves are based on promises by various offices, while others are based on the belief by performers that their careers aren't moving with the desired speed and in the right direction. Most performers change in the belief that a new alignment causes a new flurry of action and therefore a move is justified. In this respect, an act sometimes takes a chance by moving.

REGAL, CHI, DIGS R&B

Chicago, Nov. 8.

Regal Theatre, southside indie vaudepic house, having found the rhythm & blues stageshow format its best boxoffice bet, has booked another one starting Friday (11).

Tapped for a single stanza are Savannah Churchill, Stuffy Bryant, Little Willie John, the Shepherds, Four Sounds, and the Upsetters.

Urges ANTA to Send 1-Ring Circus to Brazil

American National Theatre & Academy, as part of its global program under State Department auspices, has been asked to send a one-ring circus to Brazil to follow Russian circus which played there a few months ago.

William Fields, publicity chief for the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus, made the request to Ed Sullivan, who is a member of the "Variety Panel" which is assisting ANTA in this phase of its work. Fields stated that other requests for circuses have also come from Europe and the Orient. Fields, however, did not ask ANTA to send the Ringling circus abroad.

Show Biz in Dire Need Of an Apprentice School, Sez Roberta Sherwood

Pittsburgh, Nov. 8.

Roberta Sherwood has her 19-year-old son, Don Lanning, with her here for her Ankara engagement and has been getting him ready for a show biz future much in the manner her father, monologist Bob Sherwood, got her into vaude.

Miss Sherwood said that her boy is now getting his training and will soon leave her to go back to the U. of Miami. At that time her 18-year-old son, Jerry, will join her. He is now doing club dates around Miami Beach, beside going to school.

"Our business is in dire need of an apprentice school," Miss Sherwood told VARIETY here, "and we need it badly. There aren't any places, as your paper says, 'to be bad.'"

When asked what career she wanted for her three boys, Miss Sherwood said, "I'd love to see them all in my business and that's why I'm training them but I want them to get their education. We don't know which way our business will go and education is always important."

She said the only places now existing for youngsters to learn is in college or summer theatre. When asked what does a youngster do if he does not have the money for college nor the talent for summer theatre, she said, "If the kid wants to bad enough he'll get a hearing somewhere, but I'm afraid with the lack of training grounds, we are going to run out of stars to keep our business going."

AGVA REVIVES ITS TALENT NIGHTS IN CHI

Chicago, Nov. 8.

American Guild of Variety Artists and the Trade Winds nitery revived the union's talent showcasing and celebrity nights layout, kickoffer was Monday (7) and weekly thereafter.

AGVA project, long dormant here, had been reactivated last year at the Chez Paree, but that club's foldo necessitated the site switch.

Same format will prevail for the Trade Winds outings, using rotating celeb emcees. First will be Sun-Times columnist Irv Kupcinet.

Cover Charges

posed, showed that the going price for a bottle of Vat 69, for example, was 375 pesos, which is $30. Champagne prices have skyrocketed, as well as brandy, etc.

Blame Federal Tax

But the situation is not the outcome of tourist gouging by greedy club impresarios. Actually, it stems from the federal 100% tax hike on all liquor back in April, 1958, as an "austerity" measure of the regime of then president Adolfo Ruiz Cortines.

If the cover charge ban continues, and Mayor Uruchurtu appears adamant (he's the man who has kept film admission prices pegged at 32c in first-run houses for years), then Mexico's night life, already crippled by a one ayem curfew for all but a handful of deluxe spots, is in for a pratfall. Los Globos, one of the top spots, already is preparing to shut its doors and change over to a parking lot if situation isn't eased soon.

Ice Show Review

Holiday on Ice of 1961

Portland, Ore., Nov. 5.

Morris Chalfen presents "Holiday On Ice of 1961" with Jinx Clark, Tommy Collins, Dorothy Goos, Williams Family (4), Paul Andre, Ives & French, Werner Muller, Ray Balmer, Alfredo Mendoza, Alice Quessy, Tommy Allen, Tony & Donna Jeanne LeMac, John LaDue, Buddy & Baddy, Renate Muller, Glamour "Icers" (24), "Ice"-Squires (12). Ben Stabler Orch (20); executive producer, Ruth Tyson; choreography, Chester Hale; costumes, Freddy Wittop; sets, Ted Meza; lighting, Doug Morris. Opened Nov. 3, '60 at Memorial Coliseum, Portland, Ore.; $3.50 top.

The 16th anniversary of Morris Chalfen's "Holiday On Ice" is a smash attraction for the opening of the new $8,500,000 Coliseum. This is the fifth year that HOI has played here, but never in a setting like the present one. Show broke all records for advance seat sale and played to a capacity 10,100 customers on opening night (3).

New layout is keyed to mass appeal with emphasis on talent, grace, comedy, and spectacle. Icer gets off to a slow start, but builds fast for solid results during the rest of its two and a half hours. Blader retains its big league status despite the lack of a current champ or name star.

Producer Chalfen has come up with 21 numbers, including six productions featuring specialties topped with beautiful, creative costumes, outstanding lighting, and fine choreography. "Slavic Rhapsody" and "Land, Sea, & Air" beset.

Jinx Clark stars in some better than average solos and teams with Alfredo Mendoza for startling adagioing. The Williams Family (4), featuring Debbie (7 yrs.) and Robbie (4 yrs.), score solidly with their stint. Tommy Allen amazes with his acro-spinning stuff.

Buddy & Baddy, Ives & French, and Paul Andre garner belly laughs with their comedy shenanigans. Werner Muller has the stubholders gasping with his dangerous jumping and stilt-skating. Dorothy Goos glides and spins gracefully with nifty jump-splits. Petite Alice Quessy delivers some acro dancing on blades that is usually reserved for the stage. Her doll dance is an unusual one.

Ruth Tyson's first soo production is topdrawer. Musical score, used with pre-recorded tapes, delights the audience throughout. Seat sale for the entire 11 days is heavy. The much needed Memorial Coliseum gets a successful sendoff with this lavish ice show.

Feve.

MOSCOW UNCOVERS 2D U.S. PIANIST—JANIS

Moscow, Nov. 1.

Moscow has just discovered that the U.S. has more than one talented pianist in its musical ranks after having heard Byron Janis in the Big Conservatory Hall. Acclaimed "a smashing success" by both music lovers and crix, the young American pianist was likened to the much-idolized 'Vanya' Cliburn and praised by Russo pianist Grigory Ginzburg for "captivating artistry."

Playing to jampacked audiences at Moscow's Chaikovsky Concert Hall and Conservatory, he was given the most enthusiastic ovation which was followed by numerous encores. What the Russians particularly liked about "the promising American pianist he was known to be," to quote from the Culture Ministry's mag, Soviet Culture, is that despite his brilliant technique, Byron Janis "is not just one of those cold virtuosi that seem to be in current fashion some places in the West but . . . a warm, sincere and aesthetically mature artist."

While in Russia, Janis is engaged in a rather busy concert schedule which takes him to Moscow, Leningrad and other big cities of the USSR. He is expected back in Moscow this week when he will perform Rakhmaninov and Gershwin at the Conservatory. All his performances already has been sold out.

Sahl's Tour

"Holiday On Ice of 1961," Royal Ballet was at Auditorium and "The Pleasure of His Company" had played the Paramount Mon. (31) and Tues. (1).

Sahl's package racked up a near capacity $7,000 in one evening performance at the Queen Elizabeth Theatre in Vancouver, B.C. on Tues. (1). It also played to SRO at Orpheum Theatre, Seattle, Wed. evening (2) with $9,500 in the till. Sahl's take was $12,000 for the three dates with Northwest Releasing getting $10,500 as its share.

Jaye P. in Quick Cloister Exit for 'Benny' Guester

Hollywood, Nov. 8.

Jaye P. Morgan, originally skedded to play the Cloister for 10 days, granted a release from her commitment by boite ops Joe Miklos and Al Loeb after three days so she could fly east over the weekend for a taped guesting on the "Jack Benny Show." Chirp opened Thursday (3) and closed Saturday.

Miss Morgan, of course, will be responsible for paying off the musicians for contracted engagement. Bullets Durgom, singer's manager, wanted her to make the "Benny" guest shot for its national credit value, with coin incidental.

DOUGLAS' CAFE DATES

Writer-comedian Jack Douglas has lined up a trio of cafe dates. Douglas is set to come into New York in February at Basin St. East on the bill with Ella Fitzgerald.

Douglas is also pacted for the Christmas-New Years bill at the hungry i, San Francisco, and the Tidelands, Houston, Jan. 20.

ices to picture operators, stage employes and operating engineers, the Labor Review claimed that "theatre owners are acting as a unit now. Regardless of what the competition may be, when it comes to the proposition of warring on labor and destroying jobs, competitors became friends."

The front page article continued, "What this maneuver on the part of theatre owners . . . will result in will be watched carefully by all theatre goers and the general public of Minneapolis.

"Whether the fortunes the public spends with theatres should be used to disrupt the economy of our fair city in a question that will receive considerable study . . ."

Earlier, members of the Stage Employes union, involved in a two-month-old strike at the State theatre, aired their grievances against the Minnesota Amusement Company (United Paramount) in a full-page ad in the Labor Review. Main issue at stake in the strike is the number of stagehands to be employed by the company which is insisting on reducing from five to two the number it employes at the State in downtown Minneapolis.

Charles Winchell, Minnesota Amusement Company president, said last week, "We are perfectly willing to hire union help for all required services. But we're a little tired of featherbedding, and that's all that is involved here."

Non-Union Boothman

The State has been using a non-union projectionist si Sept. 1 when union projectionists refused to cross IATSE picket li According to company spokesmen, the strike has not caused any appreciable loss of business. They pointed out that recent openings at the State have drawn better than the same films have grossed elsewhere in the country.

The union's newspaper blast thanked the public and organized labor "for assisting us in our battle to keep the State Theatre from destroying our jobs and our homes . . ." Under the heading "State Theatre Locks Out Members Stage Employes Local 13," the ad claimed that the theatre management is "smashing at best traditions of th theatre."

In addition to maintaining that the company is seeking to destroy stagehands' jobs, the ad said that the "attack on stage employes (is an) attack on every worker in Minneapolis." It noted that "stage employes (are) in theatre for safety and comfort (of) patrons" and listed stagehands' duties.

Ad warned readers, "Don't let State Theatre cheat you! A show is not a show without stagehands." It also advised labor readership, "Should we fail, your home m be next."

Big League Ball

inauguration of American league baseball next April and the subsequent kickoff of the Minnesota Vikings football team, which will become a member of the National Pro football league next fall, will further hurt many regional theatres operating at present on a narrow profit margin.

Exhibitors point out that daylight saving time the past two summers has taken a frightful toll on boxoffice receipts. Major league baseball and football, some feel, will constitute second and third strikes against them.

The Minneapolis Tribune, in a lead business article last week, reported that Twi Cities businessmen see a $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 annual boost to local trade as a result of the Senators' transfer here. This is based the article said, on a survey by the Milwaukee Association of Commerce after the Braves moved to that city from Boston.

Jeffrey Hunter

firely on performance and th portance of the picture—not on the character portrayed. Smart money is convinced that Hunter will become great boxoffice after he is seen as Christ."

Other sources say Hunter received firm offers to star in "The Young Doctor," "Magellan," "Captain Kidd," and two American films planned for production Italy.

Several reasons are advanced for Hunter's reluctance to rush into another assignment. Health is one. The actor was compelled to rest for a month after five months of absorption in an exhausting role.

But above all, he is said to be convinced that "Kings" iarks the beginning, not the end of his career, and he will not sign to star again unless the elements of script, director and cast are right.

30 Mins.
Town House, Pitt

Here is a surprising new turn who must have spent all her probation period rehearsing this new act. Her music is well arranged by Al Berkman, who also staged the act which must have cost her a sum she should have no trouble getting back. While she is not a topflight singer yet, she is a boxoffice "name" of sorts, sure to get good newspaper space. She sings well enough to hold down a spot on most cafe shows.

Miss Aadland wore a tasteful cocktail dress and her hair dropped gently over her shapely shoulders. There was no attempt to bring out any strong sex image in the turn and the name of Errol Flynn was not mentioned except in the Town House ads. She stayed on for 15 minutes before going off and received a tremendous salvo which kept her on the stage another 15. Her exits and entrances are still a little awkward but considering she was singing professionally before a night club crowd for the first time she did remarkably well. She does not consider the three days she put in at a L. A. cafe last year as a real engagement. In her press interviews here, she refers to this date as her night club debut.

GEORGE LEMONT
Comedy
30 Mins.
Neve, San Francisco

George Lemont has worked for some years in the Frisco area as a tv emcee and radio deejay but is just breaking in a nitery act.

He is a clever, original fellow, somewhat in the new sick-cerebral patter, and obviously is still groping his way with live audiences.

Much—probably too much—of his material consists of one-liners which are great for a radio deejay but seem rather attenuated for a nightclub. He also relies rather heavily on little props apparently left over from tv shows: sometimes these are very funny, sometimes only mildly amusing.

He uses a hilarious set piece about housing tracts which includes this kind of line: "Did you ever notice in a veterans' housing tract a lot of the houses look alike—and so do the kids?" Unfortunately, he doesn't seem to have enough of these longer bits and has to fall back on stringing out unrelated one-liners. Typical of the latter (as he reaches for a prop book): "Here's a book by Lord Chatterly."

With longer set pieces he would bring more authority and discipline to his act, a la Bob Newhart—indeed, Lemont's approach and humor tend to resemble Newhart's. Given time to sharpen his format, Lemont may become a fine nitery comic. Stef.

DIMITRI
Clown-Musician
45 Mins.
Puppet Theatre, Ascenza, Switzerland

Twentyfive-year-old Dimitri, son of two Swiss artists, is performing a highly versatile one-man show, once a week here at the town's Puppet Theatre.

A former student of Marcel Marceau, and later a circus performer working with Maisse, onetime partner of Grock, the young local lad has perfected a whole circus-arena full of tricks to delight the tourist audience in this town.

First scene interprets a local street: the flirtatious lady, the older gal walking her dog, the male flirt, the bewildered tourist. Versatile lad switches to sound to parody an ingenious musician who pulls strange gadgets out of a multi-pocketed vest and makes music with chunks of wood, and a piece of rubber piping, to elicit strange sounds and rhythms.

He does some tumbling numbers to reveal acrobatic skill, and highlight of the show is a hilarious mime of an original scene which he created—the fellow trying to set up a new chaise lounge and getting caught underneath it.

Dimitri also sings in a variety of tongues — German, Italian, French, Spanish and English. With his crew-cut and his wide clown's face he's an ingratiating and highly amusing youngster. Haze.

DUKE HAZLETT
Songs
30 Mins.
Roundtable, N. Y.

Duke Hazlett has been doing nicely on the cafe and tv guest circuit but heretofore has not been recorded for the New Act files. Hazlett is an unusual song purveyor in that he's virtually "The Rat Pack" (Sinatra, Martin, etc.) rolled into one. He's also quite candid about his Sinatra similarity. In introducing the tune, "All The Way," he says, "It's from the picture 'The Joker is Wild' which I hope you liked me in."

Despite the deft carboning of Sinatra's stance and vocal mannerisms, Hazlett is an okay songster in his own right. He's got an attractive rhythm beat when he works over the swingers and he builds a fine romantic mood on the ballad items.

His repertoire, too, is keyed to Sinatra's slick songbag. In addition to "All The Way," there are such nifties as "I've Got You Under My Skin," "Just In Time," "It Happened In Monterey," "My Funny Valentine," "I Thought About You" and "A Foggy Day." It's on "All The Way" that Dean Martin comes into the act with a Hazlett interpretation of Martin singing it while on the juice.

The sprightly musical arrangements have been supplied by Roger Kellaway who is also at the keyboard leading the fine rhythm assist supplied by the Dick Borden Trio (bass, guitar, drums). Gros.

MAYSA MATARAZZO
Songs
20 Mins
Blue Angel, N. Y.

Brazilian songstress Mayso Matrazzo, husky of pipes and frame, is getting a mildly good reception in her Blue Angel American bow. Her sexy good looks lend a lot to a torchy-catalog that's presented a bit too casually for top returns. With a limited but adequate range, she does the best with interesting variations in beat.

"Comic Valentine" was the only number with English lyrics in a set of a half-dozen offerings. French and South American ballads, however, are varied nicely for mood and interest. It should develop into a good supporting act for the intime circuit. Bill.

DICK CHASE
Comedy
24 Mins.
Chaudiere, Ottawa

Dick Chase, formerly of Chase & Mitchell, has a well-built comedy single. While he handled some comedy with the duo, he was basically the straight man; this switch to comedy while smooth, exhibits some difficulty. Strength of the session lies in Chase's clicko pipes which he uses seldom on their own, mostly in impressions.

Chase also works gags and gimmicks to present a solid comedy fare okay for niteries, radio and tv. Gorm.

No Return

been possible to trace the b.o. decline of a lot of toppers in the various Las Vegas rooms. Again, says Sennes, a booker has to fight and go through all kinds of contortions to get the headliners. And even after their tied up, the niteries frequently have a doubtful boxoffice factor.

Sennes revealed that he will try to carry out the same theme for the Moulin Rouge in Hollywood. He will try to book legit shows into that nitery. He is presently talking to producers about available properties for that nitery Sennes stated that he has run that cafe with headliners and only a half-dozen did any business for him. He's hoping that legit will open new avenue of revenue for the cafe.

Sennes says it's futile to play the same performers over and over again and then expect to pull as though they were fresh faces. The point is rapidly being rached says Sennes when gimmicks will replace a lot of expensive performers. The various nude shows he says have already proven that. He's studying other ideas including intimate revues and will look over any format that looks promising.

Basin St. East, N. Y.

One of the first of the postwar slugging phenoms who was turned into a top show biz name via a couple of smash disks, Johnnie Ray, compared to the new flock of teenage idols, is already in the "elder statesman" category though still a young man. This date, in fact, represents a comeback for Ray after a year's layoff due to a bout with tuberculosis, from which he has completely recovered.

Ray returns to the nitery scene in the best possible setting with an excellent book, standout arrangements by Joe Reisman, superlative backing by the Quincy Jones orch and in a spot that has been pulling big b.o. consistently from the hipper segment of cafe society. Ray exploits these plusses to the hilt and, on opening night (3), registered with solid impact to ropes-up biz. He's in for four weeks.

Ray's special twist is the intensity with which he projects his material. Although by current rock 'n' roll standards, Ray can be considered restrained, he still charges his vocals with a fervor and an excitement that communicates to the scrowd. Ray, in fact, can be considered the prototype of th current disk singers who subordinate finesse to raw feeling.

An excellent choice of songs gives Ray a long headstart in winning over the cafegoers. Opening with a brieht "Alright, Okay, You Win," he rides with a melange of fine oldies, such as "All of Me," "Yesterdays," "Love," "Walki My Baby Back Home," and the best of the more contemporary rhythm numbers, including "Shake a Hand," "What a Night," "One Hundred Years From Today" and his inevitable first two disk hits, "Little White Cloud That Cried" and "Cry." Opening night was a long turn, running for nearly an hour and punctuated only by some ingratiating talk. It was a begoff.

In addition to slickly backing Ray, the new Quincy Jones orch displays a powerful swinging style that should make a dent in the band business if the economics of an over-sized 19-piece band can be licked. Former arranger for Count Basie and other swing bands, Jones has developed a richly textured sound within the framework of a traditional swing concept.

Another strong entry on this all-musical bill is the George Shearing Quintet, a consistently popular combo. This is smooth modern jazz, highly pleasing in the charm of its chamber music sound and easily assimilable of in its melodic structure. Herm.

Statler-Hilton, D. C.

Washington, Nov. 3.

Susan Barrett offers a polished, nicely varied act that belies her youth (20) and brief experience as a supperclub chirp.

In the Statler's Embassy Room, where she made her nightclub bow last spring, Miss Barrett gives a pleasing performance by singing well in a number of styles, impersonating some well-known females with fair success and generally handling herself with easy grace and composure. Face and figure lend distinction—blonde and slender with features cast in an aristocratic mold.

A certain restraint marks Miss Barrett's delivery even when she tackles a Jolson medley where exuberance is expected. This subdued, unobtrustive manner is a refreshing contrast to some vocalists who impose themselves on the patrons by over-singing, over-acting and over-playing the personality bit.

Steve Kisley's orchestra and the Rita Ann Artist trio — Embassy Room regulars—fill out the bill expertly, both in complementing Miss Barrett and in their own right. Jay.

Adolphus Hotel, Dallas

Dallas, Nov. 4.

It's post time again at the Century Room, with comedian Joe E. Lewis back for his sixth fortnight here. It's been 17 months since he unleashed his nonsense on his local fans, but this session is, no exception — he's in. Introed by Raymond Willie, veepee-general manager of Interstate Theatres (filling the spot of the late Robert J. O'Donnell), it was a nostalgic opening.

Lewis promptly gets the room roaring with a familiar line, "I'm the Dean Martin of the Roaring 20s." He romps through his routine, with new business and lines. He razzes his patrons: "I don't mind your falling asleep, but you could at least say good night." With Greer Garson as an auditor, he cracks: "In 1964 Ralph Bellamy might run for president; if so, Greer Garson will be the first lady." He's got a new one, while sipping drinks from ringsiders: "He's a graduate of USC—University of Southern Comfort."

Lewis starts many risible bits, but interrupts himself to give the throwaway one-liners that captures his tablers. And that's what they came for—the ageless Lewis' naughty lines. An unknown comic would be driven out of tow but Lewis pulls the people.

Austin Mack, after taking jibes from Lewis, pulls expert showbacking from the Reichman crew, and fills the 88 spot neatly. House band fills the floor at dance sessions.

Due next is comedian Guy Marks on Nov. 21. Bark.

Shamrock, Houston

Houston, Nov. 3.

Marguerite Piazza, Paul Neighbors Orch (10); no cover or minimum.

Miss Piazza, who kicked off a Nixon rally a few minutes before by singing "Star Spangled Banner," is shown almost as much reverence in her opener at the Shamrock Hilton's International Club in the Continental Room.

And there's as much variety and contrast in her show as there is between the national anthem and thrush's opening, "Got a Lot Of Living To Do." Miss Piazza is one of few former divas who can make transition from opera to niteries, perhaps because she has a feeling for the jazz beat or perhaps because she doesn't overly enunciate.

In nearly 40 minutes on stage Miss Piazza handles equally well such ballads as "'Til There Was You," an Italian medley ("Sorrento," "Oh Marie" and "Ciri Ciri Bin") such show tunes as "I Could Have Danced All Night," a blues number, "Loveless Love," and opera.

Her classic clown closing displays Miss Piazza's fine voice and highly developed sense of drama. As she sits at dressing table facing auditors, thrush dons stark clown makeup for tragic Pagliacci from Vesti La Giubba. That plays to an ovation. A few deft makeup strokes, and thrush is transformed into a happy circus clown for drum-beating "Stars and Stripes Forever." This season Miss Piazza has added a stroll around stageside, shaking hands with auditors for begoff. Skip.

Flamingo, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Nov. 3.

Peggy Lee, Jackie, Miles, Don Kirk, Barry Ashton Dancers (12), Nat Brandwynne Orch (13); presented by Morris Lansburgh; choreography, Barry Ashton; $4 minimum.

Peggy Lee's current stint finds her hitting a stride that was lacking in her earliest appearances on the Strip; she shows relaxed animation combined with exciting warmth that clicks with her audience. Her voice is at its best, she looks good and tastefully gowned.

Her numbers include "Day In, Day Out," "Fever" (with splendid cooperation from the light man), "I'm Gonna Go Fishin'" (which she cleffed with Duke Ellington), "Lover," and a disclick medley. Nat Brandwnne's orch (13) plus Miss Lee's combo (5) provide excellent backing.

Jackie Miles, extra added, is playing this room for the first time, although he's been working Vegas for 18 years. The frail comic, as always, pulls hefty yocks with his old and new situation stories—all classic gems. Firstnighters got a big laugh when he told a ringsiding non-yocking femme, "I don't care how much you lost in the casino, lady, it wasn't my joke's fault."

Holdover Barry Ashton production number rounds out bill, skedded through Nov. 16. Dulce.

Village Vanguard, N. Y.

Modern Jazz Quartet, Ornette Coleman (4); $4 minimum.

Thi Greenwich Village cellar continues its jazz policy with an enviable double bill that covers the idiom's in-group and outgroup.

The Modern Jazz Quartet, once criticized for its mixture of jazz and classical figures, is on hand supported by far-out saxman Ornette Coleman's foursome, which seems to be working its y slowly in.

MJQ's wide acceptance may have been earned in some degree by compromise. The fugue has given way to fonk, with the group leaning more on jazz roots for the basics of th highly articulate instrumentals. Catalog features a 25-minute marathon (well worth it), called "The Comedy," that draws heavily on blues, religioso and even the old New Orleans marching-band style.

"Skating in Central Park," waltz based on leader John Lewis' score for the feature film "Odds Against Tomorrow," has distinct traces of gospel piano under intricate vibes improvising by Milt Jackson. Latter is featured primarily throughout the MJQ's cool book. Lewis occasionally solos, but mostly joins Percy Heath on bass and Connie Kay on drums for counterpoint and driving rhythms.

MJQ, which prefers the concert circuit, plays the Vanguard with no problems at all, getting the aud attention necessary on ight caught.

Ornette Coleman, who preemed in New York at the Five Spot a year ago, is back from a Coast turn and blowing the same nonobjective jazz. Any progression here would leave the fans out of the picture. Coleman, on plastic sax, and Don Sherry, with a miniature trumpet, bust through the standard jazz forms with a series of wailing riffs, which are ape to some and tomorrow to others. Scott LaFaro on basis is an exciting addition, taking solos with the dexterity of a flamenco guitarist. Eddie Blackwell is on drums. Bill.

Ankara, Pitt

Pittsburgh, Nov. 7.

Roberta Sherwood, assisted by Don Lanning, Ern DeLorenzo and Eddie Graham; Lorraines, Bill Landy, Hershey Cohen's Orch (8); $1 cover.

It's been four years now since the previously unknow Roberta Sherwood came to the public's attention through Walter Winchell and she still is the fresh, incomparable queen of song that she was while singing for $125 a week at Murray Frankly Miami Beach.

When caught, she touched all bases in her hour and 10 minute show and got a boffo reception from the huge crowd. She has added songs from "Gypsy" and "Take Me Along" since her last showing here and gives them all her down-to-earth, sentimental treatment.

She paces the show skillfully, jogging the memory of patrons as she skips along from one age group to another with everyone feeling she was singing just to them. Halfway through her turn, Miss Sherwood brings on her son, Don Lanning, who is quite a handsome lad and knows his way around within the presently popular recording idiom.

The Lorraines, fine, well-trained and handsome young dance team, opens the show. Hershey Cohen's Orch (8), aided by the star's pianist, Ernie DeLorenzo, and drummer, Eddie Graham, do a class job in backing the show and they play excellently for dancing.

Show stays through Nov. 12. Al Martino comes in Nov. 14. Lit.

King Edward, Toronto

Toronto, Oct. 31.

"Up-Tempo Revue," with Carol Morley, Natalya Butko, Sandra O'Neill, Brian Beaton, Jimmie Hannan. Producer, Jack Greenwald; director nd choreographer, Alan Lund; music, Ben McPeek; sets, Dennis Burton; costumes, Susan Moss; $2 cover.

On for twice-a-night performances in the renovated Pickwick Cafe room (120 capacity) of the King Edward Sheraton Hotel, "Up-Tempo Revue" marks the introduction to Toronto of this type of nitery entertainment where food and drink can be ordered as the Audacious attacks on topicalities in satirical style are professionaly carried out by five nimble comics, all fast-paced in youthful and vigorous dynamics. Outstanding are Carol Morley's running blackout series on suburban living, where her off-stage husband is too tired after battling commuting traffic; Natalya Butko's trying to get away from hometown tourists who persist in turning up on the Matterhorn or Africa; and Sandra O'Neill's sexy singing of "I'll Do Anything for Charity."

Company roundups in the 85-minute show include a takeoff of hockey, complete with uniforms, sticks and a dance on skates; plus a burlesque on "Oedipus Rex," as done by the Stratford (Ontario) Festival; all of which were highlights.

Other numbers of note in the 23 sketches comprise Miss Morley's impersonation of an ex-stripper who is going to Europe to study art on a government grant; the Toronto tryout of "Camelot," staged by brewery funds, when a boyfriend upsets proceedings by bringing into the theatre a case of a rival brand of beer; and the upstaging of an i nported stage star in "Merry Widow" costume (Natalya Butko.)

Neat assists to the vivacious quintet are the words and music of Bob Sabloff, Roy Wolvin, Rusty Davis, Bill Brian and Doyle Klyn; the choreography of Alan Lund (associate director of the 1960 grandstand show at the Canadian National, Toronto), and the costuming throughout of Susan Mess, with a bow to her fashions number and the "Oedipus" zanies.

Jack Greenwald, producer, also rates salaams for a swift-paced offering, with all members of the cast proving themselves first-class comedy-makers. Greenwald, incidentally, gets the $2 per person cover admission and supplies the "Up-Tempo Revue," with the hotel collecting on food and drink sales to the room's customers. McStay.

Mister Kelly's, Chi

Chicago, Nov. 2.

Phyllis Diller, Frank D'Rone, Marx-Frigo Trio; $2.50 cover.

Standup comedienne Phyllis Diller is another of the sock repeaters in this hot Rush St. intimery, and her latest teeoff is only likely to affirm the rapport. Her "props" are a jaunty cigaret holder, and an idiotic caricature of a laugh (somewhat overdone) which she uses to punctuate her staggered one-liners.

Her nutty commentaries kick up laughs alternately with fine satire and broad, sometimes borderline, humor, and virtually all of it is self-expense angled. If they don't uniformly dig this concept, there still are enough pungent lines in her talkalog to keep all elements entertained.

Warbler-guitarist Frank D'Rone seems finally to be moving up after long apprenticeship on the mainstem periphery, and though he was at Kelly's some years back, this for all practical purposes is his debut as a recognizable marquee line.

Combination of a fine voice and the guitar fingering assures interest, though his phrasing tends to be derivative and somewhat blunts impact. A flamenco solo is a worthy inclusion. His catalog is stimulating, including an offbeat showtune and such titles as "Wee Small Hours" and "After the Ball is Over."

Marx-Frigo showbacking is first-rate. Herb Shriner and folksinger George Alexander open Nov. 21. Pit.

Saddle & Sirloin, Tucson

Tucson, Nov. 2.

Deedy & Bill, Jack Smith combo; no cover, no minim

Deedy & Bill's debut at the Saddle & Sirloin proves comedy will go in this room if it is zany and fast-moving. Deedy (Peters) and Bill (Greer) deftly and professionally handle the special material supplied by writer Mort Greene.

Deedy, with her grimaces and pratfalls, comes in for most of the yocks, with Bill supplying the straight lines and a tenor sax jazz solo on "Night Train." Clever routines are an Edward R. Murrow satire and "imitations of human beings" on "Up a Lazy River." Latter features impressions by Bill of Satchmo and Dean Martin and impersonations of Merman, Horne and Roberta Sherwood by Deedy.

Surprising to ringsiders was the ability of Deedy to come off comedy and deliver sensuous vocals of "Funny Valentine" and "The Party's Over." Alex.

Sahara, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Nov. 1.

Donald O'Connor, Gretchen Wyler, Deon Robb, Moro-Landis Dancers & Showgirls (16), Louis Basil Orch (17); produced by Stan Irwin, $4 minimum.

Donald O'Connor doesn't hav sidekick Sid Miller on this trip, but as a bill balancer he intros Gretchen Wlyer and Deon Robb to Vegas, coming up with a solid, sparkling bit of entertainment. O'Connor, who looks like the grownup youngster you haven't seen lately, retains his boyish charm though he's a vet versatile song & dance man.

He offers a pleasant blend of footwork and stylized vocalizing, tosses in jokes to keep the turn light and breezy. His dancing partner is a fresh, spirited, and talented young lady, Miss Robb, who adds beauty and grace to the festivities. O'Connor's songs include "Foggy Day," "Gypsy In My Soul," "Love Is A Game Of Poker," and he does a lively terp with flapper-type chorines to the tune of "Ain't She Sweet."

Miss Wyler, in her Strip debut, socks across an exciting, dominant personality. The vibrant, shapely blonde clicks big in both singing and dancing departments. Her numbers include such tunes as "Once In Love With Amy" (with a delightful impresh of Ray Bolger), "Stereophonic Sound," "An Occasional Man," "Maimi Is Mimi" and "Torero."

The Ashtons and Shirley, two adults with two young boys, please with a fast-moving acrobatic act which features the youngsters being juggled with the feet of Ashton.

New Moro-Landis production number is a salute to George M. Cohan with the 16 "Most American Girls In The World" as precision rifle-flipping soldierettes. Stan Irwin production, backed expertly by the Louis Basil orch (17), is in for four frames. Duke.

Hotel Monteleone, N. O.

New Orleans, Nov. 4.

"An Evening With Slapsi Maxie," starring Maxie Rosenbloom with Frankie Rapp, Jimmy Clark, Lois Ray, Sheila Doyle, Darlene Daye and Louetta Marie, Nick Stuart Orch (7); $2.50 weeknight minimum; $4 Sats.

A full, enthusiastic house relighted Billy Monteleone's plush Swan Room after several months of darkness, and "An Evening With Slapsie Maxie" proved a pleasant surprise for first-nighters as well as a potent season curtain-raiser.

Maxie Rosenbloom and his entourage wowed 'm with as nifty an exercise in fun, terping and organized chaos as has ever been delivered here. He proves he's as speedy with a quip as he used to be with his fists in the prize ring. Vet pug turned entertainer works hard to leave the impresh that he might have bats in his belfry, but actually he's as clever on stage as when he was the kingpin of the heavies.

Rosenbloom refers to himself as "a supersonic genius with a microscopic brain," sings parodies with prizefight lyrics, jokes, clowns, confuses his straight man, Jimmy Clark, and mixes in fond reminiscences with some hilariously funny fight stories and gags. He seemed to dip into an endless supply of material and brings enough solid yocks to stop the show for at least a nine-count.

Rosenbloom's playmates also contribute to the evening's mirth and entertainment. Sock comedy by Frankie Rapp, a rubbery-faced comic whose slice-of-life stories and slick pantomiming netted plenty of belly-laughs, and some fancy terping by a quartet of lookers with nifty chassis—Sheila Doyle, Darlene Raye, Louetta Marie and Lois Ray—make an evening with Maxie an evening well spent.

The dancers are cleverly steered by Clark's imaginative chdreography. Miss Ray contributes solo for nice hand. Gals work icely together.

Nick Stuart and musical crew give the show nice support. Considering that the orch was backing a free-wheeling comic like Rosenbloom, there was no flubbing of cues during the show's 50-minutes. Customers flocked to floor during dance sessions and Stuart keeps tunes mixed to please all terp tastes. He also introduces a new singer this season, Marilyn Mitchell, a looker with nice pipes who shared in the evening's applause. Linz.

Lee Ettelson's Appointment

Lee Ettelson has been named editor of Hearst's San Francisco Examiner in a move which may presage a wholesale shakeup on the morning daily's staff.

Ettelson, former managing editor of Hearst's Seattle Post-Intelligencer, N.Y. American and Frisco Call Bulletin and later editor of the Chicago American and publisher of the Call Bulletin, moved over from his post as general manager of the Frisco News-Call Bulletin. He had been placed in charge of the business side of the News-Call Bulletin after Scripps-Howard took over the editorial operation in an August 1959 merger of afternoon dailies.

The Examiner has not had an editor for many years, Hearst policy apparently having been to operate with a publisher and managing editor.

First result of naming Ettelson editor was that the present managing editor, Linton von Berol-dinger, resigned.

The Examiner and its morning competitor, the Chronicle, have been in a dingdong circulation and news battle for many months, with the revivified Chronicle pulling just about even in circulation after having been as much as 65,000 behind the Hearts daily a half-decade ago. Current daily circulation of both the Examiner and Chronicle is now in the 275,000-280,000 range. Examiner still holds wide lead on Sundays.

Excellent Year Book

Britain's "Stage Year Book" (Carson & Comerford; $1.89) for 1960 is compact, full of information, okay for anyone connected with British legit and vaude. There's also a useful roundup of the American legit year of 1959, plus a complete list of the when—and—where of all plays staged in America during the year.

The book is a complete reference to all activities during the addresses of agents, managers, producers and professional organizations. There are details of all London and provincial theatres, plus a number of articles by such people as Henry Sherek and R. B. Marriott, and 33 illustrations fro the year.

It's not easy to think how this Year Book could be improved, but it would be invaluable to have brief recent career details of legit artists. As it is, it's a most useful blend of information and interest.

A Variety of Reading

"Four Screenplays of Ingmar Bergman" ("Smiles of a Summer Night," "The 7th Veil," "Wild Strawberries" and "The Magician" are the titles), with a preface by his producer, Carl Anders Dymling (president of Svensk Filmindustri) (Simon & Schuster; $6) is worthy recognition for the distinguished Swedish director.

"The Harvard Brief Dictionary of Music" (Harvard Univ. Press; $3.95), by Willi Apel and Ralph T. Daniel, is just that—a compact A-to-Z on the subject, well done.

Of another musical nature is "The Mario Lanza Story" (Coward-McCann; $3.95), by his longtime accompanist, Constantine Callinicos, with Ray Robinson (senior editor of Coronet) a not pretty valentine which, as the jacket states, depicts "a tragedy of success—th turbulent life of the American Caruso." The Philadelphia-born tenor's tragedy was food and wine —too much of it.

A happier memoir is "Confessions of a Happy Man" (Geis; $3.95), Art Linkletter's own story (with a skillful assist from Dean Jennings' typewriter), a warm, hum document, replete with names, color and general appeal.

Comic Myron Cohen's sequel to a previously successful book is titled "More Laughing Out Loud" (Citadel; $3.50), another anthology of jokes, anecdotes and new stories variously ascribed to celebs and others. A good fountainhead for the storytellers, pros and amateur.

Lowell Thomas with Charles Hurd (N.Y. Times correspondent) have edited a highly informative "Cavalcade of Europe" (Doubleday; $4.95), replete with information on 22 countries by 14 noted overseas correspondents. These were no Cook's tourists; each "know their territory" from long-time observation posts, and through their trained eyes and typewriters the reader gets an unusual low-down on each. It's an Overseas Press Club venture and the correspondents included are Drew Middleton, David Schoenbrun, Emmet Crozier, Frank Gervasi, Fernand Auberjonois, Arthur Settel, David M. Nichol, Thomas A. Reedy, Irving R. Levine, Flora Lewis, Frank Bourgholtzer, Leon Dennen, Sam Pope Brewer and Hurd.

An anthology of a lighter sort is "Stories From The New Yorker" (Simon & Schuster; $7.50), a 35th anniversary galaxy of highlight features culled from the past decade.

Random House-Singer Okayed

Mrs. L. W. Singer, president of L. Singer Co. Inc., textbook publishers of Syracuse, N. Y., and Bennett Cerf, president of Random House, announced that acquisition of Singer Corp. by RH was consummated after the approval by the boards of directors of both companies involved. As previously announced, the entire stock of Singer was exchanged for common stock of Random House. The Singer textbooks will continue to be published under the Singer imprint, and the present staff and officers in Syracuse will remain unchanged.

Mrs. Frances Singer and Robert D. Brown have been added to the board of directors of Random House and Bennett Cerf, Donald Klopfer, Lewis Miller, E. E. Harper and Jess Stei will join the board of Singer.

The officers of Singer Publishing who, along with Mrs. Singer, will sign longterm contracts with the firm, are Charles F. Doty, sales .p., Dr. Trevor K. Serviss, v.p. in charge of editorial matters, and Robert D. Brow , secretary-treasurer.

Random House prez Cerf predicted that acquisition of Singer will push the firm's sales i the fiscal year ending April 30, 1961 close to $22,000,000.

Pearson In Libel Claim

The Concord (N.H.) Monitor-Patriot and the Bell Syndicate Inc., of N.Y. City, were named as defendants in a $100,000 libel suit filed in Concord by former Congressman Alphone Roy of Manchester, who claims his reputation was damaged by a Drew Pearson column published in the Monitor, Sept. 10, when he was seeking the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate.

A record of attachment against the newspaper, published by James M. Langley, was filed in the Merrimack Country Registry of Deeds, and in the case of the Bell Syndicate service was made on the Secretary of State because the syndicate, which handles the Pearson colu , is an out-of-state firm.

The suit is returnable in Hillsborough County Superior Court on the first Tuesday in December.

Roy claims the Pearson column had to do with his candidacy for the Senatorial nomination, which he failed to win in New Hampshire's September primary.

London Shifts

Two former show business writers are among five ex-London News-Chronicle columnists who have joined the London Daily Herald. Paul Dehn takes over film re- on the Herald, succeeding Margaret Hinxman, while Leslie Mallory, former show business columnist on the N.C., joins the Herald as a feature writer.

Other writers of the now defunct News Chronicle to join the Herald are David Walker who was leader writer, Joyce Egginton, New York correspondent, and feature writer Tom Baistow.

On The French Theatre

"The Early Public Theatre in France" by W. L. Wiley (Harvard; $6.75) is a splendid study of a somewhat neglected period in stage history by the Kenan Prof. of French at U. of N. C. Concerning himself with the half-century ending about 1630, Wiley deals with the first important Gallic theatrical company, founded by Valleran le Conte, which followed a succession of imported Italian troupes. Author moves on to treat the rise of the Hotel de Burgogne, first theatre used by professionals, and the Theatre du Marais.

Book, which is well-illustrated, deals thoroughly with plays, players and playhouses and reflects the mores of the French public of the period; also showing Cardinal Richelieu's invaluable aid to French theatre in this parlous time. An excellent, thoughtful volume.

'Lovers of Pompeii'

Theodore Pratt, who has written eight paperback originals will have hi inth novel, "The Lovers of Pompeii," published by Monarch in February, also in paperback.

It's the first fictionized treatment of the secret rooms in the Naples Museum, renowned for its erotic symbols, discovered when the ruins of Pompeii were excavated. Book is based on the Pratt's experiences some years ago when he was one of the few allowed into these secret rooms, barred (with some exceptions) tourists because of the shocking exhibits.

Italy's 'Holiday' Honors

For "fostering better understanding between the two countries" the Italian government is confering the rank of "Commendatore" on editor Ted Patrick of Holiday and "Cavaliere Ufficiale" on art director Frank Zachary and editorial director Harry Sions. The special Rome issue of Holiday last spring, preceding the Olympics, was specially cited.

Presentation ceremony will take place at a cocktail party hosted by the Italian consul in Philadelphia where Holiday (Curtis Pub.) is published.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Palm Springs, Cal.

Any performer who thinks he has been holding his audiences through September and October of this year must be classed as a paranoiactor. Even the two political actors who have been enjoying weekly programs on all three networks (simultaneously yet) have admitted the World Series ruined their chances of holding their otherwise captive audiences.

Under the circumstances why write about things people are not interested in at the moment? Why not instead latch on to the wagon trains they are interested in?

Which K Has All The Vitamins?

Do what Mort Sahl did. While Mr. K was trying to talk Battle Creek, Mich., out of top billing for its favorite breakfast food, Sahl was trying to get in and out of Russia on a few old gags. His split week lasted two days.

Did he ask the Russian athletes why they did better on black bread than ours did on the breakfast of champions, the dead bread of runner-ups, or the embalmed oats of also-rans? In fact has anybody pointed out that unwrapped French bread, carried under an arm that has never been touchеo by anything more dainty than savon Marseille, tastes like bread, whereas our staff of life, untouched by human hands tastes like something even chickens will not eat? Has Chevalier, Boyer or even Bardot sought to capitalize on this issue?

French Bread Can Save Our Cowboys?

Has any American politician or performer sought to show that the reason we are slipping (one says up and the other says down, but both agree we are slipping) is due to the fact that our flour has had so many vital elements taken out of it that the race to restore some has been so far behind it has lost us the Olympics, the Davis Cup and half our western heroes?

It may not be common news but most of our cowboys don't keel over from bullet wounds but malnutrition.

Why doesn't the press report these facts? How can you expect a press to report vital issues when they are so cowed they will not report that the President is the world's worst golf putter and swears worse when he blows a hole than Bobby Jones did when he was only 14 and didn't know any better words? If the men around the Prez can pressure the press into not revealing their boss's golf scores imagine what they could do when putting the lid on a real story!

How To Lose By Winning

Are these boys alone in trying to keep the lid on the facts? Of course not but in our biz guys can get fired if the facts of their slim grosses of the pix become public knowledge. They can even get fired if the melancholy figures get as far as the front office.

In an allied field of entertainment, Casey Stengel got fired because the fact that he was 70 years old could not be erased in a bureau of vital statistics. Even if he had won the World Series instead of giving it a Garrison finish the word was out that he was on his way out. The finger pointed to his age, not his performances, and the thumb of the boxoffice boys who don't know Fuller's Earth from Hughie Fullerton went down and mighty Casey was called out without swinging his bat.

On the other hand the departing Prez who has also saluted 70 could be reelected, all agree, if his own party didn't rig the laws to bilk him out of the honor. Does that mean both are through? Of course not. Stories are going the rounds that ole Case is going to get the job of roving ambassador (because nobody can understand what he is saying even in his own language) and Ike is going to get 100G a year scouting for the Yankees (because nobody can parse his sentences either.)

There's a school of counter-critics who say "It's fine for you guys to criticize, but suppose you start building instead of wrecking. You wouldn't know a brick from a mortise-and-tenon joint."

Now Here's An Idea!

Personally I don't think a wrecker has to know anything about building. They are two different trades. But my Lady Alice has a most constructive idea in the field of our political economy.

As more and more babies, rich or poor, are going to be born in hospitals, it is going to make it almost impossible for a candidate to tell how he rose from rags to riches. But she has the solution. It will require capital and Madison Avenue promotion but it's big enough to warrant the risk.

The idea is nothing more than a chain of maternity hospitals across the land to be called the Log Cabin.

Then when a candidate grows to the age where double-talk and semantics are vital to his success he can shout, "Do I know poverty? Why, I was born in a Log Cabin!"

Package Deal Coming Up

I realize there is a syrup of that name and some beaneries similarly billed, but these could hardly work up a case of trespass. In fact, it would not be difficult for them to effect a tie-in so that all three could benefit. Moreover, I wouldn't be surprised if Colonel Parker is working on the package right now and trying to see if he can't make Elvis Presley's birth in a Log Cabin hospital Metroactive.

Some destructive critic (they didn't all die with George Jean Nathan) is probably working on a monograph right now to prove that if all kids were born in these Log Cabin cribs, where would be the advantage? He probably never heard of limited memberships, exclusive clubs, color lines, and other byproducts of democracies.

Besides, while only one Log Cabin grad could land in the White House every four or eight years, the others would not be neglected. They could get commissioned in the Armed Forces and stay in till they reached the age of 50 or 60, retire on a fat pension (up to $19,500) and then wait (a few minutes) till some corporation or university tapped them for the presidency. This is known as the Paratrooper Road To Success. You drop in from the top.

Horatio Alger Returns

Only recently I ran into an Air Force captain. He was surprisingly young and full of the old American dream of free enterprise and rugged individualism. He wanted to resign his commission and study law. I pointed out to him that he could retire as a general at the age of 52 and then study law, with a fat pension to support him and his family.

He thought this sort of security unworthy of a free man. He said he'd rather get out on his own and take a chance.

"Listen," I said, "this way by the time you graduate from law school, and pass the bar exams your first case will be your application for your old age pension!"

Log Cabin Franchise Waiting

He smiled sort of wanly. I haven't seen or heard of him since. He may have become one of those romantic soldiers of fortune that Richard Harding Davis used to write about, the kind that got us billed as "Yankee imperial dogs," or he may have gone on to law school.

Either way, I wish him luck and if he reads this and wants one of our Log Cabin maternity hospital franchises I promise to put in a good one for him.

This may be considered peddling influence in certain circles, but among us it's known as helping a friend.

Musical numbers: "I Ain't Down Yet," "Belly Up to the Bar, Boys," "I've Already Started In," "I'll Never Say No," "My Own Brass Bed," "The Denver Police," "Beautiful People of Denver," "Are You Sure," "Happy Birthday, Mrs. J. J. Brown," "Bon Jour," "If I Knew," "Chick-a-pen," "Keep-a-Hoppin'," Leadville Johnny Brown's Soliloquy, "Up Where the People Are," "Dolce Far Niente," "Colorado, My Home."

In today's theatre, with shows either a quick smash or flop, there's not much place for "The Unsinkable Molly Brown." The Theatre Guild and Dore Schary production, which opened last Thursday night (3) at the Winter Garden Theatre, is just a routine musical, which probably means it's not good enough.

Taking the fabulous Mrs. Brown, already celebrated in the newspapers of her day and in a vivid chapter in "Timberline," Gene Fowler's best-seller, Richard Morris has written a one-dimensional book about the colorful turn-of-the-century Rocky Mountain area, and Meredith Willson has provided lively songs in the style of his "The Music Man."

But somehow the irrepressible Molly, though she may have made spectacular copy for contemporary Sunday supplement editors and purportedly charmed aristocratic circles in Paris, isn't buoyant enough for the Broadway musical stage. There's no other character to command interest or even attention, so although it is a lavish show visually, "The Unsinkable Molly Brown" never acquires real headway.

The show opens promisingly enough with the hillbilly heroine setting out from her cabin home, quickly conquering the primitive village of Leadville, marrying the smitten Johnny Brown and moving on to Denver. But then the story is stymied by the fact that Molly, despite her slam-bang honesty and likeableness, doesn't develop as a person beyond the petty ambition of wanting to crash Denver society.

In short, the basic story situation is shallow and trifling, for Molly doesn't stand for anything that matters. Despite her gen-rosity, directness and salty speech, she's not a lifelike person nor a provocative musical comedy figure. When the book gets to her European junket in search of culture, the initial vitality and drive are lost, and the heroine's return to Colorado and her faithful Johnny, including even the famous episode of the Titanic sinking, is anticlimactic.

Willson's score has something of the same pace and bounce of his rousing songs for "The Music Man," but this time the dearth of ballads is a major weakness, perhaps because as a leading character Molly lacks the flesh-and-blood reality and the irresistible drive of the charlatan hero of the previous show. Also, Schary's direction, his first attempt with a Broadway musical, lacks the superb cohesion and incessant impetus that Morton DaCosta's staging added to "The Music Man."

The animated numbers Willson has written for "Molly" are excellent, and as before, his lyrics are notably, if unostentatiously, good. Significantly, however, the best tunes are in march tempo, with only a couple of passable ballads and only one outstanding romantic song, a waltz titled "Dolce Far Niente," sung by a secondary player.

"I'll Never Say No," well sung by leading man Harve Presnell, is fair, and that also goes for "My Own Brass Bed," "If I Knew" and the advance-touted "Chick-a-pen." The upstanding numbers, good enough but tending to become monotonous, include "Belly Up to the Bar, Boys," "Beautiful, People of Denver" and "Keep-a-Hoppin'." However, "Happy Birthday, Mrs. J. J. Brown" and "Bon Jour" are effective in terms of situation.

Peter Gennaro has staged two energetic dance numbers which serve as changes of pace without contributing much toward plot or character development. Oliver Smith's scenery is not only sumptuous, but has a point of view, but Miles White's costumes are merely in period, and lack distinction.

Tammy Grimes, top-featured as Molly, is apparently a talented performer who, though still lacking star magnetism or authority, impresses as a personality who might arrive almost overnight if she gets the right formula and vehicle. As of this show, she looks a little like a George Price cartoon, including the haphazardly heaped-up hair-do. She has a surprising vocal versatility, but is unable to break out of the confines of a constricting part.

Presnell, a singer making his Broadway debut as the simple-minded Johnny Brown, has a nice, ample baritone voice and an attractive manner, but doesn't get a chance to show whether he has any suspicion about acti . Among the capable secondary players, Cameron Prud'homme is acceptable as Molly's father, Edith Meiser is expressive as a snobbish Denver matron, former Comedie Francaise actress Mony Dalmes and Mitchell Gregg are engaging as friendly members of the Parisian international set, and Christopher Hewett is a properly unctious butler.

With a fairly good advance sale, including a sizable schedule of theatre party bookings, "Molly" should be around for a while. It falls into that unhappy middle ground short of sock impact, however, so its ultimate fate looks doubtful. Perhaps with the greater scope of the screen, plus judicious development of the characters and story, the musical could be ma into a click picture. Hobe.

The Rape of the Belt

Harriet Parsons, Charles Hollerith Jr., Paul Vroom, William Dean presentation of comedy in three acts (six scenes) and prolog, by Benn W. Levy. Staged by Albert Marre; settings and lighting, Paul Morrison; costumes, J. Michael Travis; costumes for Miss Cummings and Miss Redman executed by Pierre Balmain; incidental music, Sol Kaplan. Stars Constance Cummings, Joyce Redman, Peggy Wood. Features John Emery, Joseph Bova, Philip Bosco, Bet Nye, Nydia Westman. Opened Nov. 5, '60, at the Martin Beck Theatre, N.Y.; $7.50 top Friday and Saturday nights, $6.90 weeknights.

Hera	Peggy Wood
Zeus	John Emery
Hippobome	Pat Nye
Theseus	Joseph Bova
Heracles	Philip Bosco
Antiope	Constance Cummings
Diana	Avis Scott
Anthea	Hilda Brawner
Hippolyte	Joyce Redman
Thalestris	Nydia Westman

The battle of the sexes, according to Benn W. Levy, is a satirical edition of Greek mythology. His version, "The Rape of the Belt," opened last Saturday night (5) at the Martin Beck Theatre, and it's probably not for the prosaic world of modern Broadway.

Although London took to "The Rape of the Belt" for something like a year, various New York managements passed up the script as lacking sufficient wallop for the smash-demanding American public. However, the new legit firm of Harriet Parsons, Charles Hollerith Jr., Paul Vroom and William Dean brought it to town after a somewhat rocky tryout tour, during which Albert Marre succeeded Alan Schneider as director.

Using the legend of the ninth of the 12 labors of Heracles, the quest for the royal belt in the possession of Antiope and Hippolyte, Queens of the Amazons, the author of the perennial "Springtime for Henry" and various other comedy successes offers his urbane comment on the eternal relationship between men and women, as well as much pertinent matters as reason opposed to violence, philosophy opposed to ambition, etc.

It's an amusing premise for a play, and the author writes with his characteristic insight and wit, but the effect is too discursive and emotionally remote for the impatient Broadway public. Since the script could probably be done on a limited budget, it may have some currency in stock and is likely to be a frequent item in the amateur field. It seei unsuitable for films.

Constance Cummings, Levy's American-born wife, is starring in the role of Antiope, which she played in the original London production. She gives a charming performance that combines humor with expertly disciplined emotion, as the subtle, enchanting exponent of calmness and reason who cannot resist the headlong masculinity of a famous w

Joyce Redman, imported from England to portray the sister and co-queen, Hippolyte, speaks too rapidly to be intelligible at times, and doesn't ve much to do in the first act, but revels in the later comedy scenes, when she acquires the bustling bossiness of the goddess Hera. One bit of slapstick is funny, if extraneous.

Although the two onstage male roles tend to be little more than strutting puppets, Philip Bosco is a credibly upstanding Heracles and Joseph Bova is diverting as his lightweight partner, Theseus. Peggy Wood, costarred, and John Emery, top-featured, appear at opposite sides of the proscenum i the guises of Hera and Zeus to introduce and occasionally comment on the story. The device doesn't quite come off.

Paul Morrison has provided handsome settings and agreeably clear lightin J. Michael Travis has supplied the decorative costumes, with Pierre Balmain responsible for the stunning gowns for Miss Cummings (notably the third act) and Miss Redman. The author, said to be recuperating from a heart attack of several months ago, has remained at home in London, but was presumably available by telephone for decisions as to script cuts, changes and such matters. Hobe.

Inside Stuff—Legit

Recent tour and company of Marlene Dietrich amounted to three weeks and company of 50, 17 in pit, 12 dancing girls. Reception of the star was described as astonishing by press corps, especially the eager partisanship of the Canadian Legion. One 73-year old vet (wrong war) planted an unscheduled kiss at the airport. At a press interview another Legionnaire did the gallant act, shouting to Dietrich, "Don't answer that." The questions were political, one framed to bring in Dietrich's grandchildren (what did she think of them growing up in an atomic world).

Members of the troupe with her described her as tirelessly on the job backstage, before any opening night, "supervising all matters from stage cleaning to orchestra rehearsal."

Others: Doria Avilla, Regina Groves, Curtis Hood, Daniel Jasinsky, Barbara Lang, Josephine Lang, Bob McClure, Ken Malone, Jim Marley, Dawn Nickerson, Ed Pfeiffer, Suzanne Shaw, Liza Stuart, Pat Tolson, Nancy Van Rhein.

Musical numbers: "Waiting, Waiting," "All You Need Is a Quarter," "Who Gets the Tab," "Take a Job," Double Juke Box Hop, "It's Legitimate," "I Know About Love," Auditions, "Ambition," "Cry Like the Wind," Success, "Don't Try to Figure It Out," "Little Girl," Fireworks," "What's New at the Zoo," "Don't Be Ashamed of a Teardrop," "Adventure," "Make Someone Happy," Juke Box War, "V.I.P.," "All of My Life."

It's too bad that "Do-Re-Mi," the new David Merrick musical, doesn't have an extended tryout schedule such as "The Unsinkable Molly Brown" and "Wildcat" had. This one appears to need the extra tuning-up sessions more seriously.

That's not to say that the Garson Kanin book, Jule Styne score and Betty Comden-Adolph Green lyrics haven't plenty of possibilities. But the rebuilding is not going to be a short or simple process.

"Do-Re-Mi" is a story of the jukebox racket, and its character types give it a faint but unmistakable resemblance to "Guys and Dolls." Phil Silvers, the star and major asset of the show, has the role of a would-be bigshot whose main ambition is to get a ringside table at the better night clubs. After apparently getting in a serious jam he has a triumphant finale in a number called "All of My Life."

For the most part Styne's score is more vociferous than melodious, although it does have several possible outstanders, including "What's New at the Zoo?" "Don't Be Ashamed of a Teardrop," "Make Someone Happy" and possibly "Cry Like the Wind."

Nancy Walker is her usual ebullient self as the wife whose main ambition is to be able to coax her spouse just once onto a nightclub floor. She is broadly funny whenever the book allows. George Matthews, George Givot and Al Lewis are generally effective as three minor racketeers.

Nancy Dussault is notable as a young singer who aspires to stardom but settles for marriage. David Burns has a few chances and John Reardon is excellent as the man who marries the young singer.

"Do-Re-Mi" has the unhappy distinction of having one of the most painful ballets seen here in a long time. And somewhere along the line Boris Aronson, usually outstanding, has come up with uninspired settings.

There is plenty of inherent material in "Do-Re-Mi," however, and the m agement may be able to extract it. Waters.

Dancers: Arlene Ancona, Candace Caldwell, Judy Cassmore, Carl Coppock, Judy Corbett, Anton DeVecchi, Julius Fridle, Lavinia Hamilton, Gerald Herndon, Bruce Hoy, Graham Johnson, Gloria Kaye, Karla Most, Michelle Newton, Charles Queenan, Cyd Tressler.

Musical numbers: "Wanderin' Man," "I'm with You," "Tight Squeeze," "She's Fantasy," "New Lands," "Keep Pretending," "Cookie Record Cover," "Luxury Woman," "How Can You Forget," "When Somebody Moves Into Your Life," "I'm Direct from the Cactus Hotel," "Love is a Four-Letter Word," "He's a Gasser," "I'm Telling You," "Now She Tells Me," "Love Among the People," "Hooked on Me," "She Reminds Me of My Mother."

"I'm With You" has one major, glaring defect, but it also has a strong score, imaginative stagi stunning singer in Barbara McNair and, most important of all, Nat King Cole. On balance, and with the big flaw repaired in the course of a three-month, cross-country break-in, this Paul Gregory-produced musical could be a winner on Broadway.

It is, of course, a showcase for Cole, who sings 16 of the 23 numbers in his usual intimate, creamy style. Among these Dotty Wayne-Ray Rasch songs are at least a half dozen potential record hits for Cole, with "She's Fantasy," "Keep Pretending," "When Somebody Moves Into Your Life" and the title tune the likeliest pop possibilities. Miss McNair might also click on a couple of numbers, notably "Luxury Woman."

Rasch's music, arranged and directed by Ralph Carmichael, is very good pops, but Miss Wayne's lyrics, while serviceable, hardly distinguished. The big, gaping defect is that this is neither a book show nor a revue. Gregory has tried to do something in between, tying all the songs and dancing to a theme with Tom Clapp's special material.

The theme is "aspects of love" and requires Cole to recite a good deal of explanatory material, all dull, plus a lot of poetry. The device is so forced that the audience is never sure if Cole is talking about himself or six other guys. This is, short, a musical crying for a book, or at least a better thematic device.

The 12 singers and 16 dancers are excellent, thanks to sharp direction from Bill Colleran and generally interesting Eugene Loring choreography. Jim Trittipo's production design is a little masterpiece of economy. Instead of investing in heavy sets, the show is hung with panels and lighting changes the mood of the scenes.

The rest of the production investment lies in very light prop platforms which performers carry on and off to change scenes. Trittipo also evidently had a hand in the costumes, which are handsome and effective.

It should be noted that, in addition to the two principals, more than a half dozen Negro dancers and singers are tegrated int

Balto Music Fair a Surprise Click, To Extend to 15 Weeks Next Year

Baltimore, Nov. 8.

Painters Mill Music Fair, regarded in advance as a sure flop by yet Baltimoreans, had a successful first season last summer. Producers Lee Guber, Frank Ford and Shelly Gross have announced that "backers will receive a return on their investment" shortly. Although the season started slowly, business built steadily to virtual capacity the final weeks.

Music Fair, one of five tents operated by Guber-Ford-Gross, opened June 24 on a tract of land in Owings Mills, about 12 miles outside the city. The preem was to have been June 21, but was delayed because of heavy rains and construction tieups. Result was that opener, "South Pacific," played only three nights.

The project was capitalized at $200,000, of which $175,000 was expended. The tent seats 2,000 and has parking facilities for 1,000 cars. The average weekly attendance for the season was 10,000, and the biggest grosser was "Student Prince," with James Melton starring.

Other winners were "Teahouse of the August Moon," sole straight production, which played early in season to capacity with Red Buttons as Sakini; "Carousel," which did near sellout business, and "Guys and Dolls," the closing bill which did even better.

Guber, Ford and Gross plan a longer season next year, probably 15 weeks instead of 13. They are already negotiating for properties. Possible selections are "Flower Drum Song," "Destry," "Music Man," "Majority of One" and "Blossom Time," the latter because of the enthusiastic response to this year's "Student Prince."

Eight houses have already been sold to theatre parties for next summer, and season tickets are moving. The Music Fair received an almost unprecedented amount of publicity and the reaction of local critics was generally favorable, in some cases enthusiastic. The tent's pressagent was Larry Witchell.

Sam Wanamaker Is Due From England for Guest Date at Chi's Goodman

Chicago, Nov. 8.

Sam Wanamaker, an American expatriate actor-director in England for more than a decade, will return in January for a two-week engagement at Chi's Goodman Theatre, his alma mater. Wanamaker will play Henry VIII in the Herman Gressieker drama, "Royal Gambit," for 17 performances starting Jan. 13. The show will be staged by Melvin Bernhardt.

Goodman Theatre productions are semi-professional, with a major guest artist and several local Equity card-holders performing alongside students of the Goodman Theatre School. Among the notable alumni of the drama college, besides Wanamaker, are actors Geraldine Page and Karl Malden, director Jose Quintero and scenic designer Ralph Alswang.

Other productions at Goodman this season will be Christopher Fry's "Venus Observed," with Tom Helmore, opening Dec. 2; Dylan Thomas' "Under Milk Wood," with Ivor Harries, Feb. 24; and Anton Chekov's "Uncle Vanya," with Joseph Schildkraut starring and Alan Schneider as guest director, April 17.

Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew," with Leo Ciceri, is current, and one other play is to be announced.

American Play Merges With Authors Research

The 50-year-old American Play Co. Inc. and the newly-formed Authors Research Co. have combined operations to handle the rights plays and novels by nearly a number of deceased authors. Edith Borell has moved up from secretary-treasurer to president of the American Play Co., succeeding John W. Rumsay, who died Oct. 17.

Sheldon Abend, head of Authors Research, directs the business activities of the newly-formed combine, whose services include agenting the rights of their properties for television, films, legit and radio.

Gorlinsky Signs 'Molly' For London Presentation

S. A. Gorlinsky has acquired British rights to "The Unsinkable Molly Brow ," which he saw on its pre-Broadway tryout a fortnight ago. He will be returning to New York within the next few weeks to see the show again, robably accompanied by Prince Littler, so the tw may determin the London theatre in which the musical will be presented.

There is no immediate date for a London presentation, and the timing may depend on whether Dore Schary will be available to stage the London edition or whether a substitute director will have to be chosen.

Gorlinsky made his U.S. stopover while returning to his London base after a quickie to Tokyo, where he settled plans for the Japanese revue to come to Britain under his management. The company will open in the King's Theatre, Glasgow, a week before Christmas and is due in the West End early in the New Year.

G & S Splurging Here and Canada

Gilbert & Sullivan are having a major "comeback." Highlighting the G & S revival is their move-in on the Bard at the Stratford (Ont.) Shakespearean Festival.

Tyrone Guthrie, who directed "H.M.S. Pinafore" there last summer, will stage another Savoy standard, "Pirates of Penzance," at the Festival next year. And, as in the case of "Pinafore," the "Penzance" production will follow its Stratford stand with a booking at the Phoenix Theatre, N. Y.

"Pinafore," which had a sellout three-week run at the Avon Theatre, Stratford, moved from there to the Phonix, where it closed Oct. 23 after a seven-week engagement. "Penzance" is to play the Avon Theatre also, for a run of probably six weeks. Incidentally, the "Pinafore" stand at the

BARD FEST CO. DROPS 'TALE' FOR CHI STAND

Chicago, Nov. 8.

The American Shakespeare Festival Theatre Co., which also has been alternating "A Midsummer Night's Dream" with "A Winter's Tale" on the road, will drop the latter for its three-week Chicago engagement, beginning next Monday (14).

"Dream" has generally been outdrawing "Tale," and the management apparently doesn't want to jeopardize three potentially profitable weeks here by offering the lesser-known Shakespeare work.

Gregory Out Of 'With You' Tuner; Shift Directors

San Francisco, Nov. 8.

A management shakeup took place in the Nat King Cole musical, "Ti With You," after last week's opening at the Geary Theatre here. Paul Gregory, billed as producer along with Cole's ow Kell-Cole Productions, was dismissed and Ike Jones, vice president of Kell-Cole, became producer. Cole is president of the firm.

Departing by "mutual agreement" were director Bill Colleran, who was replaced by Joe Sargent, and Tom Clapp, who'd been billed as writer of "additional material." Jones brought two new writers, Les Pine and Bob Wells, to Frisco and said he was negotiating with a third writer. All will work on a new story line for the show.

In addition, choreographer Eugene Loring is rumored on his way out. "I'm With You" ends its local engagement next Saturday (12) and then continues a three-month cross-country tryout tour before its scheduled late-January opening on Broadway.

Tunetent Assn. Meeting In N.Y. Next Friday (11)

Th Musical Arena Theatres Assn. will hold its annual meeting next Friday morning (11) at Rosoff's Restaurant, N.Y. On the agenda are royalties, tax exemption programs, "Act of God" rulings and Actors Equity problems.

Representatives of 20 tent theatres are expected to attend.

Still Cutting 'Camelot'; Hart Returning to N.Y.

Moss Hart is expected to leave Toronto's Wellesley Hospital next week and return to New York for potracted bed rest. He is not returning to the production-directorial chores of "Camelot," which are now being handled exclusively by librettist and co-producer Alan Jay Lerner, himself still convalescing from hospitalization in the same Toronto instituti .

"Camelot" currently at the Shubert, Boston, has undergone considerable tightening and some rewriting in its second act, reducing Roddy McDowall's role as the illegitimate son, but giving him a new song.

The show rings up at 8:25 and now breaks at 11:40, but Lerner and composer Frederick Loewe plan to cut another 30 minutes out of running time. "Camelot" is due to open Dec. 3 at the Majestic, N. Y., having been postponed two weeks because of Hart's and Lerner's illnesses and to allow extra time for revisions.

'Drum Song' Hits $500,000 Profit

The profit distribution on "Flower Drum Song" has climbed to $500,000 with the payment last week of another $300,000 dividend. The musical, currently at the American Theatre, St. Louis, began touring last May after a 75-week Broadway run.

The adaptation of C. Y. Lee's novel, written and presented by Richard Rodgers, the late Oscar Hammerstein 2d and Joseph Fields, cost $363,000 to produce. Major cities played by the show since leaving New York include Detroit, Los Angeles and San Francisco (Civic Light Opera Assn. subscription in both cities), Denver, Dallas and Memphis.

Following the St. Louis stand ending next Saturday (12), the musical goes to the Shubert Theatre, Chicago, opening next Monday (14) for an indefinite run.

Adapt 'Calamity Jane' Film Tuner For Legit Stock and Maybe B'way

A legit version of the 1953 western filmmusical, "Calamity Jane," is to be given its initial production next May at the Casa Manana, Fort Worth. The offering, scheduled for a three-week run, will be the opening bill of the regular summer musical season at the theatre. A tape of the score has been played for a group of Fort Worth residents, who've evinced interest in backing the venture for Broadway if the local production seems to warrant.

The legit and television rights to the property have been acquired by the Tams-Witmark Music Library, the established New York licensor of musical performance rights for the stock and amateur markets. It's the second film-musical to undergo a picture-to-legit transition in a move by Tams-Witmark to provide the fields it services with increased tuner product to augment the shortage of Broadway-originated musicals.

Last summer the firm, headed by Louis Aborn, was responsible for providing stock with a legit version of the Metro musical, "Meet Me in St. Louis." The book for "Calamity," a Warner Bros. release, costarring Doris Day and Howard Keel, has been adapted by Charles K. Freeman from the screenplay by James O'Hanlon. Freeman, a legit and film director, is drama columnist for the Macy newspaper chain, which publishes about a dozen dailies in the suburban New York area.

Sammy Fain and Paul Francis Webster, respective composer and lyricist for the film, have revised

Cantor to Get Third Of Producer End of 'Home'; Coe Retains Two-Thirds

Arthur Cantor, who recently joined Fred Coe in the sponsorship of "All the Way Home," is in for one-third of the management's share of the potential profits on the venture. The other two-thirds will be retained by Coe. Cantor's participation deal is in return for his bringing in $50,000 of the $150,000 capitalization. The backers and management will each own 50% of the venture.

The production billing on the Tad Mosel adaptation of James Agee's Pulitzer Prize novel, "A Death in the Family," will list it as presented by Coe, in association with Cantor. The situation, although not unique, is unusual in that Cantor is also pressagent for the project. As a member of the Assn. of Theatreical Press-agents & Managers, he's been given permission by the union to publicize the production. There have been previous instances where ATPAM pressagents and company managers have worked on their own presentations.

Cantor who besides his p.a. activities is currently represented on Broadway as co-producer of "Tenth Man," has been a longtime publicist for Coe, first for his television activities and then his legit productions of "Two for the Seesaw" and the present Main Stem entry "Miracle Worker."

"Home," scheduled to open its out-of-town tryout Nov. 10 at the Shubert Theatre, New Haven, is due to preem Nov. 30 at the Belasco Theatre, N.Y.

Revive Studio Three To Test 'Way to Capetown'

Studio Three, the non-profit "laboratory" for new scripts, is resuming operation under the guidance of Marshall Young. It has been inactive since last March. Young, manager of the Lunt-Fontanne Theatre, N.Y., is one of the founders of the group.

"On the Way To Capetown," a drama by Joel Wyman, based on Dan Jacobson's novel, "A Dance in the Sun," will be the Studio's first offering this season. Budgeted at $1,850, raised through contributions, the play will be presented admission-free Nov. 9-12 at the Master Institute Theatre, N.Y. Through a concession from Actors Equity, the players will receive $100 apiece, to cover two weeks of rehearsal and all performances.

The Importance of Being Oscar

London, Nov. 1.

F.E.S. (Plays) Ltd. presentation (by arrangement with Dublin Gate Theatre Productions) of a two-act reading by Michael Mac Liammoir. Staged by Hilton Edwards. Opened Oct. 31, '60, at the Apollo Theatre, London; $2.80 top.

The collaboration of two erudite, witty Irishmen, both men of the theatre, both actors, both with the gift of gab, both skilled writers, both emotionalists, both expert tasters of the art of living, turns out to be a heady stimulating evening in the theatre. It's Michael Mac Liammoir, one of Ireland's foremost actors, giving a one-man show of "The Importance of Being Oscar," which he first staged at the recent Dublin Drama Festival. Unfortunately it's scheduled for only two weeks.

The actor's unwitting collaborator is, of course, Oscar Wilde. For nearly three hours, which is too long, Mac Liammoir presents a vivid profile of the work, personality and life of the tragic playwright and wit. It is far more fascinating than either of the two recent films about Wilde. Mac Lammoir traces the Irish playwright's life and philosophical development with sympathy, humor and insight.

Excitingly he reads, acts and comments on Wilde and his writing. He links the chosen extracts and epigrams with a commentary that is as slyly amusing, as shrewdly provocative and emotionally touching as Wilde's own prose and verse. It is, indeed, often difficult to know where one begins and the other ends, but the result is a scintillating fusion.

Both the actor and his oldtime buddy and partner, Hilton Edwards, who has staged the show, concentrates mainly on presenting Wilde as the artist without ducking the problems of his tragic liaison, which caused his downfall. The first half shows his gay, hedonistic, starry rise to fame.

The program states that the between-acts intermission is regarded as covering his own trials. The second and better half sympathetically presents Wilde's sombre, tragic Gethsemane, including two long, but outstanding recitals from "De Profundis" and "The Balled of Reading Gaol."

Dressed in a tuxedo, Mac Liammoir displays a mammoth fest of memory and artistry. His props ar his voice, a green carnation, a pair of spectacles, a book at which he only occasionally looks, a decanter of pale, golden alcohol, a divan and a chair. Plus one pedestal of gay flowers which, in the second half symbolically became faded weeds.

It will help to understand something of Wilde's tortured life. But just to be able to understand and appreciate the language should be enough to make this mixture of drama and comedy an essential for any discriminating theatregoer. Rich.

Sive

London, Oct. 27.

Ilmall Ltd. presentation of three-act (six scenes) drama by John B. Keane. Staged by Judith Coxhead; decor and costumes, Robert Colquhoun. Opened Oct. 24, '60, at the Lyric Opera House, Hammersmith, London; $1.75 top.

Nanna Glavin	Betty Hardy
Mena Glavin	Maureen Pryor
Sive	Jacqueline Ryan
Thomasheen Sean Rua	Tony Quinn
Mike Glavin	Michael Golden
Liam Scuab	Brian Phelan
Sean Dota	Harry Hutchinson
Pats Bocock	P. G. Stephens
Carthalawn	Johnny Cahill

This unpleasant Irish melodrama is being staged for two weeks. Only the most optimistic and indulgent would welcome a longer run.

"Sive" is crudely written, clumsily staged and only spasmodically well acted. Set somewhere in Irish bogland, it tries the old confidence trick of hoping that high-faluting flights of words will be construed as fanciful poetry.

The story concerns a teenage girl about to be sold to a lecherous, drooling 70-year-old man. When she discovers that she is illegitimate and that the boy she intends to marry is her brother, she wanders into a nearby bog. Later, her body (with not even a speck of mud on her dress) is laid on a table and the distasteful proceedings mercifully close.

The actors can do very little with the shapeless characters the author has devised. Young Jacqueline Ryan makes a pretty heroine and Brian Phelan a handsome, virile hero. Maureen Pryor, as a very wicked woman, Harry Hutchinson, Betty Hardy, Tony Quinn anl Michael Golden are all forced to play at a high pitch and for more than the parts are worth. Only P. G. Stephens and Johnny Cahill, as a couple of tinkers spreading curses around like confetti, seem really to get under the Irish skin.

Robert Colquhoun's setting of a small farmhouse kitchen in Southern Ireland at least has the a'r of being authentic. Rich.

(After turned down by the Abbey Theatre, Dublin, "Sive" was produced last spring at the Listowel Drama Group at the All-Ireland Amateur Drama Festival at Athlone. After its enthusiastic reception there, it was taken to Dublin, having successful engagements at the Abbey and then at the larger Olympia. The U.S. rights were subsequently acquired by Dermot McNamara and Helena Carroll for a contemplated Broadway production.—Ed.)

First staged at the Mercury Theatre in 1945, Ronald Duncan's "This Way To The Tomb" caused a flurry of praise as promising, along with the works of Christopher Fry and others, a new era of poetic drama. The current revival at the Arts suggests that the original excitement was based merely on occasional fine and fluent writing, plus craftsmanship but no real passion.

The piece purports to portr first the 14th century legend of St. Antony, Abbot of St. Ferrara, who tasted to find tranquility and conquered all except pride. Secondly it attempts to lampoon today's values via a ty group's visit to the same scene.

The Antony portion is laborious going, with but four characters the Saint delivering a virtual monolog. The modern-day satire is heavy-handed cynicism run riot, where from a belief in the continuity of existence and an avowal of th need for faith emerge as " ages."

It is hard to foresee much box-office future for the venture, except with the academically curious or for the sake of the performances, in particular by Iain Cuthoertson in the demanding central role, and by Philip Locke and Peter Gill. Frank Dunlop's staging, against Rose Marie Hansom's simple but striking set, is notable for fine grouping, while the choir that renders Benjamin Britten's integrated music is first-rate. Erni.

Renee Jeanmaire

London, Nov. 3.

Peter Daubeny presentation in two parts. Features Renee Jeanmaire, Buzz Miller, Les 3 Horaces, Luis Bernardo, Arthur Plasschaert, George Kessel, Francis Ciampi, Michel Orphelinm, Jean Claude Sergent, Francois Parrot. Michel Legrand orch; devised and staged by Roland Petit. At Royalty Theatre, London, Nov. 2, '60; $3.50 top.

Billed as "An evening of Song and Dance with Zizi Jeanmaire," the Peter Daubeny package starring French dancer Renee Jeanmaire at the Royalty Theatre is an odd and disappointing mixture. It would appear to be a questionable b.o. proposition, in spite of the star's popularity and following in London, though it may just about succeed in holding up for its three-weeks run.

The program has a questionable start in which an out-of-focus color film of Paris is projected on to a large screen to the accompaniment of background music by Michel Legrand's orchestra in a too-brightly-lit pit. The real disappointment, however, is the new Roland Petit ballet based on Somerset Maugham's "Rain," in which Miss Jeanmaire is accompanied by Buzz Miller. Both are expert dancers, but neither has anything approaching an opportunity. The choreography is dull and restrained, and though Miss Jeanmaire's effervescent personality cannot be subdued, it does not disguise the harsh truth.

Miss Jeanmaire comes into her own, however, in the final half-hour with a magnificent Tour de Chant. Though she is infinitely superior as a dancer, it is the vocal stint that gives her a real chance.

In black tights and open necked blouse, she is the gamine par excellence, and her 11-song routine, followed by a typical but appealing medley of French tunes, is given a highly professional delivery. Miller and his team of dancers participate in this stint and, apart from adding color, give Miss Jeanmaire time for a number of fast costume changes.

Miller has a spot earlier in the bill for a neat terp routine; Les 3 Horaces have an individual vocal style, and a table tennis pantomime bit is superb artistry. Their intros to French songs in a fractured English is diverting. So is their rendition of "British Grenadiers."

The major surprise of the presentation was the audience hostility on opening night to Michel Legrand's Jazz Panorama. The casual style of playing and batoning appeared to irritate many customers. Apart from spasmodic slow hand claps, there were cries of "Drop the curtain," "Bring on Zizi" and "Don't rehearse in our tim ." Myro.

Schichtwechsel

(Change of Command)

Zurich, Oct. 20.

Schauspielhaus presentation of a drama in 26 scenes, by Hugo Loetscher. Staged by Peter Loeffler; set, Teo Otto; technical direction, Ferdinand Lange; lighting, Walter Gross. Opened Sept. 30, '60, at the Schauspielhaus, Zurich; $3 top.

Regent of Balmasi	Rudolf Therkatz
Christiane	Margaret Carl
Favorite	tto Maechitlinger
Troup Commander	anna Krassnitzer
Historian	Walter Kiesler
Soldier of Merit	Peter Oehme
Young Priest	Rene Scheibli
Soldier Girl	Magdalena Thiesing
Rebel	Peter Morgenstern

This dramatic venture by young Swiss literary critic Hugo Loetscher is a doubtful bet. Its pointedly abstract style and cerebral bloodlessness seriously hamper the commercial possibilities, and even as a purely artistic exercise there are too many flaws to vercome the almost complete lack of theatrical values.

"Schichtwechsel" "Change of Command") is in an "imaginary state after a decisive victory." The 110-minute no intermission drama tells st simultaneously on three different levels. There is a regent, with his faithless mistress, facing death after a foul victory. There are his followers plotting to usurp the power. Finally, an old soldier, a young priest, a rebel and an army prostie serve as counterpoint figures against the tragic upper-level happenings. Eventually, all three plots merge, ending with the regent's assassination by his favorite officer, who takes over.

Apparently intended as a bitter, ironic comment on today's world power struggle, this never comes off. It is wordy and long-winded, too confused for the average playgoer, and devoid of dramatic fireworkers. A few sharp, well-founded lines impress, but as mere aphorisms. Otherwise, the dialog is at times crude, but mostly puzzling.

The Schauspielhaus performance, staged by Peter Loeffler, is satisfactory, considering the meagre material. Mezo.

Leo Kerz, producer of the upcoming Broadway production of Derek Prouse's adaptation of Eugene Ionesco's "Rhinocero," will toss a cocktail party in N.Y. next Nov. 20 in honor of the author.

A year-around Puerto Rican theatrical festival will open Jan. 10 with a season of comedy and drama at the Tapia Theatre, San Juan, extending through March 5. Barry Yellen, who's sponsored the San Juan Drama Festival in recent years, has been joined by the Commonwealth Government in the project, which is being sponsored by Theatre Development Corp., with capitalization of around $200,000.

Olga Lee, agent for James Daly, costar of "Period of Adjustment," opening tomorrow night (Thurs.) at the Helen Hayes Theatre, N. Y., points out that, contrary to a statement in last week's issue, the actor gets name billing in his camel cigaret spots on television and radio.

Al Hirschfeld, freelance theatrical caricaturist, will be represented at the John Heller Gallery, N. Y., from tomorrow (Thurs.) through Dec. 10 by an exhibition of his drawings and gouaches.

Gena Rowlands, who had a 15-month contract to appear in "Critic's Choice," has withdrawn from the play, which begins its tryout tour tonight (Wed.) in Wilmington. Her role has been taken over by Georgann Johnson.

Swedish-born British actress Mai Zetterling, who collapsed last Saturday night (5) from exhaustion during the first act of the second of two successive previews of "Hedda Gabler" at the Fourth Street Theatre, N. Y., has withdrawn from her starring role in order to take a complete rest. She is succeeded by Anne Meachem, who after only three days to get up in the title part, goes on tonight (Wed.) for the official preem.

Dina Merrill will play Desdemona in the Helen Hayes Equity Group's presentation Nov. 17 of Shakespeare's "Othello" at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Jack Manning will direct with the assistance of Tao Strong, and Kenneth Whitlock will play the title role.

Road Spotty; 'With You' 21G, S.F.; 'Lady' Record $110,844, Toronto; 'Camelot' Record $69,411, Boston

Business on the road varied from fair to good for most shows last week. House records were set by "My Fair Lady" at the O'Keefe Centre, Toronto, and "Camelot" at the Shubert Theatre, Boston.

"I'm with You" started weakly in its initial tryout stanza in San Francisco and "Love and Libel" did okay in a five-performance Toronto break-in. The Civic Light Opera Assn. production of "Show Boat" closed last Saturday (5) in Frisco.

'Moon Gate' to Cost 20G

A $20,000 budget has been set for the Guild Hall Productions off-Broadway presentation of Paul Burton-Mercur's drama, "Moon Gate." Eddie Dowling will direct.

The play has been scheduled to open in January.

'Calamity Jane'

the original songs for the legit version, in additions to providing several new numbers. The musical arrangements are being handled by Phil Lang.

The score includes the 1953 Academy Award-winner, "Secret Love," and "Black Hills of Dakota," still a top-seller in England. At present, there are 17 musical numbers in the show.

Warners and others with an interest in the basic rights will participate in the proceeds from the legit and possible television performances. The publishing rights to the songs are owned by Music Publishers Holding Corp., the Warner music subsidiary. There's never been an album of the score and, as yet, no deal has been set for the record rights. WB has its own disk firm, Warner Bros. Records.

Tams-Witmark expects to release the property for other stock productions next summer, but on a restricted basis, which will eliminate any presentations in the east. The Casa Manana, incidentally, is operated by Michael Pollock and seats around 2,000.

G&S Splurge

Phoenix had originally been scheduled for five weeks, but was extended an additional fortnight.

During last spring and summer, the American Savoyards presented a G & S repertory for 125 performances at the Jan Hus Auditorium, N.Y. The company, which followed the off-Broadway stand with some stock dates, has been booked for a three-week winter engagement at the N. Y. City Center. The N. Y. Opera, current at the Center, has also been presenting two G & S works as part of its repertory.

For the purists, the revival activity also includes a planned tour of Canada and the U.S. next year by the traditional G & S troupe, the D'Oyly Carte Co., of England.

Ballets Africains 21G On Single Week, Boston

Boston, Nov. 8.

Les Ballets Africains grossed $21,000 last week at the Wilbur Theatre here at a $4.95-$5.50 top. The presentation got a routine visit from the city censor Dick Sinnott, who reportedly found the bare-bosom costuming "in good taste."

The troupe drew unanimous critical raves (Doyle, American; Hughes, Herald; Lloyd, Monitor; Kelly, Globe; Maloney, Traveler; Norton, Record).

Off-Broadway Review

A Zany Evening With Elsa Lanchester
(HUNTER COLLEGE, N. Y.)

Elsa Lanchester's one-woman show is spotty. The touring presentation hit New York last Friday night (4) for a one-performance stand at Hunter College under the sponsorship of Art D'Lugoff, operator of the Village Gate nitery in Greenwich Village and promoter of concert-styled offerings at such Manhattan spots as Carnegie Hall and Town Hall.

Miss Lanchester, who's been doing the one-woman show routine for several years, is assisted in her current venture by pianists Ray Henderson (also musical director) and Don Dollarhide. Most of her material consists of songs, described in a blurb as "frequently naughty." Some of the stuff is also corny.

The program has its good moments, particularly when Miss Lanchester portrays two characters in a rendition of Osbert Sitwell's poem, "The Ballad of Sister Anne." In this her acting ability is excellently demonstrated.

Some of the numbers, such as the one about a girl's unexciting swain and another about a woman who finds a husband after announcing her availability in a catalog, are also enjoyable. Miss Lanchester's vocal performance is pleasant.

There are dull spots, however, as well as certain pat movements and occasional sticky chatter. Miss Lanchester changes attire frequently, during those intervals either Henderson or Dollarhide takes over the stage in an okay display of solo piano playing. The tw also occasionally participate clowning with Miss Lanchester.

Besides her one-woman performances, Miss Lanchester has also recorded several albums. The presentation at Hunter College, which drew a large audience, was scaled to a $3.85 top. Jess.

Future Productions

BROADWAY

"How To Succeed In Business Without Really Trying," musical comedy based on Shephard Mead's novel, adapted by Abe Burrows, Jack Weinstock and Willie Gilbert; music and lyrics, Frank Loesser; producers, Cy Feuer and Ernest Martin. For next season.

"Don Quixote," musical version; adapter and composer not set; producer, David Cogan. For next fall.

OFF-BROADWAY

"The Apple," drama by Jack Gelber; producer, Living Theatre. For late winter at the Living Theatre, N. Y.

Stanley Richards Sails To Dicker London Deals

Stanley Richards, playwright and drama theatre critic for Players Magazine, sailed last week Europe aboard the Queen Elizabeth.

While in London, he plans to view West End productions and confer with English publishers about a British edition of his book, "Canada on Stage," published in Toronto by Clarke, Irwin & Co., as well as English publication of several of his plays.

Java Spots Off-Limits

Actors Equity has taken the steam out a mushrooming legit production movement in Greenwich Village coffee houses. It has instructed members not to appear in presentations in the java joints or cafes except under contractual conditions approved by the union.

The growing popularity of cafe theatres, mostly offering revues or small plays, had already spurred Equity to form a committee to study the situation. It's figured that the coffee houses will also come under surveilance by the committee.

Steve Cochran will direct and star in a dramatization of Robinson Jeffers' narrative poem, "Mar," to be done in Los Angeles this winter.

Shows Out of Town

I'm With You

this show. In dance numbers Negro performers are meticulously paired off, but the work and contributions of Negro and white performers are on a par. Th show's producers evidently went out after talent, regardless of color.

Two numbers were cut from "I'm With You" before the opening, so that this doesn't suffer the usual giantist of a new musical. The two acts run just over two h or nearly perfect length.

w the big problem if Capitol Records wants to protect its $150,000 investment; is to put singer Cole at ease with a less hokey story line for actor Cole. Stef.

Molly Cobbler	Charmion King

Others: Cynthia Belbout, Kay Hawtrey, Edward K. Holmes, Jack Hutt, Grania Mortimer, Ken Pauli, Paul Robi

The keynote of "Love and Libel" is the extraordinary speed of Tyrone Guthrie's direction, his peopling of a bare stage with brought-on and descending sets at a breathless pace, with members of the cast, portraying stagehands, whisking the changes with speed and aplomb.

The rest of the play, based on a lawsuit for libel against a small-town newspaper which inserted a false engagement announcement, is virtually a parody on shows in which whodu it uestions are never answered or motivated. Blame is apparently due Robertson Davies' adaptation of his "Leaven for Malice" novel. The leisurely and philosophical book has not become a good play, and plenty of doctoring is needed in the Toronto-Detroit-Boston tryout period prior to Broadway.

"Love and Libel" adds up to a hodge-podge of vignettes of vicious and superficial characterizations amid the stuffiness of a university and cathedral city. There is a welter of gossip over the spurious engagement notice of the professor's daughter and a weak boy who not only is dominated by his wealthy mother but is carrying the torch for a local deb.

Comedy highlights are the double-talk accusations of a campus consultant on "psychology engineering" who charges the heroine's father with an Oedipus complex, the striptease antics of the mother who is retiring for the night under the ministrations of her son, and the lusty life of the voluble cathedral organist and his wife.

In a dream sequence, Guthrfie employs unpredictable fantasy and forges an intricate surrealistic scene of beds in the nightmare but self-revelatory dreams of the protagonists. The pieces fall into place in the third act, but there is still the detective technique of red-herring "clues" as to the identity of who inserted the newspaper announcement.

As the bibulous organist who is still an ambitious artist in the pursuit of his calling, Dennis King has a strong part and plays it with alternating bombastics and pathos that enriches the witty, philosophical writing. Outstanding, too, the performances of Lawrence Hardy as the bride's outraged father, Robert Christie as the harrassed publisher, Gene Saks as the breezy psychology consultant, Leo Leyden as a job-seeking sharpie, and James Edmond as the dean of the cathedral.

Madeleine Christie is splendid as the domineering dowager with money, Charmion King and Barbara Hamilton are comediennes, and Amelia Hall is good as an avaricious but mousy widow. The young romantics, linked by the engagement announcemen ire Corinne Conley and John Milligan, who play with sufficient bewilderment and heart-warming charm.

"Love and Libel" owes any present success to Guthrie's deft staging and Davies' pungent writing, but it will need plenty of surgery for Broadw acceptance. McStay.

November 7, 1960

Mr. Herman Levin, Producer
My Fair Lady
424 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Herman:

Last week at the O'Keefe Centre MY FAIR LADY grossed $110,844, a house record which is going to be hard for anyone to beat since it represents the sale of every ticket at each performance. The balance of the engagement for the next two weeks is also sold out and the people of Toronto as well as the management of O'Keefe Centre are hopefully looking forward to a return engagement next season of your great musical.

Thanks, Herman, for the booking.

Warmest regards.

Sincerely,

Allan Andrews Holden

ANOTHER SMASH HIT
ORIGINAL BROADWAY CAST ALBUM

on Capitol Records *

* Available on November 21

"TAMMY GRIMES HAS MY VOTE AS THE SENSATION OF THE SEASON. SHE IS A GENIUS!

I'LL JUST HAVE TO GO BACK AND SEE HER AGAIN."

—WALTER KERR, HERALD TRIBUNE

"TAMMY GRIMES AS MOLLY IS AN ADORABLE TOMBOY. Her tilted nose is as impudent as the lines she speaks. Her brash voice, in speech and song, is vibrant. There is a new score by the talented music man, Meredith Willson, who has written some ingratiating songs. 'Are You Sure?' is like a scat spiritual which Tammy Grimes and the company line out with fervor. 'Dolce Far Niente' and 'My Own Brass Bed' are sweetly sentimental, and 'Beautiful People of Denver' has bounce. Harve Presnell has a cultivated voice."
—HOWARD TAUBMAN, TIMES

"FAR AND FAR AWAY THE BEST MUSICAL TO HIT BROADWAY SINCE 'MY FAIR LADY.' 'The Unsinkable Molly Brown' is gay, tender, nostalgic and funny. Fresh, vivid and bubbly, with an undercurrent of inventive American humor. 'The Unsinkable Molly Brown' is clearly here to stay."
—JOHN DAY, CBS TV

"A WARMING, BEGUILING MOLLY BROWN COMES ALIVE WITH A WHOOP AND A HOLLER. It is a resounding hit that will be around for a long, long time. Order your tickets today."
—BENNETT CERF, WNEW

"BEING A BUOYANT SPRITE, TAMMY GRIMES IS UNSINKABLE. Meredith Willson is in his happiest mood when the miners in the Leadville saloon sing 'Belly Up To the Bar, Boys'. There is an excellent song for Harve Presnell, 'If I Knew', and a beguiling one, 'Dolce Far Niente'."
—JOHN CHAPMAN, DAILY NEWS

"THE PLAY IS AS AMERICAN AS OKLAHOMA! with the best trappings that Broadway can provide, especially the music by Meredith Willson. The evening was a triumph for genius Tammy Grimes."
—LEON PEARSON, NBC RADIO

"TAMMY GRIMES IS A GREAT BIG HIT IN 'THE UNSINKABLE MOLLY BROWN.'"
—EARL WILSON, POST

"'THE UNSINKABLE MOLLY BROWN' IS A SMASH HIT. TAMMY GRIMES IS A WHIZ. Move over, Broadway, because 'The Unsinkable Molly Brown' will be needing plenty of extra room to accommodate all the patrons who will try to crowd into the Winter Garden."
ETHEL COLBY, JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

"MEREDITH WILLSON'S SCORE IS ONE OF THE BRIGHTEST FEATURES OF MOLLY BROWN. TAMMY GRIMES IS AN EXPERT COMEDIENNE AND MAKES MOLLY SYMPATHETIC, COURAGEOUS AND AMUSING. It hasn't been necessary to tell anyone since 'The Music Man' that Meredith Willson writes songs which are delightful in their frank and unpretentious tunefulness. The score for 'Unsinkable Molly Brown' is one of its brightest features, others being its colorful production, delightful dances staged by Peter Gennaro and the performances of Tammy Grimes and Harve Presnell, who has a brilliant singing voice."
—RICHARD WATTS, JR., POST

WINTER GARDEN 50 St. & B'way CI 5-4870

"TIME FOR REJOICING. A MAGNIFICENT VEHICLE FOR TAMMY GRIMES. I happen to be a staunch supporter of the Meredith Willson school of American musical comedy. Willson's music for 'The Unsinkable Molly Brown' is delightful. I would defy you to leave the theatre without strains of 'I Ain't Down Yet' humming in your bonnet. With Dore Schary's sensitive direction, 'The Unsinkable Molly Brown' is told with such warmth and style and good taste, so magnificently mounted and skillfully performed that there can be no doubt about its acceptance."
—JOHN McCLAIN, JOURNAL-AMERICAN

"MISS GRIMES, I WISH YOU A LONG AND HAPPY FRIENDSHIP. She mesmerized me completely at the Winter Garden last night. Librettist Richard Morris has honed-out some fine corn fed dialogue for the nouveau riche lass who can't make it with Denver's best people. All concerned with the production have been exceedingly wise in retaining Harve Presnell to sing the principal love songs. It's a pleasure, Mr. Presnell. Unmistakably, fun." —WALTER KERR, HERALD TRIBUNE

"A NEW STAR IS BORN. Tammy Grimes has bounce, gaiety and life, and she is triumphant in 'The Unsinkable Molly Brown'."
—WARD MOREHOUSE, NEWHOUSE NEWSPAPERS and NANA

TAMMY GRIMES IS IMMENSELY DYNAMIC. First nighters got an opportunity to see the widely heralded 'The Unsinkable Molly Brown' last night and judging by their lusty laughter and robust applause, they found it to their liking. They also loved the antics of Tammy Grimes. Dore Schery has staged the show with the speed of grub-stakers rushing to the scene of a big strike. It's all glittering and bouncy."
—ROBERT COLEMAN, MIRROR

"BROADWAY'S NEWEST MUSICAL IS ALSO BROADWAY'S NEWEST HIT. Brilliant songs by Meredith Willson. Tammy Grimes is irresistible. Harve Presnell has truly a magnificent voice."
—JACK WALTERS, CBS RADIO

"A HARDY AND HEARTWARMING SLICE OF AMERICANA!"
—JACK GAVER, UNITED PRESS INTERNAT

"'THE UNSINKABLE MOLLY BROWN' MERITS THE TOP OF YOUR LIST OF SHOWS TO SEE. TAMMY GRIMES IS VIVACIOUS, PERT AND DYNAMIC. Buoyant, peppy, tuneful, a show of genial humor, originality and unsurpassable verve. Meredith Willson has turned his 76 trombones on Broadway once again and his jaunty, lilting score and his tangy lyrics once more combine into a zestful bit of Americana."
—THOMAS DASH, WOMEN'S WEAR DAILY

"TAMMY GRIMES IS ADORABLE. 'THE UNSINKABLE MOLLY BROWN' IS DELECTABLE at start, middle and finish. Meredith Willson wrote its tuneful music and lyrics, and Tammy Grimes gave it enormous zest."
—FRANK ASTON, WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN

The great songs from THE UNSINKABLE MOLLY BROWN, the smash hit new Meredith Willson musical, will be heard on radio and television beginning November 21.
On November 21, the original Broadway cast CAPITOL RECORDS album will be available, and all your favorite radio and television programs will be presenting tunes from this new hit.

"SMASH HIT! SHOULD BE AROUND FOR MANY A MOON."

—JOHN McCLAIN, JOURNAL-AMERICAN

CASTING NEWS

Following are available parts in upcoming Broadway, off-Broadway, and touring shows, as well as ballet, films, industrial and television shows. All information has been obtained directly by the VARIETY Casting Department by telephone calls, and has been rechecked as of noon yesterday (Tues.).

The available roles will be repeated weekly until filled, and additions to the list will be made only when information is secured from responsible sources. The intention is to service performers with leads presented with the assignments of the shows involved rather than to run a week's gross marathon. This information is published without charge.

In addition to the available parts listed, the tabulation includes productions announced for later this season, but, for which, the management is not accepting casting calls. Parenthetical designations are as follows: (C) Comedy, (D) Drama, (MC) Musical Comedy, (MD) Musical Drama, (R) Revue, (Rep) Repertory, (DR) Dramatic Reading.

Brooklyn, 51st State In The Union

Irving Wallace's hotly controversial "The Chapman Report." But this can't happen in Manhattan where the public libraries quickly put the kibosh on the best seller.

William McKelvy Martin, director of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, is largely responsible for lifting the venerable institution ut of its mutton-chop whiskers er. A former manager of the Cleveland and Pittsburgh Symphony orchestras, Martin is now in his fourth year of directing the Academy. He has revolutionized the promotional techniques for obtaining new subscribers and assured them of a wide and absorbing assortment of events on this year's calendar. To entice new subscribers to the 1960-61 season, he's dangling in front of them the sort of objects the banks have been dishing out for a number of years, namely, tote bags, weekend cases, electric clocks, singing teakettles, cookbooks, longplaying records and aluminum serving ovens. The only thing Martin hasn't done is serve up green stamps and if this will keep the intellectual pot boiling in Brooklyn, he'll do that, too.

Churches, Too

Nor are the churches overlooking any promotional gimmicks in order to fill their parish pews. The many religious (this still is the City of Churches) tabernacles hereabouts are going in for superduper movie exploitation techniques. Also, this borough, which for years was sans an art gallery of any consequence (aside from the enterprising Brooklyn Museum) now possesses an aggressive one on Brooklyn Heights—the sapolioed, Mr. Clean, Left Bank of Kings County.

The battle cry for cultural enlightenment also will be heard from the Brooklyn Eagle. The Eagle, which disappeared from the front doorsteps of Flatbush burghers, has returned to the newsstands first, as a Sunday sheet, and later it is hoped as a daily, if biz justifies. Robert W. Farrell, who published the now defunct Magazine Digest and was a Broadway columnist on the old Eagle, acquired the sheet from Frank Schroth last year.

As regards the Academy of Music under Martin's aegis, membership zoomed in the past two years from 2,400 to nearly 4,000. The goal is 4,600 and Martin feels he'll achieve it shortly, because of the stepped-up promotional activities including newspaper, subway advertising, but best of all, he's counting on the wealth of yeastly attractions to draw the crowds from this part of the metropolis.

With Martin's green lighting, boroughites can now traipse to the Academy of Music and gander the goings-on of the Brooklyn Opera Co. under the direction of Guido G. Salmaggi; Brooklyn Philharmonia with Siegfried Landau conducting; the Brooklyn Civic Ballet (no kidding) under Alan Banks direction; the Brooklyn Theatre Arts Company, a new venture under the direction of Earl G. Muron and Joseph Yaver, with two theatrical productions under way, the first "Paint Your Wagon."

The Academy, despite an increase in membership and array of talent, appears destined to operate in the red for some time to come, but the trustees are less inclined to grumble these days in view of the hosannahs from Academy attendees. Membership is $15 a year and entitles members to huge numbers of free lectures, films and concerts and decent discounts on special events for the Boston Symphony, N.Y. Philharmonic, Ballet de Monte Carlo and Society of American Magicians to mention a few.

Premieres Also

A number of the special events re in the nature of premieres and "firsts" thus giving Brooklynites a heady feeling of supersophistication and snobbery, vital elements that have been sadly lacking in the social geography of this fading urban community. Attendees are largely from Manhattan, New Jersey and Connecticut who evidently regard a safari into the wilds of Brooklyn with less hesitation than a spin in the stationwagon to the local shopping center.

The Academy has been refurbished and its booking program today is as sleek and perk as the stiletto heel on a flamenco dancer's shoes. Martin has added more science programs and increased the lineup of attractions for the lollypop set from a mere half dozen to 17 plays and three films. He's beefed up the lectures on world affairs from 17 to 30 and scheduled more at night. There's additional theatrical film, more live theatre for adults, more travelogs, particularly from the Burton Holmes outfit; the restoration of talks on literature with Dr. Frederick Ewen presiding (this includes readings by the Helen Hayes Equity Group and dramatic productions of the American Academy of Dramatic Arts); more folk dancing on the stage of the Opera House, and a barrage of lectures on how to invest your dough in Wall Street.

Academy advertising is handled by the Walter Morin Agency. This year the campaign calls for reduction of space in print media and added expenditure in subway advertising. Printing matter has been jazzed up considerably and the cover of the 1960-61 broch re listing the major events of the season is a departure from previous issues. Cover photo depicting the various arts is credited to Young & Rubicam.

Constant pitch is to provide an outlet for Brooklyn talent in the performing arts. William B. Hewson, chairman of the governing committee of the Academy, is determined to make it an incubating source for Brooklyn talent via growing opera, symphony, ballet and theatre endeavors.

Only The Dodgers Missing

Lobby of the Academy has showcases with displays of free gifts new members get, as well as giveaways to old members. Examination reveals that No. 1 giveaway is a plaid weekend case; No. 2 is an electric wall clock. Westminster made the longplaying records which the Academy dishes out. No. 4 record giveaway is Liszt's Six Hungarian Rhapsodies. Bizet's Carmen Suites No. 1 and No. 2 is runner up.

Only fly in the Academy's ointment, according to reports, is the absence of the cacophonous Brooklyn Dodgers Sym-phoney on the stage of the Opera House to round out the brilliant lineup. It has been suggested that Martin book the old Ebbets Field attraction. Soloists, in this instance, would be Eddie Batan, who played a penny whistle during three decades of attendance at Ebbets Field, and Hilda Chester, the onetime cowbell-swinging fan of the daffy Dodgers. It would be a hollering success, the one for the road, so to speak, after a genuine cultural binge in the lofty halls of the Academy.

Foreign Stars

Chamber Orchestra, famed French actor and mime Jean Louis Barrault, Marcel Marceau—all have appeared in Israel this year. It is too much of too good a thing for a small country to absorb.

As all of them are big names, arriving under a barrage of publicity, nearly every foreign artist or group plays to full houses. But this means that the average Israeli family, within its rather limited budget for entertainment, is deserting the Hebrew theatre for the sake of foreign performances.

A government committee was set up more than a year ago, to regulate "the import of artists from abroad." This committee is quite powerful as, due to currency regulations, one needs its permission to take out any money earned in Israel. No artist, whose appearance in Israel was not previously approved by the committee, gets this permission.

But, in practice, matters are handled in a liberal way and practically every foreign artist who wants to perform here gets a ready okay. The only thing the committee does is setting dates for foreign performances, and seeing to it that bookings don't get overcrowded.

The Hebrew theatres are not satisfied with this arrangement and demand that only performances of real artistic value should be imported. Even these should pay higher taxes than they do now and the gain should be used to help the Hebrew theatre.

The government-sponsored Council for Culture & Arts is holding hearings now on this curious problem of imports. Representatives of theatres and impresarios have already presented their diametrically opposed views: the former as defenders of Hebrew culture, the last—in the name of laissez faire—let the public make its choice.

Public opinion is divided (in Israel a theatrical dispute is a matter of wide concern): some are invoking civil liberties against any interference with artistic life. But others are worried with the fate of the Hebrew theatre and demand safeguards for the newly born or, correctly, newly reborn Hebrew cultural life.

Harold Holland, Cultural Affairs Officer of the American Embassy here, states that the American repertory drama group, sponsored by the State Dept. and headed by Lawrence Langner, director of the Theatre Guild, will visit Israel next April; only three days, giving three performances.

Tennessee Williams' "Glass Menagerie," William Gibson's "Miracle Worker" and Thornton Wilder's "The Skin of Our Teeth." Helen Hayes is supposed to come along as star of the group.

"Menagerie" was a success here a few years ago when presented by the Kameri Theatre; "Skin of Our Teeth" was played by a smaller company, and "Miracle Worker" is under rehearsal in Habima. The American group will find here an audience eager to compare.

Ben-Hur

it appears that Metro has recovered or is near reaching its negative cost.

Simultaneous with the instantaneous click of "Ben-Hur," Metro's fortunes took a turn for the better. With "Ben-Hur" serving as the impetus and greatest coin collector, M-G losses trend was quickly reversed and the studio, which was showing a loss of $5,000,000 annually, began to register an annual profit. Dividend payments, withheld for several years, were resumed and increased. And, perhaps most important, Metro regained it's status as the Tiffany of the business.

Other Grosses

During its first year at Loew's State, the picture will have grossed more than $2,300,000. It has passed the $1,000,000 in five engagements—Boyd, Philadelphia; Egyptian, Los Angeles; Michael Todd, Chicago; Coronet, San Francisco; Empire, London. It has exceeded $500,000 at the Saxon, Boston; Alouette, Montreal; University, Toronto; Lincoln, Miami; United Artists, Detroit; Warner, Washington; and Warner, Pittsburgh.

In addition to the New York engagement, year runs will shortly be chalked up in Boston, L. A., Philly, Dallas, Montreal, London, San Francisco, Toronto, Chicago, and Miami.

Moreover, the picture made a remarkable impact. It copped 11 Academy Awards, including the "best picture of the year," the greatest number ever received by any picture. The picture is also credited with starting a renovation boom, with Loew's State setting the pattern with $1,000,000 facelifting prior to the picture's premiere. This set the pattern for similar renovations by many other theatres in key cities.

In addition to the critical acclaim the picture received, unique for a spectacle film, "Ben-Hur" was lauded in editorials, widely heralded from the pulpit, and the subject of tributes from commentators and opinion makers.

"Ben-Hur" is probably the most honored picture in history. In addition to the Academy Award, it was named the "best picture of the year" by the N. Y. Film Critics. Among its other awards are the Golden Globe as "best picture of the year" by the Hollywood Foreign Press Assn.; "best produced picture" by the Screen Producers Guild; "best directed picture" by the Screen Directors Guild; "best picture" by the American Foreign Language Press; "best drama of the year" by the Federation of Motion Picture Councils. Moreover, "Ben-Hur" was presented with a special certificate by the Natio al Conference of Christians and Jews for "outstanding leadership in promoting the cause of good will and understanding among all the people of the nation." The picture, as well as individuals connected with it, received numerous other awards, including many from foreign countries.

on every side. The fabulous department stores are jammed with merchandise and with eager buyers. Stock market quotations are skyrocketing more rapidly than ours are declining. As a consequence of this widespread prosperity the movie business is, comparatively speaking, in the doldrums. The public is far too busy watching newly acquired tv sets, madly driving newly acquired automobiles and reveling in newly acquired refrigerators and other American gadgets to find time to attend any except a limited number of pictures, frequently the worst ones. Sex, sadism and sensationalism fortfied with a few stars are as safe a recipe for success on the Japanese screen as on the American.

The theatres are encountering tough competition from coffee houses, which in a land of tea drinkers specialize in bad coffee and good American records. Even more devastating are the inroads of the pachenko parlors—pachenko being a Japanese form of pinball with a vast popular appeal.

Still Dandy

All in all, the picture business has declined approximately 8% from the banner year of 1958. Conditions in the industry, however, are still calculated to arouse nostalgic yearnings in the hearts of oldtime American movie makers and distributors. The average citizen of Tokyo attends 20 times a year, more than twice as often as his counterpart in New York. Only 25% of American pictures made in the past 10 years ever recover their original budget cost but almost all Japanese pictures are in the black inside of a year. There is no financial necessity to sell them down the airwaves to television or even to export them to foreign countries.

The first run theatres, except when they play a really fine picture like "Sons and Lovers," are usually packed to the rafters. Tickets are sold as long as there is space to jam another body into the house. If there are any fire regulations, no exhibitor pays the least attention to them. The patrons crowd the aisles and stand five rows deep in the rear.

Intermissions are interminable so as to promote the sale of ice cream, candy and pop, all of which are consumed by Japanese audiences in terrifying quantities. When at length every potential consumer's stomach has been satiated, the house is darkened but not for the showing of a feature picture. Advertising slides run anywhere from 10 to 20 minutes and along with the concessions are a source of additional theatrical revenue.

There has been no antitrust decision in Japan to compel the producers to dispose of their theatres and to sell pictures individually. Most of the major companies control theatre circuits and pictures are block booked. Exhibitors frequently buy their entire product for one year, maybe as many as 102 pictures, from one producing company. There is no shortage of flims as in the United States. Approximately 500 Japanese features are made annually and as many as 200 foreign pictures are imported. The foreign pictures are shown with sub-titles on the right hand side of the screen. No Crowther disciple has arisen as yet in Japan to urge that titles should be discarded and that all pictures should be dubbed.

U.S. Share Down

American film business in Japan has been steadily deteriorating. Under the Occupation we occupied a privileged position and possibly as a consequence even five years ago we were still grossing at least 40% of the total reciprts. Today it is doubtful if our share exceeds 20%. Pictures which were formerly sold regardless of quality for 60% of the receipts if in color and 50% if in black and white, must now be rented strictly on their merits. Single featuring, which we insisted upon, is being replaced by double features. European pictures have made substantial inroads on American preeminence in the foreign market. The appeal of French, English and Italian films may be, like olives, a cultivated taste, but once acquired it grows in intensity. The interest in continental stars and directors seems to be far greater today in Japan than the appeal of their U.S. competitors. We have failed not only to develop new personalities but also adequately to publicize those we have.

The decline in American motion picture prestige, however, is due even more to the ever-increasing power of the Japanese film companies. Toho, in particular, has more than a toehold—really a stranglehold—on the local market. It operates the best-located theatres in Tokyo and many of the other large cities. It has the biggest studio with the most celebrated stars and directors on its payroll. It has reciprocal agreements with its less aggressive competitors and it has an import quota of 25 pictures. This is far more than is allowed to any American company and makes it the biggest foreign distributor in the country. Indeed, through its control of production, exhibition and importation it might well be regarded as the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer-Burstyn of Japan. Here in the U.S. picture-makers and distributors frequently attribute much of their current distress to the devastating effects of the anti-trust decision which compelled them to sell their theatre holdings and rent their pictures individually instead of in groups. In Japan on the contrary the preservation of their prestige and popularity may require some similar restraints on the evils inherent in unrestricted monopoly.

Boston Catholics' Blast

Boston, Nov. 8.

The Pilot, official organ of the Archdiocese of Boston, took a whack at the giving of freedom of circulation in Britain to "Lady Chatterley's Lover" in an editorial, "The Lady's Chatter," stating:

"D. H. Lawrence could write an English sentence and had certain clear literary gifts; at the same time this little volume was an attempt to shock much more than a literary effort and it succeeded better in the first than in the second.

"Freedom of expression is one of man's most glorious liberties and it never should be restricted without good reason. To allow a book to be studied by serious students or read by mature adults is surely quite a different thing from permitting its promiscuous distribution among the young and the innocent."

The contretemps with her sundry leading men, her misfired marriages and her current role as Mrs. Arthur Miller make for a strange pattern but somehow it all adds up to the fact MM ain't no dumb blonde. Incidentally, her playwright-husband's career is curiously affected since their romance started and bloomed into the marital state. Zolotow is not unsubtle about this aspect also.

OBITUARIES

MACK SENNETT

Mack Sennett, 80, pioneer motion picture producer, whose forte was the zany comedy done in pantomime, the man who introduced to the world the Keystone Kops, died broke in Hollywood Nov. 5.

Story in Film section.

WARD BOND

Ward Bond, 57, motion picture nd television actor, died of a heart attack in Dallas Nov. 5, one day short of his scheduled appearance at the Dallas Cowboys-Los Angeles Rams football game.

Bond had a cardiac history, having been forced to leave the agon Train" tv series for a short period two years ago because of the condition. He resumed in the video airer and this along with a long career in theatrical productions made him a familiar figure to the public, both here and abroad.

Bond was a member of the Screen Actors Guild board and, in the field of both national and international politics, was a leader to th "right." He was a prominent member of the same cam with actor Joh Wayne, college football teammate U. of Southern Calif ia nd director John Ford. This was a lasting allegiance, for every Ford picture which had Wayne in it al-o had Bond.

Bond appeared in over 200 theatricals in all, from small parts featured roles. Apart from his acting talents he was known within the trade as an outspoken foe of Communism. It was at his home on the Coast that the American flag flew half last during Premier Krushchev's visit to Hollywood in 1959.

Bond's wife, Mary Lou, was with him in Dallas when he died.

DIMITRI MITROPOULOS

Dimitri Mitropoulos, 64, Greek-born, American-famed symphonic conductor, died Nov. 2 during a rehearsal of a concert orchestra at La Scala in Milan, Italy. He had suffered a serious heart attack year ago but had resumed a fairly full schedule of conducting after some months of hospitalization.

Originally intending to become concert pianist, he switched to conducting, coming to America in 1936. He conducted the Minneapolis Symphony for a decade before joining the New York Philharmonic Although widely respected a musician, Mitropoulos was sistently criticized as a "program-maker," having a distinct tendency select music only to his wn taste and to ignore the subscribers.

Upon leaving the conductorship of the Philharmonic, he continued there as a guest conductor and as a pit maestro at the Metropolitan Opera. His musical travels were extensive, including his native Greece. Some of his admirers were quick to advocate the idea of his being buried in Greece, though he became an American in 1946.

Mitropoulos was a lonely figure, with few personal friends. Never wed, he is not known to have any surviving relatives. Settlement of his estate may prove difficult, the law probably requiring a search-via-advertisement for heirs in Greece.

Meanwhile his appearances at the N. Y. Philharmonic in December were to have included conducting for the Soviet pianist, Sviatoslav Richter. He was also scheduled to handle four operas at the Met. Substitutes at both institutions still pend.

Remembered By His Many Friends

STEVE and EYDIE TOPS!

Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme are the most joyous supper club act New York has seen in many a season; they vibrate with talent and humor and almost constitute a musical comedy in themselves.

DOROTHY KILGALLEN, New York Journal-American

"This Could Be the Start of Something," a bright number with which Eydie Gorme & Steve Lawrence open their newly fashioned act is quite prophetic because it really is the start of something good and completely delightful.

They've come a long way as solo diskers and now that they've teamed up for a swing through the nitery circuit they're bound to go even farther.

Lots of credit to the slickness of the presentation belongs to Don Costa who brought in arrangements that are fresh and pointed to their vocal stylings.

VARIETY, Gros

EYDIE, STEVE CLICK AS COPA TEAM

Eydie Gorme and Steve Lawrence have youth and romance. Furthermore, they can sing. And they got that swing.

I joined the Copa customers in applauding them loudly and shouting: "One more time!"

JIM O'CONNOR (Gene Knight) New York Journal-American

Steve Lawrence and his B.W., Eydie Gorme, opened at the Copacabana with such warmth, charm and talent that Hollywood producer Joe Pasternak said to me, "They are Mr. and Mrs. Delight."

EARL WILSON, New York Post

Eydie Gorme and Steve Lawrence combined their great talents to offer an enthusiastic assembly a pleasurable evening they'll never forget. What a darling pair—and what a wonderful act they've put together! . . . scored one of the great trimuphs in night club history.

LOUIS SOBOL, New York Journal-American

STEVE, EYDIE TAKE OVER THE COPA

They'll need a trapdoor to get those kids off the Copa stage for the next three weeks. "Those kids" are Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme. The trapdoor scheme seems only logical, since the wall-creasing crowd was enthusiastically loath to let them depart: they wanted MORE.

JACK KLEIN, New York World-Telegram and Sun

Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme bring a crisp, clean feeling to the famous room, and leave the customers asking for more.

This young man has every qualification for stardom; he oozes stage presence, is a capable impressionist and a deft light comic. And his voice is round and rich and strong. In his easy approach to a song he sounds and acts like a non-alcoholic Dean Martin.

MARTIN BURDEN, New York Post

STEVE AND EYDIE A HIT IN COPA

The Copacabana needed stretchable walls to contain comfortably the crowds attending the opening of Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme. Captain tells us this is the most potent attraction since the Louis Prima-Keely Smith record date.

FRANK QUINN, New York Mirror

Never attended a nightspot opening as heart-warming as Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme's at the Copa. And their ovations were really deserved—for they're two of the great young entertainers of today.

BERT BACHARACH, New York Journal-American

STEVE AND EYDIE ARE GREAT

When Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme sing they do a great deal for themselves and their audiences and for the entertainment industry in general.

These two young stars of today may very well be the giants of tomorrow. They qualify for it.

Neither I nor the rest of the audience could have been more excited by them. I couldn't wait to get home to write about them.

BURT BOYAR, Long Island Daily Press

Two charming young people, Eydie Gorme and Steve Lawrence, are establishing themselves as major league nightclub performers, these nights, at the Copacabana. These young marrieds have just about everything going for them. Both sing very well, and their duets are a joy. What's more, they have poise, humor, taste and, that most priceless of assets, youth.

TIM TAYLOR, Cue

Israel Still Blacks-Out Talent Deemed Tainted With Nazi Collaboration

By JOSEPH LAPID

Tel Aviv, Nov. 15.

Visiting Netherlands Chamber Orchestra had to make a last minute change in its programme when Israelis refused to listen to work of Dutch composer Henk Badings who was charged in his country with collaboration with the Nazis.

Group is led by Jewish violinist Szymon Goldberg and was invited here to substitute for the Israeli Philharmonic, presently touring the States and Canada. The programme, which was sent in advance from Holland, included "Largo and Allegro" by Henk Badings, a living Dutch composer. Somebody here tipped the management that he was mentioned as a collaborator. "Trio for String Orchestra" by Lex van Delden, another Dutch composer, was substituted.

This not the first time that foreign artists bumped into trouble here because of Israeli vigilance toward ex-Nazis and people who have "collaborated."

"The Egg," an excellent comedy written by French author Felicien Marceau, was dropped out of Habima's repertory upon the disclosure he was not French but Belgian and that he was sentenced in his country to 10 years of hard labor for helping the Germans. This story was carried by the American press, when another play by Marceau,

Philly Orphans Court Working Overtime With Click Rock 'n' Roll Kids

Philadelphia, Nov. 15.

If it keeps up the Orphans Court here may have to set up a special rock 'n roll division to handle the financial affairs of local teenage ingers who come under jurisdiction.

In the recent months Judge Harold D. Saylor has resided over hearings for Frankie Avalon and Fabian and another hearing is skedded this week for Ernest Evans, better known as recording artist Chubby Checker.

Chubby's Parkway record hit, "The Twist," not only placed him at the forefront of the waxworks brigade but created a new dance craze. His guardian, Merton J. Matz, and attorney, David B. Zoob, told the court that the $150-a-week allotted the boy is not enough.

The figure was set by the court Aug. 31 to take care of Chubby's daily expenses. His kiting popularity in recent months, however, has led to booking offers in Australia and Hawaii, and the guardian is asking the court for permission to spend more of the singer's earnings as expenses to forward his career.

The Gas Works

Philadelphia, Nov. 15.

The Philadelphia Gas Works had purchased a customary courtesy ticket to the annual dinner (13) of the Philadelphia Press Assn. at the Ben Franklin Hotel.

Then it was learned that the newsmen had picked as "best reporter of the year" the Daily News' Phil Fine for his explosive series on irregularities in the operations of the gas company. The Gas Works cancelled its single reservation.

ANTA Purchases 'Conquering Hero' For B'way Stand

The financially strapped American National Theatre & Academy is playing longshot to get the funds for its various projects aimed at stimulating national interest and activity in legit. The non-profit organization has purchased the Robert Whitehead-Roger L. Stevens production of "The Conquering Hero" for just the Broadway engagement at the ANTA Theatre, N. Y.

EARS TUNED TO D.C. CURRENTS

By LES CARPENTER

Washington, Nov. 15.

Like every other segment of American business, the entertainment industry watched television's most dramatic all-night show—the closest election of the century—and now ponders what the new Kennedy Administration will do about countless problems which continue to mount for all phases of the industry in Washington.

President-elect John F. Kennedy is a fancier of the arts. He is a lover of the theatre and good music, and his family has long had motion picture theatre interests as well as other investments in the entertainment industry. Peter Lawford is his brother-in-law.

Outside these personal matters, which could easily lead to sympathetic White House consideration of problems of the industry generally, these factors seem to emerge:

—Any new Administration, particularly when it represents a change in political party control in the executive branch of the Government, is marked in its first year with a "reform" atmosphere. It should be more so in 1961 because Kennedy, in addition, is the youngest (43) man ever elected to the Presidency, and he has already indicated he will be surrounded in the White House by other young men.

—Networks, of course, are hoping that this new tone in Washington won't lead to enactment of the Harris Bill requiring the licensing of webs by the Federal Communications Commission. Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark.) has an-

He is 52-year-old Edward V. Long, of Bowling Green, Mo., who was elected last week to fill the remaining two years of the unexpired term of the late Missouri Sen. Thomas C. Henning Jr.

Long, president of the Long Theatre Co. of Bowling Green, operates theatres in the St. Louis area. A former Democratic Lieutenant Governor of Missouri, he was oppointed last summer to fill the vacancy created by Sen. Hennings' death. He won the seat handily in last week's election.

Long has been a member of Theatre Owners of America for many years and has been active in the Missouri-Illinois Theatre Owners Assn., a TOA affiliate.

AFTRA-Networks Race Deadline; Many Contract Issues Unresolved

The Royal Pipeline

Not generally known (although the NBC top command knows it) is the fact that the network's John F. Royal, perhaps more so than anyone in broadcasting, has a built-in pipeline into the White House stemming from a friendship with the Kennedy family that goes back many years.

It was Royal who mentored the President-Elect through his radio-tv p's and q's when he initially embarked on a political career. But even predating that by many years was Royal's close association with papa Joe Kennedy in the days when the latter, an oldtime showman, headed up the Keith-Albee empire.

Network and agency negotiators and those for the American Federation of Television & Radio Artists and the Screen Actors Guild were struggling well into yesterday (Tuesday) evening for solutions to the multifold problems preventing an agreement on a new two-year contract. Major issue still seemed hinged on the rates for tv tape and tv film commercial rerun fees, although when the negotiators broke briefly early last night, they still had most of several dozen categories to discuss.

Both union and management officials (latter also including members of the Film Producers Assn., which represents tv film commercial makers) agreed late yesterday that a decision most probably couldn't be reached before the Nov. 15 midnight deadline, when the old AFTRA two-year pact ended. AFTRA and SAG negotiators hours before had gotten the last necessary okay from the rank-and-file to pull a strike if they felt it was necessary to winning ground.

However, observers in the room where the large body of negotiators held their meetings at CBS' 485 Madison Avenue headquarters in New York felt that the current situation might prove to be a repetition of the 1958 contract talks, which progressed without a strike by AFTRA for three-and-a-half weeks beyond the contract expiration.

In its 24 years, AFTRA has never

Acts, Agents Tap B.O. Bonanza In College 1-Niters

The new style one-nighters have been a big item for many kinds of acts. Standard equipment on these jaunts seems to be a set of ballads, guitar and/or banjo and audiences comprising mostly collegians. The collegiate route is probably one of the most profitable aspects of show biz for lotsa talent. These campus capers command some of the highest coin on the one-nighter prospectus, and have become the newest version of the band hegiras.

The consensus among agency men is that the modern collegian no longer dances with his former fervor, except possibly at the class formal functions. Today's scholar is a little more heady and intel-

'EISENHOWER YEARS' FOR 'PROJECT 20'

NBC-TV's "Project 20" is preparing a stanza by Don Hyatt called "The Eisenhower Years—Tribute to a Patriot." It'll be aired sometime around the Jan. 20 inauguration of John F. Kennedy as new President.

Besides this and his previously designated chores (several nighttime hours), Hyatt's special projects unit is working on two new daytime series of specials—"Seven Ages of Man" and "Tabus in Our Society," both "dramatic documentaries." With Hyatt on those two projects will be daytime program chief Bob Aaron and specials boss Dick Linkroum.

N.Y. Nitery Biz Finding Lotsa Jack Around At Start of Kennedy Era

Gotham nitery business continues bullish, to the pleasant surprise of the bonifaces who also make note that the upbeat wasn't stemmed by the Kennedy victory. It parallels last week's Wall Street rise presumably because the market has "digested" (1) the GOP defeat, and (2) the anticipated upping of defense spending.

Whether inflationary fears figure in the nitery spending, or whether it's the seasonal "going-out" habit being renewed, along with the fall-winter theatre season, biz is good.

Paradoxically, election night was the worst in memory. It was so poor in all key and pop spots that veteran bonifaces started to recall that, in the pre-Univac era of election returns, whether a local national poll, that night was the "biggest," including New Year's. This past week saw a phenomenon born (1) of the acute interest in the Kennedy-Nixon outcome and (2) the electronic era. Latter probably had more to do with it than anything. Many houseparties were planned.

The hearing was marked by several clashes between attorney Maxwell T. Cohen and Police Commissioner Kennedy. Cohen also made the charge that Frank Sinatra had appeared at the Copacabana about 10 years ago without a card Kennedy said he would look into that and, if true the Copa faces revocation or suspension of its license since

Tom Waller's Political Baptism on Long Island For Robert D. L. Gardiner

A former Manhattan film industry figure, Tom Waller, spent the last six months as political strategist and copywriter in Suffolk County on Long Island. He was employed by Robert David Lion Gardiner, who owns 5,000 acres in that area and is scion of the island's oldest family. What made Gardiner's campaign sensational was his switch from Republican to Democrat and the consequent blackout of the G.O.P. publications and many of Gardiner's society chums.

In order to get publicity Waller had to go into the Manhattan dailies and on the Long Island radio stations. To assist on the latter Norman Brokenshire was hired to read radio text written by Waller, averaging 14 minutes daily on seven stations, WPAC and WALK of Patchogue, WRIV, Riverhead, WGSM, Huntington, WBIC, Bay Shore and WGLI and WBAB in Babylon.

Against the background of prejudice and with Suffolk a cinch for the G.O.P., Waller thinks Long Island radio can take a big bow that Gardiner polled 117,300 votes to Elisha Barrett, his Republican opponent's 145,000. Waller has been with Paramount and United Artists, among others.

'Too Many American Foundations Torture Rather Than Help'—Levine

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Clandestine Cinema

London, Nov. 15.

A new film house has opened in London. Headed by Tony Tenser, former publicity chief of Miracle Films, Soho's Compton Cinema is a private club which will specialize in sexy, offbeat pix that are unlikely to get the censor's nod for general exhibition.

Opening film is NTA's Private Property," written and directed by Leslie Stevens. It stars Kate Manx and concerns the planned seduction of a married woman by a brace of teenage hoods.

Mex Actress' Novel Idea That Reporters Pay Her Stops All Interviews

Mexico City, Nov. 15.

Christiane Martell, a "Miss Universe" beauty queen of some years back, who has carved a career for herself in Mexican motion pictures, has issued a press interview edict which has the local film press guffawing.

From now on an interview with Miss Martell will cost 1,120 Mex pesos ($140 U.S.). The actress' press aide, Jorge Madrid Campos, has given out the news that there are to be no free interviews.

At first the press here thought it was some sort of a joke. But assured that it is in earnest, la Martell is most shunned player, and when the "interview tariff" is lifted, as seems inevitable, local press has already sotto-voced it will make no difference—Miss Martell is not likely to get many reporters breaking down any doors.

Top London Busking Trio in Split-Up

London, Nov. 15.

The Happy Wanderers, crazy trio of street performers who have long been one of the sights of the West End, have split up. The trio visited America at the invitation of Alexander H. Cohen a year ago and demonstrated the art of busking in Shubert Alley, when "Drop of Hat" opened at the Golden.

Now there are two similar teams. Two of the founders, Ronnie Ross and accordionist Mrs. Mickie Glover, are working together. Nearby other founder, Bert Hollis, has brought in his broth Harry, and an accordionist, as rival attraction.

For the two acts it represents split profits, for the public two lots of laughter, and for the police who, though often turning a blind eye, officially has to keep the buskers moving, a double headache. But that's show biz.

Marks Levine, founder and retired head of National Concerts, is one those taking a strongly tical view "contests," s a way of life in America's longhair music. Apart from his doubt that any small jury should decide who is or not ready for a career on the concert platform, he feels that it is unfair to all losers. Putting a great number of sensitive pianists through the agony of a competition as with this year's Leveritt Prize nly to anti-climax with a jury decision to give no award at all makes a mockery of the whole thing.

Levine's own evaluation of Leveritt winners through the years that only three really have "nce managed durable "areers" of five years or more. He notes the well-known fact that Van Cliburn was unsellable until Moscow discovered him. Winning the Leveritt Prize was substantially a cipher to Cliburn, though his Russian vogue made him for big fees in America.

What makes far more sense to Levine is the policy adopted by the foundation operating in the name of the late Walter Naumberg, N. Y. music buff.

"They really do something for the winner. First the prize itself is the largest, $5,000 cash. But more important than that the foundation guarantees the winner a later New York recital nd they the fees and commissions to the Herbert Barrett Management office to assure the winner a number of key symphonic bookings."

Naumberg Foundation "contest" is, however, held only every other year, for strings, then for piano, alternately. Joseph Silverstein first violinist with the Boston Symphony, was the first to cop, at the age 28. Says Levine, "This is rize already worthwhile, unlike so many others. Silverstei will solo next year with the Indianapolis Symphony, and others, through Barrett's booking efforts, which the foundation pays for."

Cornel Wilde's Lancelot Saga Via Yugoslavia; Seeks Yank Financing

Hollywood, Nov. 15.

While Lerner and Loewe are saying it with songs on the Broadway stage via "Camelot," Cornel Wilde and wife Jean Wallace will star sans music on the screen in "Lancelot and Guinevere." Wilde, recently returned from an extended film safari in Europe, has bought screen rights to the Knights of the Round Table saga written by the late Richard Schayer. Wilde reports he has a coproduction arrangement with Dubrava Film of Yugoslavia and now is negotiating a distribution deal with two major American companies.

Film is aimed for a spring start. Wilde figures it can be shot as a spectacle in color and brought in for around $2,000,000, because the Yugoslav partner will be able to obtain services of hundreds of cavalry soldiers and horses at a fraction of the price the cost otherwise would be.

Wilde now is in the market for a director, and said he would like to get England's Jack Hawkins or Peter Finch to appear as King Arthur.

Wilde said Schayer gave him the only typed copy of "Lancelot and Guinevere" about three years ago; that when he determined to buy it last summer he could find no trace of the author's estate. Actor-producer said he finally obtained name of Schayer's attorney through the Writers Guild of America, West, and only recently completed the purchase.

Mexico's Academy Again Stalled

Mexico City, Nov. 15.

With the 1960 year's-end but six weeks off, the word is that the long deferred Ariel Awards (similar to Hollywood's Oscars) have again been put off. Industry no longer finds anything funny in the constant talk of revival of the Mexican Academy of Film Arts and Sciences, the awardi of prizes, and then the postponements.

Now Raul de Anda, president of the Mexican ssn. of Film Producers, and champion for reconstruction of the Mexican Academy, admitted that plans have been suspended again. This time uncertainties of the new Film Law, which also reportedly has provisions for a Film Institute to take over Acad- duties, has been direct cause of dropping of Academy reestablishment plans.

MILTON MORITZ TELLS 'EM

American Int'l Showmanship Detailed to Allied

Chicago, Nov. 15.

American-International Pictures dispatched ad-pub topper Milton Moritz to last week's National Allied conclave here for a patent defense of the company's exploitation policies against its critics.

It meant a pointed assertion that final decision on product theme and content is up to the producer, but further justified in the AIP view because there no longer are major studios but only "major pictures." He impressed upon the assemblage in this vein that it's the progressive industryite who sees it as an "entertainment" and not a "motion picture" business. The former concept, he suggested, implies constant alertness to "changing demands of audiences."

The line of demarcation drawn by Moritz permits exhibs to "suggest or recommend, but the final decision lies in th hands of the ment in the NIA's John C. Klein producing company. . . . Our films are produced and merchandised to cover special markets, nd these markets are large."

Exec also used the occasion (AIP's annual luncheon for the Alliedites) to remind parley that his company has been, and is, committed to spending 25% of its gross income on promo and advertising—"and most of it at the local level.

They're on the prowl for product in the form of either co-production deals or the acquisition of already-completed pictures.

Roger Lewis' Oscar Role

Roger H. Lewis, ad-pub headman at United Artists, has been designated a key figure in the promotion of the next Academy Awards television program.

He heads a film company ad-pub committee which will work in liaison with a Coast group which has yet to be named. Objective: Ballying the Oscar tv'er next April.

FILMS' LOWDOWN ON HI SOCIETY

Why is it that high society—the elegant world of the very rich, the glamorous and the politically powerful—has in recent years been so seldom utilized by U. S. filmmakers as the background for serious, socially-probing motion pictures?

Question arose last week in course of an interview with European producers' representative, Marshall Schacker. Latter had just returned to his New York office after a month's tour of major production centers abroad. It was Schacker's idea that European filmmakers, particularly those in Italy, who won their early postwar reputations with neorealist films about the poor and downtrodden trying to get along in worlds they never made, are now at the start of a new wave of pix focusing on how the lucky (and lecherous) other half live.

Rome's Classy Bums

Major item in this ne wave, he said, is Federico Fellini's current b.o. smash, "La Dolce Vita," a jaundiced view of the manners and mores of Rome's international cafe society. Upcoming, he reported, are three more "serious" Italian films (each of which Schacker will be trying to sell distribs this side) which use this same upper-crust world of money and social position as th ir milieu. Two of these films, "Dolci Inganni" (Sweet Deceptions) and "La Novice" (The Novice) are the works of director Alberto Lattuada, while the third, "Un Amore a Roma" (A Love in Rome) is by Dino Risi.

They Can Dream!

According to Schacker, these films not only reflect a certain amount of social criticism, but they also inevitably reflect a desire on the part of the Italian public for stories about rich and beautiful people in handsome, plush surroundings. Though the pix have their serious side, they also may be serving the same kind of escapist function which Hollywood's lushly mounted romances served in the 1930s, 1940s and even up to the present day.

Principal difference between the domestic and European "glamor" films, says Schacker, seems to be that the Hollywood brand is generally escapist in point of view as well as locale, while the foreign filmmakers are generally concerned with showing up the frailties and foibles of the debutramp milieu. Thus, while a French producer comes up with something like the controversial "Liaisons Dangereux," and a German producer with "Rosemary," both dealing with pretty despicable types in sleek settings, Hollywood comes forth with a magnificently plush soap operas like "Imitation of Life" or "Portrait in Black."

Why the difference?

No Creme de la Creme

One reason put forth is that the U. S. really doesn't have anything comparable to the upper upper-crust which has long dominated the social life in the European capitals. The U. S. is strictly middle class and the most serious American film dramas have all been (some by design and some by indirection) commentaries on middle class manners and morals — "The Apartment," "Butterfield 8," "Elmer Gantry," "The Dark at the Top of the Stairs," "From The Terrace," to name a few.

Another reason may be that U.S. filmmakers, remembering the charges of Commie influence levelled at Hollywood not so long ago, have been somewhat wary of turning out product which might be construed as socially critical.

Thus, while Hollywood has seriously examined Big Business in such films as "Executive Suite," "Patterns" and "Power and The Prize," the examinations have been principally concerned with personal relationships and the sometimes corroding effect of the lust for power, rather than with the kind of blanket condemnations of The System which moti-

Owes Warners Money, But Now Glad; Carroll Baker on Career Management

Tokyo, Nov. 8.

Interviewed recently in Tokyo, Carroll Baker declared that she hand-picked every one of her roles. Her independence, after misunderstandings over "Baby Doll," led to a lengthy suspension from Warners and a label in some industry circles as being "difficult." This, coupled with time out for bearing two children, has resulted in Miss Baker making only six pictures in a career spanning five years.

Although it had a mixed effect on her professional progress, she has no regrets over having made "Baby Doll" and over it having come very early in her career. Evaluating her participation as the thumb-sucking, adolescent, sex-teaser in the controversial Tennessee Willams' drama, she offered, "Of course it was a very, very strong characterization. I think that until the time I do a film with an equally-strong character, I will be remembered for 'Baby Doll.'

"I feel very fortunate in that as a young actress I was able to do a part that is considered memorable. You can work for years and years and never get a memorable part," she submitted.

"One of my biggest problems with Warners was their misunderstanding of 'Baby Doll.' I didn't think it was just a lewd, sexy role."

Upshot was that there was no meeting of the minds on her casting. "I thought it much better not to work," Miss Baker said. "That, of course, stopped my outside films as well."

Miss Baker explained that she originally signed a seven-year contract with Warners because that studio offered the lure of breaking into pictures under George Stevens in "Giant" after she had film offers from the Broadway impression

Lee Kamern of Metro Made Dear Films Mgr. In Seckler's Old Post

Rome, Nov. 15.

Ned S. Seckler, general manager for Dear Films of Rome, has resigned his post and will be succeeded by Lee Kamern, who has held the same position in Metro's Italian office for the last eight years. Dear topper Robert Haggiag noted his company's regret at Seckler's departure, adding that Seckler must return to the U.S. immediately for personal reasons, thus anticipating his decision.

Kamern has been with Metro for the last 31 years, starting as an usher under Joe Vogel and eventually becoming the youngest theatre manager on Broadway in handling the Astor in pre-war days. After a wartime stint in the Marine Corps, for which he was twice decorated, and from which he emerged with the rank of captain, Kamern joined Metro's foreign department. He rose to general manager of India, Pakistan, Burma and Ceylon areas. In 1952, he was named general manager for Italy.

Haggiag expressed his pleasure at Kamern's nomination by saying that "we are exiremely happy to have Kamern with us and are positive that the confidence he has in our company and our product will be shared by all in the industry."

"With the addition of Kamern to our staff," the Dear Film topper continued, "I feel that I can devote myself more fully to the production of Italian films, and I already have several projects in mind in addition, of course, to the 'El Cid'."

Kamern's successor in the Metro spot here will be Charles Rosmarin, as recently announced. Kamern is expected to take over his new Dear role Dec. 1.

GRANT RADNITZ HIS WAY OUT

He Found Adler Policy Okay Shifted at 20th

Hollywood, Nov. 15.

Robert Radnitz requested and has been granted release from his five-year producer-writer contract with 20th-Fox on the grounds that studio no longer cleaves to the type of picture for which he was signed by the late Buddy Adler.

In his wire to prexy Spyros Skouras, Radnitz pointed out there was an agreement on the kind and scope of ix that he would produce, in his dealings with the late production chief. Now, however, he added:

"I find that the kind of films I believe in, the subject matter I want to make, and the projects that interest me, no longer coincide with the present thinking at the studio."

Radnitz produced "A Dog of Flanders" for 20th and followed with "Misty," on which he is now wrapping up post-production work. He also has been planning "The Young and the Beautiful," "The Dead Sea Scrolls" and an untitled children's film.

Omat to Allied: Lots Pix Coming

Chicago, Nov. 15.

Omat Corp., indie film company which had considerable difficulties with production of "Brotherhood of Evil" in Hollywood late last year and in early 1960, has now embarked on a major program of production and distribution involving 12 to 20 features per year. Ambitious plan was revealed here at the Allied States Assn. convention by company execs Howard J. Beck and A. W. Schwalberg.

Company already has acquired 14 features for release and currently is negotiating for more product. One of the pix is "Never Take Candy from a Stranger," British film which Columbia was to have released but was forced to drop when it was denied an MPAA production code seal. Col appealed the production code nix, but lost. Another film Omat has acquired is Federico Fellini's "La Dolce Vita," Italian film widely heralded in Europe which won this year's Cannes Film Festival grand prize. Other Omat releases will be "Gina,"

LEGION'S LATEST 'B's'

'Butterfield', 'G.I.', 'Goddess' and 'Suzie Wong' Deplored

National Legion of Decency is stacking up the "B" ratings anew, with four features this week classified as morally objectionable in part for all.

So designated by the Catholic reviewing organization are: Metro's "Butterfield 8," offensive because of boldly suggestive treatment in costuming, dialog and situations; Paramount's "G.I. Blues," is "highly objectionable in its theme and treatment"; 20th-Fox's "Goddess of Love," frowned upon because of "suggestive costuming and situations," and Par's "World of Suzie Wong," morally unacceptable because of the brothel atmosphere.

Love 'Facts', But Hate 'Liars' More: or, What Johnston Learned About Pix Biz

By GENE ARNEEL

(1) Council of Motion Picture Organizations is in process of readying a testimonial for Eric Johnston on occasion of his 15th anniversary as president of the Motion Picture Assn. of America.

(2) At the same time Albert Sindlinger, an independent researcher on-and-off employed by COMPO, reports latest results of his continuing analyses on theatre attendance. This is a separate story, which says simply that October admissions were 5% over admissions of October, 1959.

On the surface, the above two separate news situations would appear unrelated. But on careful analysis there's a provocative conclusion to be drawn.

Johnston, upon taking offic nearly 15 years ago, said he was appalled with the lack of information which the industry has about itself and he was hopeful that educational processes would develop. Indeed, what could be more informative that the boxoffice trends iff co-relation to the pictures in release.

Outside Source

And now, 15 years later, it remains for Sindlinger to tell the public (and the industry itself) how things are going. Perhaps this is traceable to the fact that film industry lawyers are morbidly cautious about disclosures on the state of their own companies' respective boxoffice. These attorneys, who frequently call policy turns, are a worrying, conservative group by their very Blackstonian nature.

There are instances where a sales manager of one company will tell his counterpart of a rival outfit how a certain production is faring in terms of ticket sales. And in almost as many instances the party on the receiving end of this intelligence will regard it with so many grains of salt. (Salt can mean padding.)

Any criticism of Johnston is weakened for the reason that the companies simply are not cooperating in what he had hoped would be a meaningful research program, one which might benefit all.

Cautious Lawyers

The legalistic execs are fearful of antitrust conspiracy and the sales officials just don't want the word spread around that a given picture has failed to achieve blockbuster status.

The big hit and the big flot are discernible almost immediately. But there's no real telling as to how the in-betweeners made out.

Carrying the thought further, there obviously can be no industry-held knowledge anent why, say, a promising property failed to make the grade. Knowledge of this sort, which could be gotten by responsible intra-trade cooperation, would post valuable guideposts for the entire industry, from financier, to producer, to distributor and to exhibitor.

VARIETY has queried numerous sales managers about this deficit in statistical know-about. They'd like to have an inter-change of accurate figures, they say. They also want to know who's telling the truth, who isn't, and perhaps, a couple add, the independent producers who are being so romanced of late just don't want known the b.o. tally on their latest epics.

Warm October Not Ailing

[THEATRE ATTENDANCE UP 5%]

Total film theatre attendance in October was 5% better than the same month last year, due largely to warm weather and resultant improvement at the drive-ins, according to Sindlinger & Co. It marked the first time since last April that an increase was shown over a comparable month in 1959.

Market analyst said attendance at four-wall theatres was dow 7.1% in October, whereas the ozoners were up 13.2%.

Drive-in increase was 64.1% in the east, 23.5% in the south and 32.4% in the west, and down 27.7% in the midwest.

Attendance at four-wall theatres was up only in the south (plus 2.8%).

Sindlinger states the findings are drawn from daily surveys conducted by 376 interviewers situated in 287 United States counties.

'Diversification' Prowl; B. Gerald Cantor Opens Trip in Copenhagen

Hollywood, Nov. 15.

Further diversification of interests for National Theatres & Television will be explored in Europe by B. Gerald Cantor, company prexy, during his current trek to key Continental cities. Number of propects have been presented to Cantor, who left Sunday for Copenhagen to tee off a jaunt through Europe.

Cantor will be joined in Danish capital by Samuel P. Norton, prexy of Cinemiracle Pictures Corp., NT&T subsid, and during trip he'll also be joined by Russell McCullough, Cinemiracle director of engineering, and film editor Dan Finerty. Cantor will meet with producers and distributors also in London, Paris, Berlin, Munich, Rome and Zurich.

ROTHMAN, ROSENFIELD AS COLUMBIA V.P.'S

Mo Rothman, head of Columbia International, and Jonas Rosenfield Jr., ad-pub exec, have been elected vicepresidents of the parent Col corporation. It was indicated earlier that the two were in line for the epaulets; the board formally acted this past week.

Rothman is a newcomer to Col, having joined the company last March in a switch from United Artists. Rosenfield has been an ad-pub exec the past five years.

Board also named Bernard E. Zeeman and Seymour Malamed to assistant treasurer posts. Zeeman is a 25-year Col vet. Malamed has been with Col since 1946.

Mort Hock has resigned as account executive with the Blaine Thompson agency to become assistant ad manager of Paramount. He succeeds the late Kenneth Aneser.

Hock had been particularly active in the legit field, having directed the New York and out-of-town ad campaigns for "Gypsy," "Take Me Along" and "Becket." Previously he was account exec for Warners.

Prizes Ought Not Hypo Yen to See Pix Held Back—Allied to Acad

Chicago, Nov. 15.

Articulating a marked sentiment both within and without the industry, Allied States exhibs resolved here last week to petition the Motion Picture Academy to put hard-ticket entries into separate Oscar categories.

Allied conclave termed it an "injustice for millions of movie fans" to stimulate a desire for an attraction through awards, the deny them the chance of seeing it for possibly months to come because they don't live near urbans playing roadshows.

As the theatreowners figure it, the advanced-pricers have "unfairly monopolized" Oscars in recent years (e.g., "Around World," "Gigi," "Ben-Hur"), thereby "eliminating other widely known and extremely popular attractions" from Oscar laurels.

Japan Rentals 40% Remittal

Japanese government has increased current monthly remittance rate for U. S. film earnings by 33⅓%, so that henceforth U. S. companies will be able to remit 40% of their gross film rentals instead of 30%, Eric Johnston, Motion Picture Export Assn. prexy, announced last week.

In addition, the Japanese government has made two other important concessions to MPEA:

(1) The ceiling on prints, previously limited to 14 imported prints per subject or 18 per subject if made in Japan, has been raised to 25 prints, "insuring an adequate supply" of prints for the Japanese market.

(2) The exhibition period for all imported films in Japan has been extended from five to sev

Johnson, paying tribute to MPEA veep for the Far East, Irving Maas, who negotiated the liberalization of the film agreement, also reported that within that last two weeks Maas had negotiated a remittance deal amounting to nearly $3,000,000 from blocked Japanese accounts.

From current discussions now going on, prexy continued, it appears likely that the "small, rigid import quota for U. S. films," which has been in effect in Japan for many years, will be relaxed for the new film year starting in April, 1961.

RONALD SHINER KEEPS SCRIPT SALE PROFIT

London, Nov. 15.

In High Court decision here last week, Mr. Justice Danckwerts upheld an appeal by actor Ronald Shiner against a tax ruling that a $6,440 profit from the sale of film rights in the novel "Aunt Clara" was liable to income tax.

The Commissioners of Inland Revenue had held that the gain rose out of Shiner's profession as an actor and was therefore subject to tax. Mr. Justice Danckwerts, allowing costs and all, reckoned that it wasn't part of Shiner's profession to dispose of copyright and that the sale of his right in "Aunt Clara" was quite distinct from his remuneration as an actor. Shiner was, in fact, realizing an investment.

It was revealed that Shiner bought the picture rights in the book for $4,760, with Margaret Rutherford in mind for the key role, intending to treat the acquisition as an investment so that the income might offset any loss of earnings he suffered as an actor. Eventually he had to sell his rights to Colin Lesslie Productions for $11,200. He starred in the pic at $2,800 a week salary, with a guarantee of 10 weeks and a share in the prof

Decency Rap Puts 'Magdalena' Into Other Channels

"Magdalena," German import acquired several months ago by Magna Pictures as its first outside pic, has been turned over by Magna to the Buh wk Co. following Legion of Decency's condemnation of the film.

Legion gave the film a C last week because of its "low moral tone" and "blatant violation of decency in costuming, dialog and situation."

Magna still will get a portion of any profits which the film might make, though states rights who are handling the pic in local territories will answer to Buhawk. A spokesman for Magna Monday (7) said he did not know where Buhawk has its headquarters or who its officers are, other than none of Magna's top execs is associated with Buhawk.

Situation between Magna and Buhawk seems to be similar to that between United Artists and Lopert or between Columbia and Kingsley International, with Lopert and Kingsley often handling product which the majors, for one reason or another, do not want their names to be associated with.

Golter, who had been with the studio for 21 years, left in 1957 to join Metro's labor relations department but rejoined U earlier this year, assuming post previously held by Tony Frederick.

Universal which regards itself as a "major independent," resigned from the AMPP and, according to Golter, is not maintaining a liaison with that organization in its current negotiations with the craft after the unions settle with the other majors. It's a departure from pattern set during the writers and actors negotiations when, although it was in resignment from AMPP, the studio bargained simultaneously.

Also, during the negotiations this spring, UI and MCA's Revue Productions jointly negotiated with the unions but, with division more clearly defined between the tw companies' facilities now than was true then, UI will be bargaining separately.

Sober Mood In Crafts' Dicker With Producers

Hollywood, Nov. 15.

The six basic crafts unions have agreed on the sequence in which they'll take their purely local demands to the Assn. of Motion Picture Producers and the Alliance of Television Film Producers.

First two, Laborers Local 724 of the International Hod Carriers, and Drivers Local 399, Teamsters, have already had sessions with producers' rep Charles Boren and three others—Janitors Local 278, Building Service Employes; Culinary workers Local, Hotel and Restaurant Employes; Electricians Local 40, IBEW—will be sandwiched in between sessions of the 22 IATSE locals.

Plasterers Local 755, Plasterers and Cement Finishers, is presenting no specifically local demands which is also the case with some of the IA locals, which, however, are submitting letters asserting that they demand a "most favored nation" treatment in any case where another local acquires a benefit which could also benefit them.

It appears that the local negotiations are being handled with dispatch and that all attention is focussed on the early tackling of the

OR, SO WHAT'S NEW WITH USSR?

By VINCENT CANBY

How stands the score between Russia and the United States as to film exchanges? There is a tendency of American film executives to reason that, given the respective exhibition problems in the two lands, the USSR has gotten far more mileage out of the Yank features, than has American exhibition from the imports. It is to be remembered that the films were "forced" upon the U.S. film industry, not freely negotiated, and that in some American communities individual theatre's advertised to the public—"blame the State Department, not us."

Significantly, or call it ironically, the most successful Russian film now in U. S. release was one bought privately outside the State Dept. deal.

This is Valiant Films' "The Sword and The Dragon," a spectacularly filmed adventure pic which was acquired by Valiant from Artkino, official importer of Soviet product. The exploitation pic has done good to great in all its dates so far, and looks to get a wide playoff.

Six Making Rounds

Six of the seven Russian films acquired by the U. S. majors under the culture pact are now in release: United Artists' "And Quiet Flows The Don," Warners' "The Cranes Are Flying," Columbia's "Swan Lake," Universal's "Othello," Paramount's "Circus Stars" and 20th-Fox's "The Idiot." Still awaiting release is Metro's "Don Quixote."

Although Par isn't releasing any rental figures, "Circus Stars" has already played a comparatively whopping total of 4,907 dates and seems sure of turning a profit. For its circuit break in New York, and in some other parts of the country, film was on a doubled bill topped by Par's "Rat Race."

The next two most successful films in the group have been the all-ballet (Bolshoi) "Swan Lake" and "The Cranes Are Flying," the latter having received the best reception from the lay critics. "Swan Lake" has gotten 110 dates and a rental of approximately $90,000, while "Cranes" has done about the same business on 104 dates. Neither film is likely to get circuit booking. Considering fact that there are approximately 500 houses in the U. S. which play art product on a regular basis, the number of bookings on these two pix is not particularly impressive.

Even less impressive, however, have been the pickings for "Othello" and "The Idiot." The former, though praised for its visual qualities, suffered from being dubbed with the original Shakesperian text without much though for synchronization. "Othello" has taken in about $2,200 on eight dates. "Idiot" also has played eight dates for approximately the same returns.

Inquiries at the Metro home office as to the reasons behind the delay in the "Don Quixote" release have so far elicited no response.

Considering that the U. S. companies had to pay between $60,000 and $67,000 for each pic and then shell out for prints, advertising and publicity, only "Circus Stars" is expected to wind up in the black. The burden on the companies will be eased to a certain extent by fact that all returns from distribution of the seven films will be pooled and then equally divided by the companies.

These films haven't finished playing off but chances that any one of them will strike it big at this point seems remote. The U. S. distribs, of course, got a rather bad break in the publicity department as far as timing of the releases is concerned. Shortly after the first of the Red films went into release, the Cold War worsened until the point of the U-2 incident in the late spring, at which time there were strong feelings in some parts of the country that the show-

Good hot boxoffice looms for this screen translation. But gay life of prostitution may draw civic protests.

Hollywood, Nov. 7.

Paramount release of Ray Stark production. Stars William Holden, Nancy Kwan, Sylvia Syms, Michael Wilding; with Jacqui Chan, Laurence Naismith. Directed by Richard Quine. Screenplay, John Patrick, adapted from novel by Richard Mason and play by Paul Osborn; camera, Geoffrey Unsworth; editor, Bert Bates; art director, John Box; music, George Duning; sound, Roy Baker; assistant director, Gus Agosti. Reviewed at the studio, Nov. 7, '60. Running time, 130 MINS.

Robert Lomax	William Holden
Suzie Wong	Nancy Kwan
Kay	Sylvia Syms
Ben	Michael Wilding
Gwennie	Jacqui Chan
O'Neill	Laurence Naismith

The advantage of on-the-spot geography does a great deal for the screen version of "The World of Suzie Wong." The ultra-picturesque environment of teeming Hong Kong brings a note of ethnic charm to the Ray Stark production, and amounts to a major improvement over the legit translation of Richard Mason's novel. The cause is further aided by the intimacy of film and the advanced maturity of the leading man. Against which assets the basic story being told remains simply mild diversion, and nothing more. The shortcomings of the original work, which led to the shortcomings of the play, have carried over to the picture, and in a few instances have been compounded.

Commercially, the Paramount release appears to be in good shape. First off, there is the pre-sold audience familiar with Mason's tome. Secondly, there is that legion of femme fans of William Holden, who hasn't exactly suffered from overexposure lately. Additionally, there is the publicity surrounding the leading lady, Nancy Kwan, who stepped into the role under unusual circumstances and has since received no minor national buildup. Finally, there is the picture itself, a compelling and exploitable east-meets-west love story. Boxoffice success seems assured.

The touchy subject of sex will be a key factor in the film's reception. Its frank discussions and examinations of matters sexual, acceptable in its book and play form, are a ticklish business in its transfer to the screen, where a wider variety of ages, outlooks and temperaments are to be exposed to it. For moppets, it is unsavory fare. Unsuspecting mothers who bring their children to the theatre are likely to regret it. For teenagers, particularly the younger ones, it will be an uncomfortable experience and may plant some strange, wild ideas in more impressionable youthful minds. In treating prostitution as a rather delightful "profession" (almost a milk-and-honey world), it conceivably could influence some femme youngsters to consider the "merits" of the occupation. After all, the bar-girls of the film seem to be having a fairly agreeably time at their trade. Boxoffice is going to reflect the moral stance of the filmgoing public. There is likely to be some controversy stirred up, and the result will be a stimulus to adults and a caution to parents.

"Suzie Wong" is the story of an artist (Holden) who has come to Hong Kong to devote one year to "learning something about painting and something about myself." Before long, he is also learning a great deal about Suzie (Miss Kwan), a kind of titular leader of a band of lovable, warmhearted prostitutes (are there any other kinds?). After resisting temptations of the flesh and giving her the brush for an admirable period, Holden eventually succumbs to the yen. Complications ensue when it develops Miss Kwan has a child, but harmony once again prevails and east-west relations are cemented following a rather spectacular rainstorm during which the child perishes and Hong Kong seems to be coming apart at the seams.

Scenarist John Patrick's attempt to enhance the romance by layi in some additional social significance is, for the most part, abortive. His little glimpses into western prejudice do not quite ring true with three-dimensional insight. But the love story makes much more sense with the substitution of the mature Holden for the younger hero of the play. It is far more understandable that an older man would fall deeply in love with the little Oriental bargirl, and that she would return that affection.

That and the scenery are the major improvements. On the decidedly negative side of Patrick's adaptation are three passages in which realism is virtually abandoned for theatrical effect. These are scenes in which (1) Miss Kwan, beaten up by a sailor, proudly displays her bloody lip to the girls as a token of Holden's jealousy, (2) Miss Kwan and Holden dine on salad dressing so as not to reveal her illiteracy to a "stuckup" waiter, and, (3) Holden impulsively tears Miss Kwan's dress off when she turns up in his room looking like the western version of what she is.

Utilizing the intimacy of the camera, director Richard Quine has been able to add several humorous touches to the action. He also seems to have extracted the best possible work from his cast, particularly in choice of when to zero in for tight closeups and when to pull back and away. In this respect, credit is also due editor Bert Bates. With cameraman Geoffrey Unsworth, Quine has added interest and mobility through several strokes of dramatic lens-positioning such as a sudden glimpse of the bedroom from a darkened and elevated vantage point. Unsworth's shutterwork is most notable for the subtle photographic qualities of his smoky barroom views.

Interior sets designed by John Box smack of authenticity and are a fine complement to the enchanting shots of Hong Kong itself. There are several passages of sheer travelog, worthwhile glimpses of culture-in-action. Audiences unfamiliar with the city will marvel at them. George Duning's music is unobtrusively gratifying.

Holden gives a first-class performance, restrained and sincere. He brings authority and compassion to the role. Miss Kwan, a most agreeable-looking creature, is not always perfect in her timing of lines (she has a tendency to anticipate) and appears to lack a full range of depth or warmth when the occasion calls for an extreme degree of emotional reaction, but on the whole she manages a fairly believable portrayal. She will be a valuable commodity whenever Eurasian parts are to be filled in films.

Michael Wilding is capable in a role that has been trimmed down somewhat in importance from the play version, in which the character seemed less appealing. For purposes of contrast, it should have remained less appealing. Sylvia Syms does exceedingly well by the comparatively thankless role of the "other woman," and Laurence Naismith is excellent as her liberal-minded father. Jacqui Chan is convincing as a B-girl sans sex appeal, only one of the group outside of the heroine left with an identity in the screen translation.

De tal Palo, tal Astilla
(Chip On the Shoulder)
(MEXICAN)

Mexico City, Nov. 8.

Peliculas Nacionales release of Filmadora Chapultepec production. Stars Luis Aguilar, Lalo Gonzales ("Piporro"). Bassoons features Flor Silvestre, Marina Camacho. Directed by Miguel M. Delgado. Screenplay, Alfredo Varela Jr., from original by J. Maria Fernandez Unsain; camera, Agustin Jimenez; music, Manuel Esperon. At Cine Orfeon, Mexico City. Running time, 90 MINS.

Attempt in this one was to poke fun at the typical American western. But even though singer Luis Aguilar and comic Lalo Gonzalez ("Piporro") swagger around with traditional six shooter trappings, give a version of the stalk, and use the word "sheriff" for the Mexican upholder of law and order (played by Aguilar), it just doesn't come off.

Sum total is neither a Mexican western, although it has the necessary number of shooting scenes and the inevitable singing, nor a lampoon of the Hollywood potboilers.

Both actors play double roles of father and son, and story centers around differences of opinion of two old timers in the Mexican village, and a "switch" of offspring of both where the "good guy" has the "bad man's" child and vice versa. Situations this develops have been used before in other films.

Audience liked the show, laughing at the conventional stock comedy situations. It all winds up in a stirring quartet achieved by trick dubbing, with warring old timers burying the hatchet, the mixup of sons cleared up and love interest provided by Flor Silvestre and Marina Camacho. These latter don't sing, only look on adoringly as the two stars give forth with gusto in their quartet finale.

Producers obviously intend to build up Aguilar and Gonzalez as a team for the home and Latin American markets.

The ishing art of bedroom comedy is revived in the Panama and Frank production of "The Facts of Life." Thanks to the comic know-how of a couple of pros, Bob Hope and Lucille Ball, the effort is highly successful, and the boxoffice is going to reflect that success in spite of the fact that Hope and Miss Ball are so frequently accessible for free on television.

The humor "Facts" ranges from rapid-fire gag lines to out-and-out farce, but hits its peak in a couple of situations that are telling takeoffs on contemporary family relations. These scenes have an immmediate communicative impact on audiences. They hit home. But the United Artists release is mostly light, harmless romantic fluff of the bedr m-hopping variety, and is liable to launch a trend by putting some fun back into filmdom's bedroom, site of so much no-nonsense dr matic ctivity in recent times.

The sharp, fast-moving screenplay, collaborative effort of producer Norman Panama and d tor Melvin Frank, pairs off Hope and Miss Ball in an extra-marital romantic affair. Both, taken for granted by their respective spouses and children, seek escape from humdrum suburban family life in each other's arms, but the affair swiftly expires when the red-tape and heartbreak involved in a clean break with the past become apparent. Obviously there is an underlying serious strain to the proceedings, but this serves primarily as a sound, solid springboard for some of the year's best screen humor.

Both of the stars are in exceptionally fine for . Hope exhibits refreshing restraint in his approach, admirably underplaying to his costar but rattling off gags and handling reaction business as only he can. Miss Ball returns to the screen after a rather lengthy absence and proves anew that she's one of the top comediennes around, a fact with which tv audiences ar quite familiar. Somewhat more subdued than her well-known "Lucy" image, Miss Ball thoroughly brightens up the comedy, be it farce, slapstick, sophisticated or satire, all of which are incorporated into the picture.

Ruth Hussey and Don De Fore are disarmi gly unpleasant as the non-romantic mates of the roving couple. Louis Ny is a delightful bounder. Among the supporting players, Peter Leeds gives a particularly amusing performance as a sharp-eyed laundryman and Robert F. Simon put ver some memorably unimpressed visual attitudes as a motel clerk who isn't buying the husband-wife registration stance of Hope and Miss Ball. Additionally agreeable support is generated by Philip Ober, Marianne Stewart, Hollis Irving, William Lanteau, Louise Beavers and Mike Mazurki.

Frank's direction is a gem of comic perception, with only one or two lapses in which bits of business initially uproarious are repeated until the life has been sapped out of them. Only other criticism is the fact that a large amount of dialog is drowned out beneath waves of audience laughter over the lines preceding them. Presumably the dialog lost is unimportant, but seeing lips move without hearing what is being said is thoroughly frustrating.

Workmanlike camera capers by Charles Lang Jr., cutting by Frank Bracht and art direction by J. Macmillan Johnson and Kenneth A Reid are vauable contributions to a film that is unpretentious by physical and photographic standards. Leigh Harline's score adds a light, effervescent note, and there is a lilting, literate title ditty by Johnny Mercer, sung by Eydie Gorme and Steve Lawrence as the Saul Bass titles unravel. Tube.

Man in the Moon
(BRITISH)

Amiably amusing, but mainly disappointing Kenneth More comedy. This spoof on science fiction ambles along to rather gimmick ending. Excellent production work, and More's name should suffice.

London, Nov. 8.

Rank release of (Michael Relph & Basil Dearden). Allied Film Makers' production. Stars Kenneth More; features Shirley Anne Field, Michael Hordern, Noel Purcell. Directed by Basil Dearden. Screenplay, Michael Relph, Bryan Forbes; camera, Harry Waxman; editor, John Guthbridge; music, Philip Green. At Odeon, Leicester Square, London, Oct. 31, '60. Running time, 99 MINS.

The ularity of Kenneth More will insure safe b.o. reaction at popular houses, but considering the amount of talent on the bandwagon for "Man In The Moon," this is mild disappointment. It's an amiable spoof on science fiction but is rarely as funny as its original idea promises. It ambles along towards a gimmick ending which is not strong enough to justify the word "climax." There are quite a number of yocks, but the film is a tame return for More to the type of comedy that he can handle so well.

He plays a medical guineapig who, at the start of the film is working on field tests for th Common Cold Research Centre. But More a person of such nable temperament that he's mpletely immune from violent emotions. And, apparently, from colds, too. Anyway, he's fired by the Research Centre.

But next door, at the National Atomic Research Centre they're looking for a man to train as a pathfinder to the moon, before sending off a rocket containing a team of supermen. They decide that More's the man—healthy, with no ties, unworried, expandable. The financial carrot's satisfactory to him and he agrees, but there's one flaw in the plan.

They neglect to tell him that he's destined for the moon and con him into thinking that he's still a guinea pig. When he discovers the truth and that there's a reward of $280,000 for being the first man on the moon, he decides to go through with it, figuring the cash will be useful for marrying a stripteaser for whom he's fallen. But, in the finale, the test fizzles out and so, in fact, does the film.

The most fun comes in th rivalry of More and the three supermen, excellently played by Charles Gray, Bruce Boa and Bernard Horsfall. Shirley Anne Field competently provides the brief romantic trimmings. Michael Hordern, John Glyn-Jones and John Phillips are soundly amusing.

Basil Dearden's direction is uneven as, indeed is the script by Michael Relph and Bryan Forbes. The whole affair has the air of a serious film into which comedy has been rather desperately pumped. More's affable personality is relaxed and pleasant as always, but in this instance the character seems insufficiently rounded for full impact. Harry Waxman has done a good job with his lensing.

It's difficult to know quite how to deal with this film. It's probably no worse than many others that have been specifically designed to appeal to a certain market. But it's a shade puzzling to know how such a market can exist. Some good performers strive valiantly, but with little success, to resource writing, direction and production all of which seem equally spired.

The story concerns a young girl who resents the arrival of her new stepmother, a French girl just married to her father (David Farrar). She seems a nice kid, little sullen, but she's apparently leading a double life by mixing with Soho beatniks. When young mum tries to influence her th youngster discovers that the French girl (Noelle Adam) was once a stripteaser and, maybe, even worse. It takes an attempted seduction by a nightclub lecher and murder before the child is brought to her senses.

Dialog may be authentic to the beatnik atmosphere, but it grates on the ear. Adam Faith, a top pop singer, brought into a film which, with an "X" certificate, bans his own following. Farrar, Miss Adam, Christopher Lee and Delphi Lawrence bring professionalism to cardboard parts while a girl Gillian Hills, is clearly not sufficiently experienced to cope with the unpleasant role of the rebel teenager. John Barry and his Seven play some numbers that are adequate but unmemorable.

Briefly, a British film in which the local industry can take little pride. Rich.

ino DeLaurentiis release of a Donati-Carpentieri production. Features Jeanne Valerie, Andreina Pagnani, Maria Pershy, Roberto Risso, Pierre Brice, Romolo Valli, Scilla Gabel, Jean Murat, Renato Spezial, Elsa Maetinelli, Corrado Pani. Directed by Daniele D'Anza. Screenplay, Oreste Biancoli, D'Anza, Giuseppe Mangione, Mi Guerrini; music, Armando Trovajoli; editor, Roberto Cinquini. At Trevi, Rome. Running time, 101 MINS.

Slickly made item with several exploitation pegs, notably a topical call-girl theme which coupled to a comely cast should make this a saleable item in many foreign areas. Bally aspects apply to Yank possibilities as well.

Call-girl operation is successful until an elderly client dies of a heart attack while on rendezvous with one of the girls. Attempt to cover up by removing his body merely starts off a chain of complications involving the girl in a murder rap and her father's subsequent suicide.

Thesping is okay, with Jeanne Valerie creditably handling her key role, and Maria Perschy, Scilla Gabel, Pierre Brice, Corrado Pani and others backing her. The girls are all lookers.

Daniele D'Anza's direction functional and lagless, denoting hi video background while other credits measure up in kind.

AUDITIONING A TOWN TO 'STAR'

Frisco Weather a Surprise?

San Francisco, Nov. 15.

William Perlberg and George Seaton, plagued by bad weather conditions in their four months of shooting "Counterfeit Traitor" in Europe, are now having another hard time of it in lensing "Pleasure of His Company" here. "Pleasure" started to roll early this year but an eight-month suspension was caused by the Hollywood strike.

In resuming the production the company lost two of the first three days of shooting sked due to gray skies, which means a substantial item in that the location shooting costs $24,000 a day whether the cameras roll or not.

Said Perlberg: "It's a continuation of our bad luck." And this, added Seaton, after 104 days of rain and dark clouds in Europe with "Tr ilors."

"Pleasure" cast and will return to Hollywood after the locationing here for interiors at the Paramount studio.

What'll TV Spots Do for 'Esther'?

It's a Test to Pull the 'Oncers' Into N.Y. Palace—Picked Up an Audience Analysis Point of Sindlinger

Twentieth-Fox this week is carrying out what might be termed a "controlled" experiment to test the effectiveness of television advertising of a motion picture. The picture is the Biblical spectacle, "Esther and the King," which opens at the Palace theatre in New York, Friday (18). One of the principal aspects of the pre-opening campaign is the intensive use of tv spots on local WNBC-TV feature film programs, at various morning, afternoon and evening hours for the seven days preceeding the premiere.

Decision to place the spots exclusively on feature film shows, rather than to spread them around on soap operas, children's and family-type western shows, as based on findings of Sindlinger & Co. to the effect that many "infrequent" moviegoers (less than once a month) are such because they satisfy their film hunger by consuming theatrical features on tv. Since Biblical specs are just about the only type of feature film fare not available on tv and since most of them have done well at the b.o., 20th execs reasoned that "Esther" would be an appropriate pic to push via the early-early, late-late (and in-between) film programs on the small screen.

Should "Esther" click at its Palace engagement, results will undoubtedly serve to channel increasing funds into tv advertising, not only on subsequent "Esther" dates, but on all other 20th releases.

Heavy Barrage

Company last week declared that it has completed, and has ready for shipment to branches around the country, all tv and radio spots for 20th releases through the end of the year. Under ordinary circumstances this might not seem unique, but perhaps in 20th's case it is, since the company hadn't (as of last week) even finished production on at least one of the pix scheduled to go out before January 1.

To be ready with the tv promotion spots, company in several cases has had to work from spe-

'Exodus' Advance Tops $1,000,000

The advance sale for the first ine engagements of Otto Preminger's "Exodus" has topped the $1,000,000 mark, Arthur B. Krim, president of United Artists, which is releasing the film, described the advance as "a milestone in the history of motion pictures." He said that "there hasn't been an advance sale remotely like it."

The largest advance has been registered in N.Y. where $611,875 has been collected a month before the Dec. 15 premiere. Receipts in other cities are: Los Angeles, $123,767; Chicago, $109,290; Boston, $58,976; Miami, $36,586; Baltimore, $19,555; Detroit, $18,221; Kansas City, $17,644; Dallas, $15,135.

The picture will be shown on a hardticket basis with a top of $3

IDEA: VERY DEAD FROM H-BOMBING

By HY HOLLINGER

It has been said that an actor or an actress will do almost anything to get a starring role in a film. Whole communities apparently are no different.

Producers Jules Maitland and Ed Spiegel, who operate under the Urbana Productions banner, have found many small towns in the U. S. willing to portray their own death. The team is currently engaged in a nation-wide search for a town of between 5,000 and 10,000 to "star" "Benson City 1300," a story of the death of a town in the missile age.

The town Maitland and Spiegel are looking for must, in addition, be typical Americana, have a Main Street with a clock tower, an old-fashioned cemetery, and traditional homes and churches. The producers have expressed a willingness to travel anywhere in the U. S. to "audition" the tow

In seeking applicants for the "part," the producers have written to newspapers throughout the country seeking their cooperation in alerting the small comm ities and townships. The newspaper reaction so far has resulted in a solid pre-production publicity campaign.

Need 1,000 Extras

For example, after Maitland surveyed Petaluma, Calif., the local Argus-Courier headlined the event with an eight-column streamer, "Petaluma May 'Star' in Hollywood Missile Movie." The paper pointed out that out of the $250,000 budget between $50,000 and $100,000 would be spent locally and that about 1,000 local extras would be needed.

"Benson City 1300" is the first of series of semi-documentary films planned by the new team which joined forces earlier this year to film "Justice and Caryl Chessman." Second pic—"The Monster"—is the study of a psychopath, and "Little Man From New York" is a satire on low-budget Hollywood producers. Pair will co-script with Maitland producing and Spiegel directing.

The merger put into effect by Paramount and Columbia in Canada is the type of operation that's an economic must in the States if distribution costs are to be brought down to a "realistic level," according to the sales v.p. of a rival company. But, he added, the antitrust injunctions against all major distributors bar such amalgamations and will continue to do so unless the Department of Justice consents to amendments.

There has been intra-trade agitation for an ease-up on the trust edicts but so far to no avail.

The Par-Col joint operation, the spokesman underlined, is not limited to only physical handling of films—but also includes sales. Except for the large circuits, exhibitors are served in behalf of both Par and Col by the same salesman and this accounts for the major saving.

Each of the two distribs holds the right to approve or reject any exhibition contract under the setup.

High cost of distribution has stirred complaints throughout the industry for years. Problem has been partially solved by cuts in the releasing organizations' offices in the key cities and franchising out film shipping and storaging.

But the distribution operation on the whole remains a fiscal burden that can be meaningfully alleviated only if the D. of J. would permit mergers such as the one entered into by Par and Col in Canada.

Allied Artists' Net in Slump

Hollywood, Nov. 15.

Allied Artists' net profit for the first quarter, ended Oct. 1, 1960, of the current fiscal year dropped to $286,380 (before taxes) from $652,600 for the corresponding period last year, Steve Broidy, prexy, reported at the annual meeting of stockholders here last Wednesday (9).

For this year's first quarter a remaining tax credit, due to a carry-forward of prior year losses, reduced the provision for Federal income taxes to only $9,000. No tax provision was required in the previous year. This resulted in a net profit after taxes for the first 1960 quarter of $277,380.

Gross income in the quarter amounted to $4,244,000, compared with $5,241,000 in the like 1959 period. Stockholders reelected all directors and approved appointment of Price Watergouse & Co. as auditors for the new year.

Following the stockholders meeting, the board met to reelect all officers. They also named Milton Segal assistant secretary of the company.

Board authorized payment of the Dec. 15, 1960 quarterly dividend of 13¾c per share on company's 5½% cumulative convertible preferred stock. Payment will be made to holders of record Dec. 2.

Par's 3d Quarter Pace: $1.44 Per

Paramount's estimated consolidated earnings for the third quarter of the current year amounted to $2,405,000, or $1.44 per share. This includes special income of $1,063,000, or 64c per share, representing installments on the company's sale of the pre-1948 film library to a subsidiary of Music Corp. of America.

Third quarter of 1959 brought earnings of $1,349,000, or 79c per share, including special income of $198,000, or 11c per share.

Total consolidated earnings for the first nine months of 1960 are listed at $6,137,000 or $3.67 per share, including special tv income of $3,018,000, or $1.80 p share. First nine months of 195 ought earnings of $6,609,000, c .88 per share, including special income of $2,965,000, or $1.74 per share, representing principally the profit from Par's sale of its stock in Metropolitan Broadcasting Corp.

Par now has 1,673,231 common shares outstanding, compared with 1,703,927 a year ago.

It's 50c for Par

Paramount board has declared the regular quarterly dividend of 50c per share on the common stock, payable Dec. 16 to holders of record on Dec. 1.

As reported in these columns last week, there's to be no early hike in the stockholders' melon, although one has been anticipated in some quarters.

Exec Salaries At Loew Chain

Salaries of officers and directors of Loew's Theatres totalled $430,717, per a proxy statement summoning stockholders to the annual meeting in New York on Dec. 8. Eugene Picker, president and director, is down for $78,000 in addition to an extra $30,372 estimated to be paid under the company's retirement plan. Salary of board chairman Laurence A. Tisch, who succeeded Leopold Friedman on Sept. 1, 1960, is not indicated. It's believed that he receives the same amount as Picker.

Friedman, before his retirement, received $78,000 annually, but his contract was settled, calling for his services as a consultant to the com-

Pre-Divorcement Indenture Prevents Loew's Circuit Paying Dividend

Loew's Theatres registered a net profit of $2,771,625, equal to $1.04 per share, for the 1960 fiscal year which ended Aug. 31. The profit represented a 38.1% increase over the $2,007,251, equal to 75c per share, recorded for the 1959 fiscal period.

The 1960 net profit came after the deduction of depreciation charges of $3,075,464 and U. S. and Canadian income taxes of $2,710,000. Similar deductions in 1959 amounted to $2,949,139 and $2,445,000.

According to the annual report, shareholders' equity in the company at Aug. 31, 1960 amounted to $62,074,451, equivalent to $23.26 per share, an increase of $1.04 per share over the previous year.

The report to stockholders, signed by board chairman Laurence A. Tisch, says that "theatre operations, the principal source of our earnings, showed a gain in profit last year." However, the report gives no information on the exact amount of the profit increase from theatres.

Total 1960 income amounted to $44,199,085, ith theatre operations and broadcasting (Station WMGM) providing $40,027,337 and rent, interest and other income $4,171,748. The 1959 total was $46,056,090, with $41,951,484 from theatres and broadcasting and $4,104,606 from other sources. A separate breakdown of the theatre and broadcasting earnings is not provided.

Operations Cut

Operating expenses were less in 1960 than in 1959—$32,965,797 as compared with $35,194,785, a factor that may have contributed to the larger profit this year.

Despite the fact that the company's financial position is "sound and healthy," Tisch's message in the annual report notes that an indenture, involving loans made in 1945 and 1947 to the former parent company (Loew's Inc.), "continue to prevent the payment of dividends at this time." Loew's Theatres, it's noted, became bound in the loans in connection with its separation from Loew's Inc. Under the loan agreement, Loew's Theatres may not pay cash dividends in excess of earnings of the company accumulated after March 12, 1959 and no dividend is permitted which reduces the balance of current assets of the company to less than twice current liabilities. At Aug. 31, 1960, it is noted, such current assets were approximately $2,700,000 less than twice current liabilities.

About WMGM

Tisch's message stresses that Station WMGM "completed the best year in its 38-year existence." The report apparently went to press before Loew's sold the station to former WHN (of Major Bowes) to Crowell-Collier for $11,000,000. There's no mention of the sale in the report.

The company's diversification into hotels gets the big play and up front mention in the annual report. A cutout cover features architect's drawing of the two hotels the company is building in New York—The Americana and the Summit. The second page contains a composite of a number of Loew's Theatres and a microphone with the WMGM call letters.

Los Angeles, Nov. 15.

Expected after-election pickup is not materializing here to any big extent with only a few situations showing strength. New entrants, too, are not getting far at the wickets. "Let No Man Write My Epitaph" looks best newcomer, but only fair $17,000 in three theatres. "Where Hot Wind Blows" is after so-so $16,000 in four houses.

"10 Who Dared" shapes soft $14,000 in three spots. "Savage Eye," on first general release, shapes dull at the El Rey.

Regular holdovers are paced by "Butterfield 8," which looks smash $23,000 for second round at Hollywood Paramount. "Dark at Top of Stairs" is rated slow $13,000 for second in three situations. "Inherit the Wind" looms mild $12,000 in second at the Chinese.

"Spartacus" aiming for hoffo $28,500 in city's leader though in fourth frame at Pantages. Other hard-ticket films are showing well.

Holiday Helps N.Y.; 'Wong'-Stage Mighty $175,000, 'Epitaph' Big 33G, 'Alaska' Nice 41G, 'Night' Slick 29G

Veterans Day holiday, which was stronger than usual, is aiding the overall Broadway first-run showings this round. Launching of five new bills also is helping to brighten the picture. And a plus factor, of course, is the end of the Presidential campaign.

Pacing the field is "World of Suzie Wong" with new stageshow which is heading for a great $175,000 in first session at the Music Hall. Pic hit a new record for Veterans Day last Friday. "North To Alaska" is heading for nice $41,000 on initial stanza at the Paramount.

"Let No Man Write My Epitaph" looms smash $23,000 for opening week at the Forum and a fine $10,000 at the arty Trans-Lux 52d Street. "Girl in Night" is heading for stout $29,000 in first session at the Criterion. "Come Dance With Me" hit a passable $6,800 on opener at arty Baronet and nice $10,000 at the Broadway Embassy, temporarily on first-run with this pic.

Upped holiday scales for Veterans Day and the extra matinee that day is helping all hard-ticket pictures. "Spartacus" is climbing to a great $35,000 in sixth stanza at the DeMille. "The Alamo" hit smash $32,000 in third session at the Rivoli. "Ben-Hur" looks socko $34,500 in 51st week at the State. Setup also enabled "Sunrise at Campobello" to lend an okay $20,000 in 20th and final stanza at the Palace, where "Esther and King" opens on grind Friday (18).

"Never On Sunday" still amazes, holding at wow $26,000 in fourth week at the arty Plaza. "GI Blues" is heading for a big $23,000 in second round at the Victoria.

Common Mart Countries Still Probe Pix Setup; U.S. Helped Ultimately

Paris, Nov. 15.

A series of meetings are going on among the Common Mart countries looking into the film situation. Plans are being worked on to make production, interchange of films and personnel easier as well creating overall quotas for their own and foreign pix. This makes the CM loom as one complete mart a. d a powerful one. Yanks queried here feel this will not endanger U. S. outlets and may help if a realistic common market spells better cinema grosses.

U. S. observers also feel that bigger scale productions coming from CM linking will make for healthy competition since bigger pix may be made. This would tend to bolster cinema trade but not monopolize it since these countries need films for their theatres.

The one mart which would take in France, Italy, West Germany and Benelux, once all difficulties are worked out, shows an impressive setup. It has 171,000,000 people, 25,485 film theatres 1 980.-660,000 patrons annually, a gross of $660 000.000 and produces about 342 films a year. This com ares favorably with the U. S. film industry.

Italy has about 39% of the total CM attendance followed by West Germany with 34.5%, France has 18.5% and Benelux 8%. As far as grosses go Germany, because of prices, is ahead with 36%, followed by Italy's 31%, France's 24% and 9% for Benelux.

Further statistics denote that Germany and Italy get 85% of their take at home while France only has 69% pointing up that France films mean more in export values within the GM which may be due to French-speaking elements in Belgium. France, Italo and German films get about 49% of the CM mart, with the U. S. up to about 34% with the remainder split between other filmmaking countries. All this underlines the importance of this CM mart and further clarification is being watched by Yank film people.

SPIEGEL TO LAUNCH 'LAWRENCE' NEXT JAN.

Paris, Nov. 8.

Sam Spiegel has revealed that "Lawrence of Arabia" (Col) will begin exteriors in the Near East and North Africa on next Jan. 2, and will be made in color. David Lean directs, with Michael Wilson scripting. Spiegel said that he was actually having talks with such stars as Cary Grant, Kirk Douglas and Jack Hawkins for top roles, and possibly using a rising new British actor, Albert Finney, to play Lawrence.

Wilson is doing the screenplay, based on Lawrence's own "Seven Pillars of Wisdom," plus four books by Robert Graves on Lawrence and Lowell Thomas's "With Lawrence in Arabia." Spiegel went to London to confer with Lean and Wilson, now winding the script.

Mario del Monaco Set For 5 German Films

Berlin, Nov. 8.

Italian tenor, Mario del Monaco, 39, rated as the world's highest paid opera tenor, came here to start his German concert tour. Gloria-Film took the opportu ity to present the singer to the press here and to bally its soon-due release, "Schlussakkord," which stars Monaco. "Schlussakkord" (The Final Chord) is a joint production of Tele Film (Munich), Les Films Modernes (Paris), Cosmos Film (Rome) and Film Contact Company (Vaduz). Pic is in color.

Monaco said he is signed to appear in at least one film per year over a five-year period under his deal with Film Contact Company.

Next Monaco film might be in in conjunction with Artur Brauner's CCC Berlin). Latter has still "That's My Man" on its property list. Story could not be filmed because of the sudden death of Mario Lanza who was to star in it. Another project is "The Great Mario," a film which bears some resemblance with the life story of La

Cathay Opens No. 60

Singapore, Nov. 15.

The Cathay Organization h opened its new Cathay Cinema in Klang, Malaya, bringing to 34 the number of new theatres it has opened since 1955 and to 60 the total number of theatres it now operates throughout Singapore, Malaya, Sarawak, Borneo and Thailand.

Opening of the newest theatre, a 942-seat house, was attended by the Sultan of Selangor and top exec. of th Cathay organization. In addition to its theatre interests, Cathay also controls the Cathay-Keris studios here, which are now turning out 12 features a year.

French Govt. May Help Pix, Legit

Paris, Nov. 8.

Andre Malraux, Minister of Culture, has gone on record as saying the government is discussing film and legit troubles, and looking into possible detaxation steps to help motion picture and theatre people. But it is only in the talking stage.

Malraux says there is no dramatic crisis in the theatre but only the overall weak business, and that the government is studying this. He explained the government may set up a system of credits to ease producers and house owners. He also points out that theatres are more numerous in Paris than in London and N. Y. Also that a lessening of tax burdens could be in the offing.

He is content with the showings by the state subsidized theatres. Regarding fiims, he states that production is still growing but that he is aware of the still declining filmgoing and especially the exhib problems since the cutting off of Film Aid to them. He has intimated that help may soon be forthcoming to exhibs to help them with their problems.

Meanwhile, Information Minister Louis Terrenoire has said that a pre-censor film script board will go into effect early next year. Members of government bodies, the industry as well as teaching and family groups are now being appointed.

All scripts will have to be turned in to this group and they will inform producers as to whether their pix will be liable to censorship or be forbidden to youngsters. It will be strictly a help and warning to producers who can then go ahead and take their chances or else change things to get a clean visa.

Japanese Importers Of Foreign Films to Get 70% Coin Unfreezing

Tokyo, Nov. 8.

Japanese importers of foreign films are expected to be authorized the remittance of 70% of their accumulated yen earnings by the Finance Ministry in an arrangement similar to that recently allowed MPEA members. Accumulated yen of these Japanese traders was equivalent to about $557.575 at the end of September. Something like one third of that figure was earned by French pix.

In recent weeks, the Foreign Bureau of the Finance Ministry authorized MPEA companies to remit $2.300.000, or 70% of thei accumulated yen earnings.

The same kind of arrangement is also anticipated for Cinerama, which has about $278.780 in accumulated yen, and for the American non-MPEA importer-distributors, who have about $83,635 in accumulated yen.

The Japanese traders were formerly allowed a 40% remittance rate, but this was asked to be hiked to the 70% figure of the U.S. majors. Most of their imports are outright purchase deals. In line with the improvement in Japan's economy,

Olympic Champs Found To Lack Entertainment Value in U.S. Tryouts

Frankfurt, Nov. 8.

Last summer's Olympic giants seem to have just about as much entertainment value today as the hula hoop. And sports enthusiasts, sports promoters, managers and the heroes themselves are worrying about the dull thud that's echoing as the Olympic stars are trying to invade the entertainment industry in the U.S. and abroad.

European papers are full of the sad, sad story of "what happened or didn't happen to poor Carl Kaufmann in the United States."

Kaufmann, who came in second t Am an Otis Davis in the 400-meter record ', sent to the State, with hi "entertainment manager" Rudolf Kinzel, to capitalize on his Olympic glory and to win himself a name in the entertainment industry as a singer.

The 24-year-old Karlsruhe, Germany, lad made no impact on the entertainment moguls. Kinzel reported on his return here. While Kinzel had "interesting talks" with officials from the Walt Disney, Ed Sullivan and Perry Como shows, Kaufmann didn't get a single bigtime television or film commitment. Kinzel returned to Germa alone, reporting that he got Kaufmann one engagement, to sing at the German Club in New York City, but that Kaufmann decided he didn't like the room.

Meantime, back Germany, other Olympic subjects are having their troubles, too. "The world's fastest man," Germa racer Armin Hary, short, after his return from the Oly ics also tried crash show biz. He signed tract to make a pic with Germany's Gloria ilms. Now the whole business seems to e heading for the German courts, with Gloria claiming breach of contract because Hary allegedly showed up late for his first film commitment, but demanded his money.

Gloria offered Hary the top $25.-000 for his first starring role, and had also planned to give him $1.875 for a small part in a Paul Marti film. But all these plans are finished now with Gloria planning to release him from his contract.

And meanwhile on another front, the Globus color full-length film over the wi Olympics fro Squaw Valley, "Mankind, Hope, Medals," opened to very slow business in some key cities in West Germany. And an Italian-produced documentary about th Olympics Rome isn't even being bought in Germany. Reason cited here is that the Italian production costs were so high that it isn't worth the money involved for a distributor to bring it into Germany.

2 Film Versions Of 'Musketeers'

Paris, Nov. 8.

There were recently two British films on Oscar Wilde and now two French producers have announced new versions of the much-filmed Alexandre Dumas swashbuckler, "The Three Musketeers." Jean Becker, the son of late director Jacques Becker, is to do it for producer Emile Natan while Bernard Borderie will make one for producer Raymond Borderie, his father.

Both are slated to start next year. Becker will do it in the usual adventurous tempo, with three of the top young French stars Alain Delon, Jean-Paul Belmondo and Jean-Claude Brial. Borderie will use numerous unknowns surrounded by some star. The latter claims that a picture version completely faithful to the original spi it of the book has yet to be done, and hat he will do it along thes lines.

"Musketeers" was made as a silent film and then as a talki pic in Hollywood by French director Henri Diamant-Berger, with Douglas Fairbanks. Then it served as a comedy vehicle for the Ritz Brothers. It was made here again five years ago with Bourvil and Georges Marshal, and also was done before the last World War.

Another Dumas book, "The Count of Monte Cristo," filmed often in the U.S., France and other countries, also may have two versions produced this season.

Prince Philip at KRS Get-Together

Top British Naval Brass, Johnston, Skouras, Jack Warner Attend Pinewood Studio Dinner

London, Nov. 15.

Prince Philip, in his new capacity patron of the Royal Naval Film Corp., led a contingent of top naval brass, including the First Sea Lord and Earl Mountbatten, when it was entertained by the Anglo-American motion picture industry at Pinewood Studios last Monday (7). The occasion, formally hosted by the Kinematograph Renters Society, was the annual conclave in which the industry and the navy alternate as hosts.

That the event is highly placed on the industry's social calendar was demonstrated by the fact that Eric Johnston, Jack L. Warner and Spyros P. Skouras all made the special journey to London to be present, though only the Motion Picture Assn. prez was among the speakers.

More than 150 guests arriving at Pinewood for the dinner were routed through the exterior lot where night filming was in progress on 20th-Fox' "Cleopatra." The reception area for the pre-dinner get-together and cocktails was the House of Commons set used in the upcoming "No Love for Johnnie," while the stage on which di ner was served was one of the lavish interior sets being used on "Cleopatra." That prompted Lord Carrington, the First Sea Lord, to comment that it was presumably Skouras' idea of the Hous of Lords.

Th speeches—th re were three toasts and an equal number of responses—mainly lacked quotable content, but were largely of a backslapping quality, with th navy thanking the industry for supplying motion pictures to ships at sea, and the industry speakers saying it was a pleasure, etc. It was left to Eric Johnston to point out that there were 200 ships in the Royal Nav showing films, and that United Kingdom pictures were being made available to the Polaris. In a lighter vein, he commented on the cultural exchange between Britain and the U.S.—i.e., Diana Dors for Marylin Monroe, Tommy Steele for Elvis Presley and "Expresso Bongo" for "10 Commandments."

The Duke of Edinburgh, replying to the toast proposed by KRS prexy Montague C. Morton (the UA topper), began by expressing the thanks of the navy and all the men at sea, and then heartened his audience by expressing the firm conviction that people today enjoy "the flicks" and that motion pictures would survive the little boxes that were found in many homes.

Though primarily a straight industry affair in which the trade's wn guest list is selected on a top exec level, a number of visiting roducers and directors, together with a few stars, were among the invitees. Gary Cooper, currently filming "The Naked Edge," was the sole Hollywood star. British thesping talent was repped by Richard Attenborough, Kenneth More, Max Bygraves, John Mills, Richard Todd, and Stanley Baker.

Stephen Boyd, one of th "Cleopatra" stars, was also on the guest list, but prevented by filming from being present. Sam Spiegel, en route to Jordan for "Lawrence of Arabia," Walter Seltzer who, with George Glass is producing "Naked Edge"; Rouben Mamoulian, directing "Cleopatra," and William Wyler wer among the invited visi

In line with tradition, it was fofmal white tie, tails and decorations occasion.

Rome's 'Vaudeville'

Rome, Nov. 15.

"Hal Holbrook Tonight," the 35-year old American actor's representation-recital of the 70-year old Mark Twain as a yesteryear platform personality, currently touring Europe. Show is presented i English.

Among Holbrook's dates ar one here in Rome as opening event (Nov. 8) in the subscription series of the semi-public "Theatre Club."

Same auspices will hav evening with Juliette Grec , Darryl F. Zanuck's film protege, and Gerard Sety, latter styled as "The Danny Kaye of France."

Same "Club" has the British Rambert Ballet, Cuban and Japanese shows lined up.

De Mille Biblical B.O. Wow in Spain

Madrid, Nov. 15.

Paramount's "Ten Commandments" broke all records for box-office attendance in Spain with total of 35 weeks showcast exhibition in Madrid, and an even longer run of 44 weeks in Barcelona. Over a million spectators paid normal prices to see the late Cecil B. De Mille's spectacle in these two major cities, and almost another million first-run customers attended in the next five principal Spanish cities, Bilbao, Zaragoza, Valencia, Sevilla and Malaga.

In 10 months of exploitation "Ten Commandments" drew grand total of 4,800,000 spectators, or one-sixth of Spain's census population. In Barcelona, where the Paramount entry outdrew the previous top grosser "Gone With the Wind," Biblical film was pulled after 44 weeks in deference to obligatory screening of Spanish film fare.

Germany's Most Unique Film Cast of the Year In 'Escape,' 95% Amateurs

Berlin, Nov. 8.

Unique setup prevails in Woelf, a small village in West Germany, near the West-East German border, where Will Tremper is now shooting "Escape to Berlin"—more or less everybody who's associated with the film is appearing i it. In fact no professional bit players are needed, making it around 95% amateur thespian talent.

Peter Schuenemann, the press manager, is showing up as an East German soldier; Erich Hanschick, the man who takes care of the lighting, portrays a Commie functionary; Hermann Molkenbuhr, the still photographer, is also seen as a Commie. Sanford A. Roth, U.S. photographer who got a special assignment with "Escape," is in a street scene. The script girl, Celia M. Zentner, "enacts" a dead body.

In addition, numerous friends of Tremper show up in his production, including Mike Dewey, former AFN disk jockey, as a Commie; Otto Hagelstein, former reporter of Commie radio in East Berlin (he fled to West Germany), is an East German soldier; Graf Einsiedel, Continental advertising director of Newsweek and racing ar driver, is a Commie functionary; Harry Hilt, tv man of Paris, enacts a playboy; H. Thim, a Hamburg draughtsman, is an East German motorcycle cop, just to name a few.

The village Woelf, incidentally, has been picked out of 200 villages of that area. It looks shabby and could easily be identified with an East German village, needed for "Escape." Incidentally, arly all associated with "Escape" are afraid to go back to Berlin via the highway but take a plane instead. Reason, of course, lies with the film. Latter contains strong anti-Communist ingredients and "the other side" doesn't care for efforts like this.

'Ben-Hur' London Gross $1,250,000 in 48 Weeks

London, Nov. 15.

Since its opening on a hard-ticket date at the Empire, Leicester Square, nearly a year ag "Ben-Hur" (M-G) has played to capacity at every evening performance. Now in its 48th week, it has grossed about $1,250.000 and has been seen by more than 810.000 people. Bookings are now being made for the Christmas holiday season and there are already several SRO performances.

Within the last two months, the Metro opus has opened in Dublin, Glasgow and Birmingha and begins a Manchester engagement at the end of the month.

MILAN'S FILM-TV CROSSROADS

Organizers of Pix Fests Had Better Play Ball or Else Sez Int'l Chief

London, Nov. 15.

Organizers of international film fests in 1961 had better stick to the book, be on their toes, and play ball—or else. The stipulation by the International Federation of Film Producers that its regulations covering fests must be strictly followed is going to be enforced to the hilt, according to the group's current president, Arthur Watkins.

Watkins came up with the stern emphasis recently, declaring: "We will only approve a festival if its regulations meet with those we have ourselves centrally laid down, and we shall have no hesitation whatever in withdrawing our approval at any stage up to the opening of that fest if we are not satisfied that the regulations are being carried out.

"And if we are not satisfied that, during its course, the regulations are being followed, we shall have no hesitation in withdrawing our approval for the following year. On this we are quite determined. We shall be very, very strict indeed."

The federation must perforce be a shade more lenient than this indicates towards the 1961 shindigs, inasmuch as it is realized that plans have already been put in hand and it would be difficult to change. The international producer group recommends a 12-day limit to a fest. But if a festival setup has already skedded 14 days, that's okay. All the same, the venue had better not schedule more than 12 days in 1962, or out comes the hatchet.

Though the IFPA doesn't feel it could impose an overall limit to the number of festivals held annually, it intends to specify eventually the four that will be allowed to insist that pix entered shall not have been screened at any other similar contest. Aware that it's in n invidious position and open to charges of "dictatorship," the federation would prefer to see fest organizers forming some kind of get-together group to decide priorities, limitation, etc., among themselves but can't really see this happening.

Prestige & Pesetas

San Sebastian, Nov. 15.

San Sebastian's annual International Film Festival will attempt to live with its budget next year with a marked diminution of festival guests, invitations to the press and money-spending activities.

This is the perspective raised by a former key member of the Basque festival organization whose resignation came simultaneously with that of Antonio Zulueta, festival director for the past four years, who was forced to step down last month.

"Zulueta's principal shortcomings," according to the Basque informant, "was his persistent effort to give the festival brilliance and prestige without an adequate budget." As a result, festival debts have mounted during the past years to create a somber financial situation for which Zulueta was made the scapegoat.

Stringent economy measures planned are expected to bring the San Sebastian festival into its proper focus as a Spanish film industry gathering with limited attendance from other motion picture capitals.

Major Change In Mex Film Prod.

Mexico City, Nov. 8.

A major change in Mexican production policy has been virtually approved by the Mexican Assn. of Film Producers and the three official distributorships. Raul de Anda, presiding over commission of producers and distributor executives, announced that a program called "bases for the stimulation of Mexican production" has been worked out.

Plan calls for production of between 12 to 14 big pictures a year, with production budgets in excess of $240,000 per picture.

Program is now being discussed by the joint counsel board of Peliculas Mexicanas, Peliculas Nacionales and Cimex. de Anda revealed.

Producers turning out the top quality product will get "special considerations" not only from distributorships, which promise to push th selling program, but also in financing by the Film Bank.

Arg. Filmites Protest 'A' Rating Turn Down Handed Native 'Mesa 10'

Buenos Aires, Nov. 8.

The case of Simon Feldman's (Silueta) first feature film, "Los de la Mesa 10" which was refused an "A" certificate (for compulsory first-run exhibition) by the new Screen Institute Board, continues arousing protests from many quarters connected with the screen industry except exhibitors. Assn. of Screen Critics sent the institute a memorandum asking that a resolution establish, in accordance with Clause 7 of Film Law 62/57, that the institute board's task is merely to classify native product for standard purposes, and not to set up as official reviewers. The task of reviewing, according to the crix, should be left exclusively to them and to the competent jury which decides annual awards.

The Film Exhibitors Federation issued a note rejecting the Argentine Producers Assn. implication that the board's classification had no legal validity, because of insufficient quorum when the institute board did its reviewing. The Film Directors Assn. stated that the picture is within the requirements of Film Law's Article 7, and should belong in the "A" Classification.

The Screen Union met on the subject before demanding an audience to complain to Education Minister McKay against the "insensibility" in understanding the industry's position, shown by the institute board. It also drew attention to the fact that though the board had asked the country's press to publish the Film Exhibitor Federation's memorandum containing nfavorable statistics on attendance in theatres where this film was released, it did not take the same trouble over the Screen Union's note.

Despite all these protests, the Classifying Committee reviewed the picture once more in the presence of eight members, four representing the Institute Board, but the president refraining from voting, two producer reps and two exhib reps. By a 5-to-3 vote, it was resolved to uphold the "B" classification. This was communicated curtly to the producer, with a rider that this closed the matter.

Mrs. E. R. Ruenes has taken over the operation at Port Isabel, Tex., of the Roxy Theatre.

COMMON MARKET FOR THE WORLD

By ROBERT F. HAWKINS

Milan, Nov. 15.

The foundation of what is ambitiously but confidently envisioned as the film industry world trade mart of the future is currently rising in this industrious north Italian metropolis, as proved by a visit to the Milan MIFED (International Film, Documentary & TV-Film Trade Market), currently winding the second of its twice-yearly get-togethers. Built on the grounds of the renowned Milan Trade Fair, the MIFED is a unique, completely independent, non-profit organization whose principal intent is to stimulate sales-purchase operations of films from all countries, at the same time offering an ideal physical plant and atmosphere in which to conduct these operations. The only such outfit currently functioning on an international scale, organizers expect it to fit the rising world trend towards centralized motion picture industry operations in all sectors.

The second MIFED (the first was held this April) topped the previous installment in attendance and sales volume, with 243 pic purchasers and sellers from 32 countries participating versus the 170 attending last April. This time 336 pix were screened, 182 of them features and 154 long and short documentaries. Total projection hours also topped the April MIFED, with 278 racked up by the just-ended installment. To wind the statistics on the 10-day fall event important sideline features included a meeting of British and Italian pic toppers and one of Spanish and Italian officials to define coproduction terms; the annual Italian exhibs (AGIS) convention; and the general assembly of the UIEC (International Exhibitors Federation). Average stay of clients: five days (out of 10). Some left after only two days, having sold all their product.

Reactions from attending industryites range from enthusiastic to favorably hopeful, with only a few isolated dissenters. The reservations expressed mainly concerned the lack of attendance by "foreign" buyers, especially with regard to almost-nil presence of Yanks and Canadians, as well as most Asian areas. Organizers admit this major flaw, and are particularly anxious to get Yank support for well-rounded representation but ar confident that things will change in time. (Japanese reps, after a recent "accidental" visit to the Milan setup during an Olympics junket, have now promised to attend and spread the word around their area).

Main interest to date comes, expectedly, from Europe, both East and West. Major activity is from nearby Swiss pic people, together with Germans, French, Spanish and British, as well as such curtain countries as Russia, Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia. Other busy visitors were from Belgium, South America (Venezuela, Argentina, Chile, Peru). Italy is naturally well represented.

Ideal Facilities

All visitors queried were enthusiastically unanimous in praising the MIFED organization and its physical plant, both felt unique in the world. Without exception, attending industry reps called it an ideal setup in which to conduct picture business once the problem of complete world attendance was licked. Many stressed the advantages of dealing in a fully equipped centralized place and business-only atmoshpere, as against the confusing, noisy, tense, distracting and usually inadequately equipped framework of a film festival, where most had been forced to conduct business to date.

Most looked forward to the third MIFED, which will be held in Milan April 12-27, 1961, as the first true test of the setup's effectiveness. Advance reservations are reportedly heavy, with organization happily pointing to a large number of new customers signing up, as well as the return of past attendees. Asked about the impor-

Growing Belief in British Picture Biz That Sunday Entertainment Act Due for Change; Real Exhib Saving

London, Nov. 15.

There is growing confidence in the British film industry that the government soon will be obliged to introduce legislation to amend the Sunday Entertainment Act 1930 under which picture theatres which open on the seventh day are obliged to make a contribution to charity on a scale determined by the local licensing authority.

For many years, and particularly in the last decade, the exhibiting side of the industry has been campaigning vigorously for the repeal of this condition which has been described publicly as a blackmail tax. Only last week Lord Morrison, a former Home Secretary, described the regulations as "another fascinating element of British humbug." No such toll is levied on any form of Sunday entertainment, and that is one of the main planks in the industry's argument.

In the last few weeks there have been a number of significant developments which have encouraged exhibitors. Firstly, the Birmingham licensing authorities decided to slash the exhibitors' annual tax by about 95%. The amount they are now required to pay is purely a nominal sum to observe the letter of the law.

In London, too, the tax has been substantially reduced, and the London County Council last week, for the third year running, cut the annual levy by $28,000.

Though there was no promise of legislation in the Queen's speech when she opened Parliament a fortnight ago, the industry believes that the Home Office is planning to introduce an amending bill within the next year or-so.

Imports' Wider Sell

Tokyo, Nov. 15.

Recent revisions in foreign film circuits in Japan has resulted in an increasing number of imports being released in the Kansai (Osaka-Kobe-Kyoto) and other smaller situations before Tokyo dates.

Reasons are reduced number of foreign film outlets in Tokyo, a virtual Toho monopoly of same and generally shorter roadshowings in Kansai while Tokyo hits play lengthy engagements.

3d Mex Film Fest, Set To Open Nov. 20, Finds Prelim Work Lagging

Mexico City, Nov. 8.

The Nov. 20 inaugural date for the Third World Review of Film Festivals, scheduled for twin celebration in this capital city and Acapulco, is nearly here, and plenty of advance work has yet to be done.

With the deadline approaching, the San Diego Fortress in Acapulco has not been reconditioned to mount the open air theatre for the event. Organizers still have a mass of inaugural detail work to clear. And the port resort is currently in midst of a political situation involving differencss of opinion on the part of Acapulco's mayor and state of Guerrero's governor.

Festival Organizing Committee has appealed to the Department of State to resolve situation. Otherwise, the film fest could be marred by factional demonstrations now goinng on. Miguel Aleman, Jr., who for three years has been the mainstay of the festival, publicly stated that he went out after this "definitely," whether results of the event turn out "good or bad." In any case, it is time that a permanent official group be appointed to run festival affairs, he explains.

Jorge Ferretis of the Film Bureau has raised a storm of protest in local film circles by announcing no Mexican film can take part in fest because of the excess of foreign festival winners scheduled. A total of 20 festival prize winners will be screened, with Hollywood contributing three: "The Apartment," "The Fugitive Kind" and "Inherit the Wind," all United Artists' pix.

Mexico's "Shadow of a Leader" cannot represent the Republic, apart from the lack of openings, because it won no festival award. And as for "Simitrio," the producer of this pic declined the honor with thanks. General feeling of Mexican producers to event is that of obvious indifference.

Robert J. Corkery, Motion Picture Export Assn., veepee in charge of Latin American affairs, announced that Hollywood will send a strong delegation, headed by Eric Johnston. He said that the MPEA feels the event is important, and should have a place alongside the major European film fests.

Acapulco hotel owners, who still have not been paid for last year's subsidizing of accommodations, food and drink for foreign delegations, are buckling down to business, putting up signs and announcements about the Review, organizing banquets for visiting film personages and writing off cash outlays as "publicity expenses."

S. Ramires and his brother, Alejo, have taken over the operation of the San Pedro Drive-In Theatre at Robstown, Tex.

Lisbon's Cinema Year Starts Big

Lisbon, Nov. 8.

The principal cinemas of Lisbon have started out solidly this season, being helped by the fact that the few legit plays have been rather weak. Twin S. Luis and Alvalade have the Jean Gabin starrer, "Le Baron de l'Ecluse," in the third week.

Filmes Castelo Lopes is presenting "White Shadows" starring Yoko Tani and Anthony Quinn for a fourth round at the Monumental cinema. The Monumental has "Ben-Hur" (M-G) set for a higher-price run for this year. The house is sold out in advance for the first week.

The S. Jorge cinema is doing SRO trade with "Some Like It Hot" (UA). The Imperio has the newest Portuguese film, "Meeting Life," directed by Artur Duarte. Duarte has left for Rio de Janeiro where he may direct a film with Brazilian artists.

The Eden has "A Summer Place" (UA) in for the third week. The Tivoli has "From the Terrace" (20th), in second week, and is announcing "Pillow Talk" (U), distributed in Portugal by Talma films.

First German Drive-In Deemed Success After Initial 7 Months

Frankfurt, Nov. 8.

Now that Germany's first ozoner, the Drive-in Kino Gravenbruch, in a suburb of city, has celebrated its seventh month of existence, a look at the statistics of the expensive al fresco house indicates it is a success. This comes as a surprise to many who said that West Germany's rainy summers and snowy winters, plus strict age limit laws on films which keep many children out of cinemas, the drive-in could not succeed.

The Drive-in Kino has handed the West German government about $35,000 in entertainment taxes in the period from April through last August. And in the fifth month after the opening, it charted its 250,000th visitor.

The ozoner is specializing in second-runs on its giant screen. And business is so good, in spite of an exceptionally rainy summer, that Herman Passage, chief of the corporation operating the house, has announced plans for expansion in several directions. The next drive-in will be built shortly in Paris. Other outdoor houses will be constructed in the Rhur area and near Munich. The houses, like the original here, will be open year-around.

The German Self-Censorship Board sets up age limits for films, and the original decriers of the Drive-in project had said that this would kill the German project since the whole family could not attend.

Despite these age drawbacks on films, the drive-in has been doing extremely good business. Once the novelty of the first couple of months wore off, the house has subsisted mainly on regular customers instead of the one-timers who came to see how the whole thing ran. Most patrons are auto owners from Frankfurt and Offenbach. About 3% of the ticket-buyers are Americans, members of the Air Force or Army stationed near Frankfurt or American civilians working in Germany.

Now follows the shocker—no necking! The promoters had been warned about the "passion pits" in America, and report that there's very little love-making going on in the autos, with most of the trade consisting of married couples and older folks, with few of the young rowdies in the audience.

French Govt. Promises Tax Relief for Exhibs; Outlines Censor Law

Paris, Nov. 8.

Andre Malraux, Minister of Culture, and Louis Terrenoire, Minister of Information, invoked film problems and possible alleviations in a recent National Assembly meeting. Malraux talked of easing heavy tax burdens and Terrenoire spoke about the new censorship setups.

Malraux pointed out that production was upped and claimed that the only real problem was in exploiting product because of falling filmgoing, heavy taxes and lack of aid to exhibs. He said that detaxation was under consideration and should be forthcoming soon to ease film fiscal problems. But a deputy from the floor pointed out that this had been promised last June, and that nothing had been done yet.

Malraux added that detaxation came under the heading of the Finance Ministry and that overall financial reforms were expected soon. However, film supporters retorted that would put pix last since they are still more or less considered a luxury. Malraux did not answer this. The national film administrative arm, the Centre Du Cinema, also would be revamped to act in conjunction with, and under, a special pic office working directly with Malraux.

Terrenoire said that new censorship laws for pix would be in effect by early next year. This would mean a new censor board with members from the government, industry, pedagogic and family organiaztions. He added there was one change in that the new censor board would be able to be overridden by ministerial reviewing of a decision. New categories would also be instituted with some pix entirely forbidden to minors.

Mex Bullfighter To Film Own Life Story

Mexico City, Nov. 8.

Carlos Arruza, bullfighter and actor, has turned coproducer in filming the story of his own life. Details have been worked out by Henry Spitz, with Bud Boetticher contracted for directing job. Exteriors will be partly shot on Arruza's Hacienda de Pasteje, where he breeds bulls for the ring. Camera crews have also taken shots of his recent ring appearances, with these clips to be inserted in the film.

Debra Paget is to play the femme lead in this pic.

U.S. Films Hold Own in Latin-Am.

Mexico City, Nov. 8.

There has been no marked fluctuation in the Latin American market for American films in recent months, according to Robert J. Corkery, Motion Picture Export Assn. veepee in charge of Latin America. Back from a briefing by Eric Johnston on MPEA activity in the area during the last 10 months, Corkery said bookings of U. S. product has been more or less stable despite some exchange fluctuations.

Boxoffice for Hollywood films remains firm in Mexico and throughout Latin America, with the former described as "one of the best customers" of American made pictures. The number of Hollywood films entering Mexico exceeds 200 annually, and despite the boxoffice price freeze, receipts are good. The setup is brighter generally in all Latin American republics, Corkery added, expressing satisfaction with results achieved in cementing friendly relations and understanding.

The MPEA is vitally interested in the new Mexican Film Law, Corkery admitted, even though this has been emphasized as an "internal matter." The association will watch all developments closely to see how, if at all legislation will affect Hollywood distribution in Mexico.

Corkery highlighted the reciprocity between Mexico and the U. S. in film negotiations, pointing out that while the U. S. has an important market in the republic, Mexican pictures also enjoy benefits of the American market. This phase, heretofore restricted chiefly to exhibition in Spanish language houses, is widening to embrace all cinemas via recent Mexican moves to dub carefully selected pictures in English.

The MPEA executive stressed the point that while costs of Hollywood production has doubled in the last 15 years, strict control of boxoffice prices in Mexico and certain other areas has reduced income. Corkery suggested that an upward revision of Mexico's first-run house scales could "alleviate" this situation, with smaller boxoffice hikes for rerun and nabe houses.

In the ticklish matter of dubbing, Corkery merely said that Hollywood had desisted from plans to dub its product into Spanish in view of the exhibition permit prohibition ruling of the Film Bureau. But he did say that now Mexican pix, dubbed into English, were invading houses regularly attended by the American public at large.

Film Data Re Burma

Washington, Nov. 15.

Foreign film imports into Burma totaled 526 in 1959, a drop of 39 from 1958, according to Nathan Golden, Motion Picture Chief of U.S. Commerce Dept.

Domestic production in Burm amounted to 50 full-length features —two more than in 1958. These films varied in length from 12,000 to 18,000 linear feet.

There were 370 motion picture theatres in operation with a total seating capacity of 259,000. Attendance in 1959 was reported at 94,500,000—about 8% higher than in 1958.

BRITONS RESPONSIVE; DEEM TODD-AO A PLUS

London, Nov. 15.

Todd-AO seems to have a unique appeal to British theatregoers, according to the experiences of 20th-Fox. The distrib is handling the release of "South Pacific," which is now well in its third year at the Dominion, and which has already earned around $4,000,000 in film rentals.

"South Pacific" is now playing its first 35 mm Cinemascope engagements in the provinces, following its earlier Todd-AO presentations. There have, apparently, been occasions when organized bus parties have declined to go into the theatre when they have discovered that the film is being shown in 35 mm and not in the wide screen 70 mm process.

20th's conviction about the lure of Todd-AO has been hypoed by experiences with "Can-Can," which is now in its ninth month at the Metropole, Victoria, a theatre which had hitherto been a second run prerelease situation. "Can-Can" has to be pulled next month to make way for "Spartacus," and 20th intends to move it to their first-run showcase, the Carlton, Haymarket, for an indefinite run.

On the basis of current estimates, it is reckoned that "South Pacific" will wind up with an eventual U.K. gross of $5,500,000, which will make it the British champ. It is too early to estimate the grossing potentiality of "Can-Can."

Yanks in Italy

By TRUDY GOTH

Turin, Nov. 8.

It is a well known fact that Italy has always attracted Foreigners, especially Anglo-Americans, who wanted to study or be inspired by beauty, tradition, monuments and art treasures. Lately many musicians have applied for Fullbright Scholarships and quite a few of them have settled in Florence or Rome to work on various projects.

Francis Thorne is one of them, who since 1956 calls Florence his home. His musical education ranges from being a graduate in Music of Yale where he studied under Paul Hindemith, to being a jazz pianist with Duke Ellington in New York, organizing jazz clubs and festivals and having his fling at radio and tv, when he left for Rome to continue his studies at the American Academy under Alexie Haieff and Leo Smit. He is now working with David Diamond (himself a Fullbright professor in Rome in 1951 who permanently lives in Italy and is remembered for, among others, his orchestral work "The World of Paul Klee" played recently by the N. Y. Philharmonic.

Paul Sheftel and Joseph Rollino are two bright American youngsters concentrating on two-piano efforts and having given already various successful concerts in Italy. Sheftel is a Julliard graduate (married to a violinist) and so is Rollino.

The winners of the American Opera Auditions of Cincinnati have participated at an Italian opera season (stagione) in Florence, together with winners of the "Experimental Lyric Theatre" from Spoleto (nothing whatsoever to do with Gian-Carlo Menotti Two Worlds Festival except that it uses the same theatre). Arlene Saunders of New York was an excellent Mimi in "Boheme" and so was the Canadian Constance Lambert as Musette. Both girls were well prepared, vocally mature and "actresses." Other singers from the Cincinnati auditions were Abe Polakoff and Spiro Malas. But the one who really brought down the house and whose name it will be wise to remember as of now, was the Negro tenor from Indianapolis, George Shirley. His voice is nothing short of exceptional with technical, dramatic and projection qualities which predict a great future. Ivana Tosini, heard last year in Spoleto and in N. Y. in a concert performance of "Duca d'Alba" sang the lead in "Traviata."

Milan As Film Center

tance of the Milan event, a rep for Russia's Sovexportfilm replied: "We're here for the second time; would have returned if it weren't important to us?" (Sovexport showed seven or eight features to prospective buyers during the No. 2 MIFED).

Further details on MIFED plans and intentions came from Guido Franci, whose personal baby the pic mart is. With 33 years' background in the trade fair business and a self-made man, Franci "also" heads the all-product Milan Trade Fair, on whose grounds the MIFED setup was built, and which ranks as the top such event on the Continent. A man of tremendous drive and vitality, Franci has great plans for the pic Mart, which he sees as an eventual site, in addition to its growing current functions, of high level film (and perhaps tv) meetings—a sort of Summit of World Film & TV Industries. "We have the installations," he says, "and what we don't have, we'll build!" The practically-built MIFED setup which "must be seen to be believed" allows for expansion in all directions, and additions have already been built following the spring show.

Franci's constant fear (and he attributes certain U. S. reticence to this) is that his MIFED will be confused with a film festival. "It decidedly is not, nor do we get any subsidies of any kind from the government, from the tourist bureaus or chamber of commerce, or—as has been ventilated — from the Italian film industry. We play no favorites, are open to all comers, and treat everyone on equal terms. Operating as we do on volume of attendance, we merely charge a nominal fee for use of our installations and services," he adds, "and request no percentages on deals consummated here. We don't even want to know what the figures are or were. All we ask is 'Are you satisfied'?"

Just Business—No 'Starlets' Etc.

Another point setting MIFED apart from festivals is fact that its premises are open only to buyers, sellers, and their guests. Franci has designed his brainchild as a glorified club for filmites bent on a business-only stay, where qualified people are able to operate in ideal comfortable conditions and a distractionless atmosphere which he feels not only stimulates business and creates ideal biz and personal relationships but is also conducive to other constructive discussion building to a healthier pic industry future. "In this setup, the press would have little to do even if we did invite it in," says Franci, pointing out that no public screenings are held (except at request of the client), no stars attend, and there's generally no excitement of the kind that makes headlines.

On-The-Spot Reaction

Only an on-the-spot o.o. of the MIFED plant can convince one that reports of its functional beauty are true. The place is a knockout. It's a permanent tastefully designed setting on two levels on the Milan Fair Grounds, roughly a 10-minute cab drive from city centre (MIFED provides free bus service to clients). First floor is devoted to business offices of various sizes rentable to any and all comers, a post office, cable and phone service (including Telex), bank, customs and shipping office, to facilitate import-export and handling operations, interpreters' pool, complete with typists, photostat equipment, secretarial service and mimeograph setup, as well as a booking office where screening rooms are reserved and an office where daily bulletins are issued. There is also a bar and restaurant (both excellently catered by Milan's Caprice nitery).

Second level, accessible only to buyers, sellers and their guests (via passes), has 12 meeting rooms for conferences, a medium-sized auditorium and projection room with simultaneous translation system, eight elegant projection rooms, served by latest, all-ratio equipment, two small tv viewing rooms (where tv-films are seen on video sets over a closed-circuit system, rather than direct projection), film storage room (where every reel is checked for flaws after each projection, and cleaned if necessary), a large and exquisitely architecured general salon, and a small bar and snackery.

MIFED tariffs, beginning with a one-time charge of $15 for registration by pic companies or reps with product to sell (but a buyer, if that's his only function, needn't spend a cent, being guest of salesman), range from 50c an hour for typing services to $25 a day for large company office space (which drops to a $200 flat fee for a 10-day stay). For $4 an hour one can rent a projection room; $1.50 an hour for a conference room; $65 for a smaller office "booth" for 10 days; $1 an hour for an interpreter; $45 for a private phone, etc. etc. Film storage and handling an arrival are free of charge. A topnotch meal at the restaurant, wine and service included, is only $2; drinks also are low-priced, coffee is on the house. An added aid for uncertain visitors: no tipping of any kind is allowed for any service on the premises; penalty is immediate discharge of any personnel caught accepting pourboire.

The UN of Pix Biz

A glance at the main MIFED area found all office space "sold out." Occupants during the 2d mart, for the record, included Titanus Films, Cineriz, Sovexport, Francinex, Franco London Films, Unitalia, Dino DeLaurentiis, Galatea, Export Union, Unifrance, Fono Roma, Orbis Film, Anica, AGIS, D.D.L., Maxima Film, Cei-Incom, Fair Film, Italcaribe, Continental, Suevia Film, Benito Perojo, Uniespana, Erwin Kipfmueller, Jugoslav Film, Karpet Film, Aron Film, Nivifilm, Erina Films, Czech Film Export, Hungarofilm, Florali , Santos Alcocer, Instituto Luce, RAI-TV. But many more names, obviously, are on the buyer-seller roster sans office space. Setup is air-conditioned, of course.

Franci is already at work planning ahead for the April MIFED, about which past, present, and future clients will be kept informed via bulletins sent out at regular intervals to "several thousand addresses throughout the world. The Milan topper "confidently expects" many more clients to come to Milan next spring (perhaps, as he says, anticipating their yearly first "outing" to the Cannes Film Fest by a week or so) for a first look at the unique setup. "Once they come and see us," says Franci, "I know they'll be coming back regularly."

As French Exhibs Cry For Aid, Govt. Keeps Up Handouts to Pix Prods.

Paris, Nov. 8.

Though exhibitors are clamoring for Film Aid, from which they were severed last year, and aid is being cut over the period of the next seven years, films considered of cultural, prestige and educational value are still getting pre-production handouts.

These depend on the judgment of the Ministry of Culture and a special consultative commission made up of industry and governmental reps to pass on the films. Sixteen pix received this help far this year.

Finished pix which received it, according to a Centre Du Cinema report, were Abel Gance's "Austerlitz," Claude Chabrol's "The Good Girls," "Dialogues Des Carmelites," about a group of nuns executed during the French Revolution for treason; "The French Woman and Love," "Murder at 45 RPMs," "Vive Le Duc," a comedy; and "Trip in a Balloon."

Pix in the works, or about to be which received these handouts are Alain Resnais' "Last Year," Henri Colpi's "A Long Absence," "Summer Chronicle," a study of ordinary working people done in documentary style by Jean Rouch; "Fortunat," a story of the Occupation; "The Doll," about a mythical South American revolution; and "La Princesse De Cleves," based on the first French novel of the 14th Century.

'Mink' to Continental for U.S.

Toronto, Nov. 15.

"Make Mine Mink," an Arthur Rank film, will be distributed in the U.S. by Continental Distributing Inc., according to negotiations arranged by Frank Fisher, veepee and general manager, Odeon Theatres (Canada) Ltd.

In addition, contract has been signed whereby Walter Reade (Continental is his distrib outfit) will undertake bookings throughout the U.S. of a number of important Rank reissues.

Owner and Employe Feud Over 'Art', Guess Who Has to Take Powder?

Berkeley, Cal., Nov. 15.

Scrap between wner Edward Landberg and manager-booker Pauline Kael of the 200-seat Cinema Guild and the 100-seat Studio in Berkeley culminated in Mrs. Kael's resignation and Landberg posting signs in front of th theatres saying:

"It was not Darryl Zanuck or Louis B. Mayer who started the Cinema Guild. It was Edward Landberg."

Nine-year-old Guild, which plays "classic" films at edge of U. of California campus, grosses over $100,000 a year and nets Landberg more than $25,000 annually.

Landberg stated he had "reassumed command" after returning from Los Angeles, but "everything is in an uproar" at the moment. Mrs. Kael, contract expiring next May, announced her resignation in theatres' latest bimonthly program guide with this statement:

"For 5½ years I have written these programs, made up the displays and talked with thousands of you over the telephone. I think the Cinema Guild and Studio has been the only theatre in the country for which the taste and judgment of one person—the writer—have been the major determinant in selecting films. It is with deep regret that I must announce that irreconcilable differences with the owners have made my position untenable; this is the last program I will prepare . . . Pauline Kael."

Mrs. Kael picked the 7,000 out-of-Berkeley addresses on theatres' 17,000-name mailing list and sent program guides to the 7,000, feeling "people in Berkeley will learn quickly enough."

Landberg, a couple of days later, mailed program guides to all 17,000 names on list with Mrs. Kael's resignation statement carefully made illegible by an overprint.

Landberg, an ex-film critic, changed locks and safe combination in theatres, posted signs, among which was one that said, "to alleviate the hurtling rumors that are circulating . . . the Guild will not change policy."

Root of feud, apparently, lies in fact that owner Landberg sought to take over management on his return from Southern California, while Mrs. Kael claimed her contract gave her managerial and booking prerogatives.

SCHOOL, GYM USE OF PAST ENDING

Zurich, Nov. 15.

Swiss film production should enter a decisive new era with erection of a modern film studio near Zurich on private capital at a cost of about 4,000,000 Swiss francs (£930,000). Half of this amount has already been assembled as basic capital, with the remainder to be financed by mortgage credits. About 70% of the basic funds are Swiss, 30% from German and American producers of theatrical and tv films.

Idea of new production center was initiated by Gottlieb Duttweiler, for years one of the most active sponsors of national film production here. With him is Lazar Wechsler, founder and topper of Switzerland's oldest production company, Praesens-Film Zurich, other Swiss production toppers (Max Dora, A. E. Scotoni) plus private industry groups. Building of the studio is expected to start next spring and to be ready by fall of 1961.

This project ends a situation long deemed intolerable by tradesters both here and abroad. For a quarter-century now, Swiss film production has been plagued by inadequate or non-existent studio facilities and forced to "improvise" in schoolhouses, gyms, inns et al. for interiors. In some instances, it was even necessary to move abroad (mostly to Germany), causing a considerable increase of production costs.

Only existing Swiss studio, Rosenhof of Zurich, has such limited facilities that its use has been restricted, for some time now, to the production of advertising shorts. In view of this situation, large portion of Swiss feature film production so far has consisted of location work — admittedly a plus where authenticity is concerned, but at the same time a physical and financial handicap.

The ground on which the new studio is to be erected will be made available by the city of Zurich. It is hoped that, at a later date, a contemplated new Swiss television studio will be built at a nearby site, enabling an economically highly desirable merging of technical facilities.

Proposed theatrical film studio will be open for renting to domestic and foreign producers, both for theatrical and vidfilm production. In view of expected government subsidies, the renting fees for Swiss production companies are expected to be lower than those for producers from out of Switzerland. It has been affirmed, however, that no difference whatsoever will be made between those Swiss producers holding financial interests in the project, and outsiders.

The present year has been one of the busiest for home-made product here, with an all-time high of eight Swiss pictures in release or in the can, it seems a certainty that, with the new studio project now in active preparation, local film production looks ahead to still a further upswing. Furthermore, when the time is ripe (i.e. as of next fall), foreign producers may well look to Zurich as a new, if physically limited, production center in Europe.

Youngstown Rips Pseudo-Call-Girl Gimmick for WB Release's Come-On

Youngstown, O., Nov. 15.

The card read: "Miss Bobbie Williams, girl of the night. For an evening's entertainment, call RI 4-8338." That's the way Warner Bros.' "Girl of The Night," which producer Max J. Rosenberg calls "a serious picture" about "a serious problem," was promoted in Youngstown, O. The promotion, though not the picture, sent officers of Youngstown's morals squad into a tizzy. They thought the cards were for real.

Situation was discussed at length by Fred Childress, film critic on the Youngstown Vindicator—but, by deliberation, one week after the picture had finished playing. Childress declared that he felt any comment on the picture while it was playing would have amounted to pandering. But, with the picture out of the way, he let go with both barrels.

Childress' column was prompted by a letter which he received from Rosenberg objecting to Childress' review of the film which had been labeled "a sordid piece of trash." Rosenberg objected on the grounds that the film was a sincere attempt to discuss a serious problem.

Citing the way in which the film had been promoted, critic answered that he certainly didn't want to impugn Rosenberg's motives, adding:

"Certainly making money is a serious matter. And it's obvious that the film discusses a serious problem. It may even become more serious as a result of the movie.

"I find it completely incredible, though, that anyone who felt he had made a serious movie about a serious problem would choose to advertise it in the way 'Girl of The Night' has been handled . . ."

Childress noted that the Vindicator had refused to publicize the call girl card hassle until after the film had left town, and concluded: "Now there's a serious problem for serious producers of serious pictures. Publicity."

Qualifiedly Yours

Arthur L. Mayer, self-billed "corrigible optimist," delivered the annual Marc Sickle lecture on American mass media at Dartmouth College yesterday (Tues.) with the film business as his specific subject. He expressed qualified upbeat sentiments.

American standards of taste are advancing, but not fast enough, opined Mayer. He said the most successful films, books and plays are "no artistic masterpieces" but they're far better than 30 years ago.

Mayer wraps up his thoughts anent current "strong" material on the screen thus: "It is unfortunate that many authors and producers are misinterpreting the new freedom granted them to dwell on the more sordid aspects of life but this is inevitable reaction from the idiotic excommunications and prudish cuts formerly enforced by censor boards and pressure groups. The dangers of liberty are less to be feared than those of repression and in the long run, maybe the short run, will be cured more rapidly."

Mayer's advice to young men contemplating careers in the mass media is to get with it. Opportunities and rewards are greater than ever, he declared.

One Ad-Pub Group Replaces Former 3

Ad-pub directors committee of the Motion Picture Assn. of America has done away with its three sub-committees on newspaper relations, and has replaced the three separate units with one, headed by Buena Vista's Charles Levy.

The three separate groups has been assigned to ad censorship, makeup of the ad pages, and rates. All these are to be tackled by the Levy group, which also consists of Universal's Phil Gerard, United Artists' Fred Goldberg, Columbia's Jonas Rosenfield Jr. and Metro's Dan Terrell.

Making like elder statesmen—that is, they'll serve in advisory capacity—are Jerry Pickman of Paramount and Paul N. Lazarus Jr. of Col.

Change in the newspaper liaison work was called for by Par's Martin Davis, chairman of the overall MPAA ad-pub committee. He's to be succeeded next year, incidentally, by Levy in the rotating post.

Devine's John Ford Encore

Bracketville, Tex., Nov. 15.

Shirley Jones and Andy Devine have been added to the cast of John Ford's "Two Rode Together" (Col) now being being filmed at the Happy Shahan ranch.

This is the first Ford film in which Devine has appeared since "Stagecoach."

CASE VS. ED ALPERSON: AWARD-PLUS-INTEREST

Hollywood, Nov. 15.

Three years of litigation and arbitration have borne fruit for producer Carroll Case. He has won $180,000 judgment against Edward L. Alperson's National Pictures Corp. Complicated action involves rental monies for "Magnificent Matador" released by 20th-Fox i 1955.

Los Angeles Superior Court has upheld arbitration award made in 1958 for $154,000. Accrued interest raises the amount due. Alperson had posted bond meantime.

Par Party at Studio

Paramount's New York top echelon-ites went out to the Coast this week for further huddles on upcoming production with Jack Karp, studio v.p., and Martin Rackin, exec in charge of production.

Absent from Gotham are Barney Balaban, president; George Weltner, global sales v.p.; Jerry Pickman, ad-pub v.p., and Russell Holman, eastern production head.

While Pickman still holds the ad-pub title, it's clear that he's becoming more and more involved in production policy matters.

Word from Hollywood at press time: Paramount will roadshow product in its schedule for next year. This means Marlon Brandon's "One-Eyed Jacks" will not go hard ducat.

E. L. de Patie's Berth

Hollywood, Nov. 15.

E. L. de Patie, Warner Bros., vp, succeeds late B. B. Kahane as vp of Assn. of Motion Picture Producers, post left vacant since exec's death Sept. 18.

De Patie has been a member of the AMPP board for number of years.

Will Hollywood Send Pundits To Document Blasts Re Copy?

Albert Pickus, president of the Theatre Owners of America, is out to set up a meeting among his own organization along with the Screen Producers Guild and the Motion Picture Assn. of America on the subject of motion picture advertising. Films ads have been criticized by both TOA and SPG as being "antiquated," the ad-pub directors committee of MPAA, under Paramount's Martin Davis, joindered "let's hear more about it," and now Pickus is doing the spade work looking to a full-scale get-together on the matter.

Pickus has called an exploratory meeting in the east for the week of Nov. 21. No telling yet as to how the west-based SPG will go for this. Pickus resides in Stratford, Conn., and the MPAA promotional wizards are in New York.

In any event Pickus is plotting an initial session to determine what his own group and the producers have in mind along the lines of (1) what's wrong with picture ads and (2) what can be done about it.

MPAA committee wants to hear the specilics, and then a full meeting might be conducted with a formal and thorough-going agenda.

Close Students Of the Film Biz; Value-Line Checklist of Pros, Cons

What makes the stock market perk or unperk so far as film and theatre issues on the New York Stock Exchange are concerned? In good part it's the interpretation given the fiscal behavior or individual companies by the so-called pundits of the Wall Street area.

Recent sizeup by Arnold Bernhard & Co. reflects how the professionals weigh each facet of a corporation's operation and in some instances show more concern for non-theatrical activity and insure management than for the theatrical boxoffice.

Columbia looks fine, for example, but there's beaucoup room for reduction of the overhead. Big factor at Loew's Theatres is the segueing into hotel operation. Paramount appears okay, but let's convert the money-making paper profits into cash and perhaps diversify some more.

Stanley-Warner can be an attraction as and if the International Latex subsidiary moves ahead, as it should.

At both Warners and 20th-Fox the prospect of stock tenders is appealing.

Bernhard, via the Value Line analysis, offers a rundown (capsuled herein) on various picture and exhibition outfits.

Columbia: Thanks largely to the skyrocket growth of the Screen Gems television subsidiary, gross revenues (estimated at $115,000,000 for fiscal 1960) are near the level of most other producer-distributors. But the common stock capitalization importantly is smallest of all studios, amounting to 1,334,662 shares. Per-share earnings could be wow if a successful program of reducing "exorbitant overhead expenses" can be effected. Working capital can be devoted to theatricals when Screen Gems raises working funds via partial public financing, now anticipated.

Decca: Highest rating for this stock because earnings look to be still going up and up. More blockbusters coming from Decca-controlled Universal, and foreign revenue looms big for 1960's domestic winners.

Disney: There are better values around; this issue probably will continue to perform poorly in year ahead. Animated cartoons not so popular any more, other features this semester not so hot, and television enterprises falling off. Possibility of more profit later on via tv licensing of features or theatrical reissue of past successes.

Loew's Theatres: Better-than-average stock despite absence of cash dividends. Looks like hotels will be the major factor in the corporate family, with management convinced the inns can yield more than film exhibition.

Metro: Look for earnings to hit $4 per share in fiscal 1960, compared with last year's $2.90, and a boost next year from 40c to 50c in the divvy rate. Highest rating for the stock of this company, whose "Ben-Hur" may well gross $75,000,000.

National Theatres: Not much here, partially in view of untimely acquisition of National Telefilm Associates, plus offish theatre business. No major improvement in earnings for months ahead but a revitalized company could mean reversal of trend in 1963-65.

Paramount: An average stock. Company has had its setbacks but lately coming through with theatrical successes ("Psycho" is the big one). More diversification and conversion of paper profits in electronics to actual money could see revenues climb to $150,000,000 per year. 1960's gross is estimated at $120,000,000, earnings at $7 per share and dividends up to $3.50 per share of common in 1963-65.

Stanley-Warner: Downtrend in earnings seems to have been arrested; new-found improvement ought to extend through fiscal 1961. Increased promotional campaign's costs had depressed earnings last year but this same campaign should see expansion of the International Latex subsidiary. With the Hollywood strikes over and better and more product due, exhibition is on its way to a healthier status.

20th-Fox: An above-average stock as earnings point upward for the months ahead, due in part to more impressive public reception of film issues. Also in prospect are dividend and a stock split at $50 per share.

Warners: Earnings on the slide but here again a stock tender appears in the offing. Good possibility the downbeat in theatrical releases may be reversed shortly but the comparison figures likely will remain unfavorable until next spring. Lots of cash on hand for a stock buyin.

Fabian Refrain: Do-It-Yourself

Chicago, Nov. 15.

Stanley-Warner circuit chief S. H. (Si) Fabian, speaking as chairman of the new American Congress of Exhibitors, told last week's Allied powwow here that Congress' bid to enter production field was the best hope exhibs have for survival.

More features in circulation, he said, "will make it possible to offer . . a more varied menu of picture entertainment, resulting in an increase of theatre patronage." He was careful to state, however, that more production is not regarded as exhibition's panacea.

C. of E., said Fabian, already has $3,000,000 in escrow and awaits Securities and Exchange Commission greenlight to offer shares in the production unit. Exhibition-backed pix actually are seen as the leverage to soften up distribs by making them, says Fabian, "more anxious to please." But there's no naive thought that the scheme is likely to stimulate production by the majors.

Prime mission of the new exhib body, Fabian noted, "is to create or cause to be created more feature film." And ACE product, he said in a burst of metaphor, would enable theatres to "strike off the handcuffs and legirons of lacerating trade practices."

'Wind' to Blow Again

Atlanta, Nov. 15.

Metro will give "Gone With The Wind" a "second world premiere" at Loew's Grand theatre here March 10, 1961 as a part of the festivities launching the Civil War centennial activities planned by the Georgia Civil War Centennial Commission. Film had its initial premiere at the Grand in December, 1939, and ran for 10 weeks, playing to 223,674 customers on a two-a-day policy.

Invitations to this new premiere will be sent to all surviving members of the "GWTW" cast. Clark Gable, prior to his heart attack, had promised to attend if he was not out of the country.

'OBSCENITY' CHAIRMAN LOSES BY 584 VOTES

Albany, Nov. 15.

Joint Legislative Committee on Offensive and Obscene Material, which drafted this year's film classification bill that passed the Assembly overwhelmingly but did not come to a vote in the Senate, will have a new chairman, come January 1.

Assemblyman Harry J. Donnelly, Brooklyn Democrat, appointed last June as chairman was defeated in his bid for a third term, by a 584 margin last week.

Upper Classes

vated so many writers and playwrights in the 1930s.

In this respect, the current rash of European "[illegible]ical" films also are considered more mature and complex works than the comparable film critiques of the 1930s, wherein bankers were inevitably potbellied and businessmen bald. To be [illegible] there was a touch of this in, "Rosemary," but even in that film, as in "Dolce Vita," there are, at the heart of each story, recognizable characters who are more important as individuals than as stereotypes of general groups or social classes.

It was also suggested in course of the Schacker interview that the only recent U.S. film to come close to approximating the same kind of comment on uppercrust highjinx as can be seen in some European pix is "Suddenly Last Summer," based on a work by Tennessee Williams who would probably never call himself a social critic. That film, though set in the 1930s, is considered a comment on today's world, and, as Schacker agreed, any film that is any good must inevitably make a comment on the time in which it is made.

Williams, incidentally, will also be contributing to the growing cinema library concerned with Roman high life via the soon-to-start-shooting "The Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone," based on Williams' only novel. Among other things, this has to do with a famous American actress, a contessa, and some expensive gigolos. And they all behave quite rottenly.

Decadent, Maybe; Sensitive for Sure

London, [illegible] 15.

Producer Louis DeRochemont reported here Monday that he is appealing decision of the Italian Ministry of Culture which revoked working permits for cast of "The Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone." Location unit had been scheduled to shoot in Rome, but Italian government execs found the script unacceptable, allegedly because it is about cafe society vice.

Picture, starring Vivien Leigh, now set to start shooting at Associated British Elstree studios here Dec. 5 for seven weeks, followed by three weeks location shooting in Rome or elsewhere.

DeRochemont was advised Sunday (13) that Gavin Lambert's script based on Tennessee Williams' novel, was unacceptable, though the censor had the script for seven weeks without acting on the matter, and the advance unit has been in Rome for eight weeks.

Puzzled Playwright

In New York Monday (14), Tennessee Williams stated he could not understand action of the Italian government re "Roman Spring," because it's not a story about corruption in Roman society, but rather a "psychological study of an older woman (American) in love with a younger man." Williams suggested that perhaps the censor had been afraid of a character in the book—a priest dabbles in the blackmarket—who does not appear in the screenplay.

Could This Be Shakedown?

It also was learned in New York that an official of the Italian Culture Ministry had suggested that the problem could be worked out if DeRochemont hired an Italian writer to work on the script. This offer, as Manhattan reacts, has all the earmarks of "blackmail."

Lion First British Co. To Sell an American Picture to Americans

Lion International Films of London has acquired world-wide distribution rights to John Cassavetes "Shadows" and will find itself in the unique position of releasing an American film in the United States.

According to British Lion managing director Victor Hoare, the situation is "quite revolutionary." He said that he believed that "this is the first time that an American picture is to be released in America by a British company."

The Cassavetes picture, which won the critics' award in Venice, opened in London on Oct. 14 and was acclaimed by the British press. Now in its fifth week at London's Academy Theatre, the picture is said to have taken more money than any film shown during the theatre's 25-year history.

Post-Election Helps Trade; 'Butterfield' First, 'Lace' 2d, 'Hur' 3d, 'Spartacus' 4th

The pickup, which started Election Day and gained further momentum [illegible] Veterans Day, is cheering exhibitors across the country this round. Several films, which did well, figured in the upbeat although many exhibs are unhappy about the number of truly good b.o. draws.

New champion at the wickets is "Butterfield 8" (M-G), which is keeping "Ben-Hur" also from Metro, from the top position for the second week in a row. In fact, "Midnight Lace" (U), which was No. 1 a week ago, is winding up second this session. "Hur," which has finished or is nearing the end of longruns in several key cities covered by VARIETY, is capturing third position.

"Spartacus" (U), third last round, is finishing fourth. It is being closely pressed by "Inherit the Wind" (UA), winner of fifth spot. "Wind" likely will be heard from again in future. "The Alamo" (UA), while not up to hopes in some locations, is managing well enough to cop sixth place.

"Let No Man Write My Epitaph" (Col), fifth a week ago, is capturing seventh position. "Sunrise at Campobello" (WB) looks to cop eighth. It was sixth last stanza. "Girl of Night" (WB) is taking ninth spot.

"Magnificent Seven" (UA), 12th last week, is taking 10th money. "10 Who Dared" (BV),

"The Good Soup" presented on Broadway a few months ago.

French-Italian singer Tino Rossi, who appeared here years ago, was practically frostbitten by hostility, though his alleged collaboration was a matter of dispute and no proof.

French cellist Pierre Fourni who played here recently with the Israeli Philharmonic, was attacked in the press for similar reasons, but he got a clear bill from the Israeli Foreign Office and that settled the dispute in his favor.

Yehudi Menuhin is less popular with Israeli audiences because he —a Jew—appeared before German audiences "too soon" after the war.

John Barbirolli, conducting a Mahler symphony once asked the chorus to sing the original German text. The chorus refused, though Mahler was an Austrian and a Jew.

The music of Richard Strauss is still taboo in Israel, because of his friendly relationship with the Hitler-regime and Mussolini, and Peron. So are the works of Richard Wagner who died six years before Hitler was even born, but was known as 19th Century anti-Semite.

German-made pix are not shown in Israeli cinemas, except if they are co-produced with another country, or labeled as "Swiss" or "Austrian," and get away with it.

Only one German artist appeared up to now in Israel—Marlene Dietrich. She even sang in German. She was a tremendous success.

she made Robert Anderson's "All Summer Long."

Breaking the deadlock with Warners, Miss Baker recently bought out the remaining two years of her pact. "So now I'm free, except that I owe them a great deal of money," she said.

Now assured of artistic freedom, Miss Baker feels her career has caught second wind. Her hopes are high on the still unreleased "Something Wild" which she made for UA release with Ralph Meeker, Mildred Dunnock and Jean Stapleton in New York City for the indie outfit headed by herself and her husband, director Jack Garfein.

Asked if she thinks the performer is best able to select his roles, Miss Baker responded, "I don't think he always knows best, but the actor has to be happy and relaxed in what he's doing. So to that extent he should be allowed to make his own mistakes."

'BEN-HUR' POTENTIAL; SEE $100-MIL COMING

On the basis of the $40,000,000 world-wide boxoffice gross for "Ben-Hur" during its first year, Robert Mochrie, Metro sales chief, feels that it is not out of the realm of possibility for the picture to reach a world-wide gross of $100,000,000.

In its first year, according to Mochrie, the picture has rolled up, theatre for theatre, the biggest grosses and the longest engagements in the history of the business.

Sober Mood

central issues found in the general proposals.

The rapid settlement of the musicians' pact has had a sobering effect on current negotiations since some IA leaders will privately opine that the tuners didn't get [illegible]y much from the hard-bargaining Boren; hence there tends to be less insistence on non-essentials. But there appears to be a rock-ribbed solidness among rank-and-filers on the key issues, all of which center around the basic problem: how to make a living with fewer jobs available.

Union answers include keeping production at home, making it attractive via pensions for older craftsmen to retire, relieving hardships created by the general production ebb via strong health-and-welfare measures. Concessions in these areas will be assessed by the craftsmen in terms of concessions made the talent guilds, particularly in relation to the post-1948 films-to-tv question.

John Ford's 'Two Rode' Finishes Ahead of Sked

Brackettville, Tex., Nov. 15.

Filming of the wester "Two Rode Together" (Col), was completed ahead of schedule here, and the stars and director left Thursday (10) by plane for Hollywood. Among those boarding 70 passenger plane at Laughlin AFB near Del Rio were director John Ford and stars James Stewart, Richard Widmark, Linda Cristal, Shirley Jones and Pat Wayne, the latter son of John Wayne.

Most of the filming was at the "Alamo Village" here where John Wayne's "The Alamo" (UA) was made. Some interior filming will be completed in Hollywood. Release date has not been set.

Thomas Roselle, casting director, imported some 200 nationals from Mexico to portray the parts of Comanche Indians in the picture.

FRENCH-BRITISH PACT ON CO-PROD. SETUP

London, Nov. 8.

Hopes are running high here that the British and French governments now will be able to go ahead next month on drawing up an enabling treaty on coproduction. Under the Cinematograph Films Act, passed earlier this year, such an agreement is an essential preliminary to any Anglo-French co-shooting ventures.

The optimism springs from the mood of talks held in October between British producers and the Federation of Film Unions at which the labor reps put forward what they considered to be essential safeguards for themselves and their French counterparts.

Further get-togethers between British and French producer groups, and with the labor spokesmen, are skedded before full accord is reached, but it's confidently anticipated that there will be handshakes all round by the end of the month. The recommendations agreed on can then be forwarded ot the two governments.

Boardwalk Losing 4,200-Seat Warren

Blow to Resort But Dilemma Apparently Insoluble —A Gaping Parking Lot Looms

Atlantic City, Nov.

Razing of the 4,200-seater Warren Theatre, largest at this resort, located in midcity on the boardwalk, is being protested by the boardwalk division of the Chamber of Commerce, whose members are urging that the city purchase the structure and use it as a second Convention Hall and spot where legitimate shows and other attractions might be housed.

Following plans made many months ago, George A. Hamid and son have been issued a demolition permit by the city and will start razing the big structure in December. They are undecided as to what to do with the ground after the building has been torn down, but it is expected that it will become a parking lot.

Harold Finkel, chairman of the C. of C. unit, in his telegram to City Commissioners argued: "We believe the city would derive a substantial revenue from the theatre. Certainly, the city stands to lose a large amount of money if the theatre is demolished."

It is known that city commissioners take a dim view of Finkel's suggestions. They have already invested some $3,000,000 in renovating big convention hall, and are not keen about "going into the amusement business in competition with taxpayers."

George Hamid Jr. has declared: "We feel very sad about tearing down this beautiful showplace, but there is nothing we can do about it. We have tried everything to keep it going the past four years, but it isn't a practical building for a private operation."

Annual tax bite on big structure is some $40,000, and the Hamids have been unsuccessful in having it reduced. City can't give them "break" because of fact other taxpayers in vicinity would not only protest, but might go into court.

Theatre was built in 1927 at a cost of $4.5 million as the Warner flagship of the Stanley motion picture houses in the resort. The night it opened a 60-piece orchestra seated on hydraulic platform which gradually rose from its pit to the view of the capacity house played for the silent motion picture offered. Music was also provided by what was then the largest organ in any motion picture house.

pany for a period of four years at $39,000 annually. Other salaries listed: John F. Murphy, exec v.p. $57,200; Arthur M. Tolchin, v.p. in charge of Station WMGM, $57,200. With the completion of the sale of the station to Crowell-Collier last week, Tolchin's fate is unknown at the moment. In addition to his basic salary, Tolchin received a percentage of the annual net profits of the station. For the fiscal year ending Aug. 31, 1960, his share of the profits amounted to $105,000.

The annual meeting, to be held at Loew's State Theatre at 3 p.m. on Dec. 8, has been called to elect directors and to consider and take action on a proposal introduced by stockholders Lewis D. Gilbert and John J. Gilbert calling upon the company to adopt cumulative voting for directors. In the proxy statement, the management recommends that the stockholders vote against the proposal.

The proxy statement indicates that Tisch Hotels Inc. is the beneficial owner of 614,000 of the 2,668,389 shares outstanding. This gives Laurence A. and Preston R. Tisch a 23% control of Loew's Theatres. Directors nominated for reelection include Friedman, Arnold M. Grant, Lewis Gruber, Herbert A. Hofmann, John F. Murphy, Thomas L. Norton, Picker, Simon H. Rifkind, Laurence and Preston Tisch, and Jay Wells.

The present board was named earlier this year at a special stockholders meeting. At that time, the Tisch brothers assumed control of the company by obtaining a majority on the board.

Legion of Decency Says Moral Re-Armament Film 'Ambiguous' Theology

Legion of Decency has given a "separate classification" of the Moral Re-Armament feature, "The Crowning Experience." The Legion, referring to MRA as "a quasi-religious movement," says the pic should be viewed by Catholics with certain reservations because it "relies too heavily upon emotional argument and because the religious expression which it gives to personal reform is theologically ambiguous."

Roman Catholic reviewing group gives separate classifications to certain films which, although they cannot be deemed "morally objectionable, require some analysis and explanation as a protection to the uninformed against wrong interpretation and false conclusions."

'EXODUS'-AND BUFFET-TIX REMAIN UNSOLD

Tom Rodgers revealed this week that there are still ducats available for the benefit showing of "Exodus" at the Warner Theatre, N. Y., next Dec. 18. It is the initial benefit for the opus and is to aid the Will Rogers Memorial.

The $25 tickets, still available in considerable numbers, include a buffet dinner at the Warwick Hotel before the show. There are also $10 and $5 ducats to be had. Tickets can be obtained at the Will Rogers office, 1501 Broadway.

Burt Solomon Promoted; Gets UA Trade Post

Burt Solomon has been named United Artists trade press representative. He succeeds Harvey Matofsky who resigned to join Joe Levine's Embassy Pictures on a film assignment abroad.

Solomon has been a publicity writer for UA since 1959. Prior to that time he was a member of the Fordham U. public relations department.

LIFE FOR 19-YEAR-OLDER

Not Allowed to Make 'Psycho' Film Part of Defense

Milwaukee, Nov. 15.

Leroy Pinkowski, 19, drew a life sentence in the state pen for killing Dianna Mae Zibolsky on Aug. 31. He admitted stabbing the 14-year old teenager in a "thrill" slaying. Municipal Judge Herbert J. Steffes, in Municipal Court, in passing sentence, described the deed as "cool, calculated, cowardly." The jury consisting of nine men and three women, after deliberating for 15 hours, came in with a verdict of first degree murder.

Judge Steffes denied three motions by Defense Attys., Peter N. Flessas and John F. Foley, representing Pinkowski, to set the verdict of the jury aside. One of the motions by the defense, held that Judge Steffes erred in refusing to allow the jury to view Paramount's "Psycho," that Pinkowski testified had been a factor in "influencing" his criminal action. Youth testified he had viewed film several times.

U-Bangy Decca

Earnings of Universal skyrocketed Decca Records' consolidated net earnings for the nine months ended Sept. 30, 1960 to $4,149,772, equal to $3.24 per share. Decca owns approximately 87% of U's shares.

The Decca nine-month earnings were greater than any full year in the company's history. In the corresponding period of 1959, Decca reported earnings of $911,260, equal to 60c per share.

3 Stooges Turn Lovable; Career In Fairy Tales

Hollywood, Nov. 15.

Chanford Productions, now preparing "Snow White and the Three Stooges" in association with 20th-Fox, has laid groundwork for a sequel to that fairytale. Chanford veepee Charles Wick, who is producing the 20th release, has registered 10 "Snow White" titles with MPAA.

"Snow White and the Three Stooges" is being blueprinted as a classic fairytale, Wick explained, noting further that the Stooges will play "lovable oafs" who act as they would have in the period depicted. Producer feels if pic clicks, it will open revitalized area for theatrical pix based on fairytales.

New titles include "The Adventures of Snow White," "The Adventures of Snow White & Prince Charming," "The Further Adventures of Snow White," "The Further Adventures of Snow White and Prince Charming," "The Return of Snow White," "The Return of Snow White and Prince Charming," "Snow White and Prince Charming Return," "Snow White Returns," "Tales of Snow White" and "Tales of Snow White and Prince Charming."

Wick anticipates no conflict between any of the titles and Walt Disney's "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" since none can be mistaken for the Disney pic. Disney protested Chanford's original "Snow White and the Three Stooges" title with MPAA, with Chanford winning rights to the tag.

Gen. Patton Biog Goes Fox Via Ricketson-Sherman

Hollywood, Nov. 15.

Frank H. Ricketson Jr. and producer-director George Sherman bought "Blood and Guts," upcoming biog of late World War II Gen. George E. Patton by Jack Pearl, for second production of their Shergari Corp., in which they are partnered. Pic is slated for 20th-Fox release and will be budgetted at $2,000,000.

Deal involves a cash payment of $25,000 for book and Pearl's screenplay, which he'll start upon his arrival from N. Y. in two weeks, plus an escalator clause up to $50,000. Tome will be published Jan. 15 by Frederick Fell.

Shergari's initial production, in which the late Ted Gamble also was a partner, was "For the Love of Mike," which 20th will release later in year. Ricketson formerly was vp in charge of theatre operations of National Theatres. Sherman last week completed production and direction chores on "The Fiercest Heart" for 20th.

Show Biz Ponders Kennedy Era

nounced he will push this bill early next year. Yet, the nets come out of the campaign with their glossiest public service image, and to them, President-Elect Kennedy probably owes his margin of victory. The wife of Lyndon B. Johnson, the Vice President-elect, owns radio and tv properties, and Sen. and Mrs. Johnson are close friends of CBS prexy Frank Stanton. It has already been indicated that Sen. Johnson will be the President-Elect's general-in-command on Capitol Hill, the operating chief over legislation for the White House.

—One of the President-Elect's first actions was to appoint James Landis to make a study of federal regulatory commissions, including FCC and the Federal Trade Commission, to determine what should be done about them. Landis served on two of them himself, the Civil Aeronautics Board and the Securities and Exchange Commission. This is a strong indication that Kennedy wants some form of reorganization of these agencies, but it is much too early to tell what he has in mind or what will be possible. This is something the broadcasting and advertising industries, as well as others, will be watching most keenly. Recently Landis was counsel for Skiatron during that pay-tv firm's troubles with SEC. Landi was once a Skiatron director.

—Although there was some shakeup in the Congressional membership after the ballot counting, there was no significant change as far as the entertainment industry is concerned. However, the only film exhibitor in Congress, Rep. Joseph W. Barr (D-Ind.), was defeated. Committees of the House and Senate most important to the entertainment industry will have no important change which would affect future legislation when compared to the last Congress.

—With Democrats in control of both the White House and Congress and a new Administration getting started, Congressional investigations will be considerably fewer. Rep. Harris, for instance, is likely to defer any further probes of the regulatory agencies until Landis finishes his job. Republicans may well want to burn some fires under the Kennedy Administration, but it isn't likely that Democrats, who control the investigating committees, will help them in 1961.

—New chairmen could normally be expected to take over both FCC and FTC soon after the Jan. 20 inaugural. Congress didn't confirm FTC Chairman Earl W. Kintner for another term, and he will go out of office as soon as his Democratic successor is appointed and confirmed. FCC Commissioner H. King, a seat warmer for the unexpired John C. Doerfer FCC term which runs only to June 30, didn't get confirmed either. His Democratic successor will probably also be designated FCC chairman, replacing Frederick W. Ford, a Republican, in the top post, although Ford will continue as a Commissioner. It is also possible that either of the two Democrats now on FCC, Robert T. Bartley and John S. Cross, could be made chairman.

—No tax reduction is in sight. This applies to legitimate and motion picture theatre admissions and all excise taxes, as well and income and corporate taxes. It is possible that some small tax reduction might be considered before the 1962 Congressional elections, but there is no hope for any in 1961.

—The Justice Dept. and its Anti-Trust Division will move into new hands, not yet known. This affects virtually all the industry, and especially broadcasting, where the option time dilemma and others are in a nervous state of affairs. Music Corp. of America has been under scrutiny by the present Anti-Trust Division, although nothing has come to a head.

—President-Elect Kennedy as a member of Congress took an especially close interest in Hoover Commission reorganization plans. He had a number of ideas of his own. It would be no surprise if he proposes extensive changes in the executive branch of Government in the days ahead.

—As a Senator, and as a Congressman before that, he supported a number of bills designed to promote interest in culture. He is behind legislation to establish a Federal Advisory Council on the Arts, and is a backer of Washington's proposed $75,000,000 National Cultural Center, among other things. He will no doubt lend his presence to the theatre and symphony concerts of Washington—a prestige boost which always swells boxoffice receipts here, if not nationally. For years, Kennedy kept a standing order at the National Theatre here for four tickets to every opening night. His brother, Robert Kennedy, and their two wives, were usually the four. The President-Elect and his wife have a very large collection of classical records and enjoy attending concerts. The musical offerings after formal White House dinners can be expected to be largely classical in ing of any Russian film was positively unAmerican.

Film Coexistence

Even before U-2, various patriotic groups around the country, including local chapters of the American Legion, had protested the showing of the films in their communities. Situation served to embarrass the distribs, who were forced to take ads to point out they were handling the pix at request of the government.

The unexciting returns from the films, however, may not all be the result of politics. According to one sales manager, the general quality and appeal of the films are such that no one of them could have turned out to be an artie blockbuster under the friendliest of conditions.

It was also suggested last week by a midwest exhibitor, in New York to buy for his string of art theatres, that the films had been promoted with something less than enthusiasm by the salesmen in the field. He recounted how he had attended a screening of one of the Soviet pix at a branch office, after lights came on, the branch manager turned to him and shrugged, "What am I supposed to do with it?" Exhib reported that film in question actually was rather good, but the fieldman didn't know it and couldn't have cared less.

It is further suggested that perhaps the major distribs are not physically or emotionally geared to handle the art type of product. Some light on this situation may be shed by the results from the forthcoming joint release by Kingsley International and M. J. P. Enterprises of "The Ballad of A Soldier," the Russian entry which was acclaimed at this year's Cannes fest (though it lost out on a prize) and took first honors at the recent San Francisco festival. Film goes out here at the end of the year.

cial footage supplied during filming, scoring the spots separately from the actual production. Spots take between four to six weeks to make.

Television campaigns are playing an increasingly important role in 20th's ad-pub thinking generally, especially in the kind of local-area "saturation" booking playoffs set for the company's family pic releases like "Tess of the Storm Country" and "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come."

Last week company sent out a memo to all branch and regional ad-pub managers alerting them to fact that about a year ago 20th acquired "an unusually attractive package of tv time at drastic discount rates." Cost of the time, available in Nov.-Dec. period on 43 stations in 41 markets in the U. S. and Hawaii, was said to be approximately 50% less than the highest possible frequency discount any advertiser can earn.

Managers were urged to take adavantage of the bargain rates available to them, and were also reminded that company would not okay expenditures for tv campaigns on any other stations in their areas as long as this time was available. Just how 20th got this time has not been disclosed, but it's understood it was acquired from Matty Fox who had acquired it earlier via one of his barter deals.

Dick Brandt's Thesis: Would Be Smart For U.S. Showmen to Back Frisco Fest

With the proper support from U.S. film industry—major distribs as well as foreign film importers—Irving M. Levin's San Francisco film fest could, within five years, grow into a major film market place, according to Richard Brandt, prexy of Trans-Lux Distributing Corp.

Brandt, who attended the fest in the course of a business trip that took him also to Hollywood and Denver, said in New York Friday (11) that major company support of the fest was necessary to attract participation by the better foreign producers. He also felt that the majors would be doing themselves a smart bit of public relations by participating, particularly with the growing competition for the film patrons' attention abroad.

But principally, Brandt said, he would like to see the Frisco event become an important (and convenient) market place where U.S. importers might gather to view new product. Most U.S. indies do not attend the Cannes or Venice or Berlin fests and thus, to them, the Frisco fest would certainly not be redundant.

Angles

Even without coordinated support from the U.S. industry, exec said, Levin has done a remarkable job thus far. With support, Brandt predicted event could attract national public interest and become an important key to the general exploitation of foreign product in the U.S. This will be the line exec takes in recommending that the Independent Film Importers & Distributors of America get behind the next Frisco affair.

Brandt reported that although the festival has so far been pretty much a one-man affair, Levin has no qualms about relinquishing his prerogatives in order to broaden the scope of the annual get-together. Brandt would also like to see the affair supported by the State Department as part of the country's overall goodwill efforts.

While on the west coast, Brandt also took time out to talk to execs of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences about IFIDA's longstanding campaign to get the rules modified which govern the eligibility of foreign language films for the annual Oscar.

Brandt said the talks had been most cordial and worth a couple of years of letter-writing between coasts. Though it's too late to get any action on the 1961 Oscars, exec said he thought there was a very good chance of some changes for the following year. He declined to say just what the changes might be, but suggested they represent a departure from the earlier suggestions made by IFIDA.

Jay Sommers inked by 20th to term writing pact, first assignment to be "Hummingbird Hill" for Sam Engel.

Segregation, As Is

High Point, N.C., Nov. 15.

Negro high school students picketed theatre here last week, protesting segregated seating. There were no arrests and no incidents of violence.

Nine Negroes from William Penn High School paraded up and down in front of the Paramount Theatre in the downtown area. They sang an anti-segregation parody to the hymn "We Shall Not Be Moved."

Arie Winfrey, assistant manager, said the theatre's policy will remain unchanged — Negroes will purchase tickets at a separate entrance provided for them and sit in the balcony. The downstairs area is reserved for white patrons, she said.

Allied, as Foreseen, In Rap Against Morbid-Sex; Other Convention Actions

Chicago, Nov. 15.

As forecast, a puritanical reaction to current wave of "adult" film themes prevailed at last week's Allied States Assn. convention here. Parley asked Motion Picture Assn. to tighten its production and advertising codes, otherwise fearing pressure group retribution. Exhibition's "little guys" articulate a conviction that the "continuing success of our industry depends on pictures of good taste."

Despite potent grosses racked up by the Hollywood sinners (e.g., "Psycho," "Suddenly Last Summer," etc.), the theatremen believe bulk of cinema patronage has indicated "time and time again that they have preferred good wholesome family type entertainment."

And they make no bones that were it not for product and print scarcities, they wouldn't have to put up with the rampant sin-and-violence celluloids. Other industryites tend to hoot at this reasoning, though, as they note the hotsy aforementioned grossers. Thus they ask, as documented previously in these trade columns, does Main Street really object—or are the exhibs just using another needle on the film companies?

Also resolved by the Chi conclave was a pitch for public intervention to spur congressional relief for theatres. Exhibs want something in the way of legislation—though not specified here—to insure "orderly release," and the hope is that a riled congress can cause distribution to forsake "monopolistic and discriminatory" practices. It's another Allied way of trying to upset the roadshow applecart, contending that a handful of playdates restricted to large urbans is cheating the bulk of the public.

On other matters, convention asked:

(1) A patchup of the National Screen Service-Columbia Pictures quarrel so as to eliminate dual trailer charges (per contracts) on Columbia product.

(2) Support for Motion Picture Investors Inc., the exhibition-backed mutual fund which plans to acquire post-'48s for largescreen reissue, in what Allied phrases as an effort to prove to film companies that more revenue can be realized from another round of theatrical showings than from sales to television.

'Exodus' Advance in Hub; Mail and Parties, $50,000

Boston, Nov. 15.

United Artists' "Exodus," skedded to open at the Saxon Theatre Dec. 21, has exceeded the record as to advance sales for road shows playing the house. To date, over $50,000 has been taken in at the b.o. in mail orders, party groups and theatre parties, Sam Richmond, general manager, reports.

Leonard Barrack, in charge of sales for "Exodus," said bookings for groups and theatre parties now extend into March of 1961. A $100 a seat preview is being set up for Congregation Temple Emanuel.

'Exodus' Advance

and $3.50. Two-a-day engagements have been set for N.Y., L.A., Chicago, Miami and Boston. The rest of the cities will offer 10 performances a week.

It was acknowledged that the bulk of the initial advance came from group sales and theatre parties. In N.Y., for example, $500,000 of the over $600,000 total came from group sales. The remaining $100,000 in individual sales resulted from mail orders and boxoffice sales. However, the boxoffice sale did not begin until Oct. 31.

William J. Heineman, UA's distribution chief, predicted that the N.Y. advance would reach $1,000,000 before the Dec. 15 opening. The boxoffice sale at the Warner Theatre, N.Y. is running between $1,500 and $1,700 daily. A total of 181 performances at the Warner have been completely sold out. Tickets are being sold through Dec. 31, 1961.

Krim told a press conference yesterday (Tues.) that the N.Y. engagement could gross $2,200,000 the first year if there is a complete sellout for each performance. The national $1,000,000 advance was said to be equal to a $2,000,000 advance in the legit theatre.

It was stressed that no discounts were allowed for group sales and theatre parties. In addition, no theatre parties were permitted Friday and Saturday engagements.

George Schaefer, Preminger's producer's representative, said the picture would open in San Francisco, Seattle, Columbus, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Houston, Pittsburgh, Washington, Cleveland, Oklahoma City, and Indianapolis shortly after the new year. He added that the picture would be playing every key city in the U.S. and Canada before the end of 1961. All engagements will be in 70m.

The boxoffice sale in Boston, Dallas, Baltimore, Miami and Kansas City starts Monday (21). According to Heineman, the first 600-line in Boston brought in orders for $36,000 worth of tickets the first seven days.

Opening dates other than N.Y. are: Chicago, Dec. 16; Baltimore, Dec. 19; L.A., Miami, Boston and Kansas City, Dec. 21; Dallas, Dec. 22; Detroit, Feb. 8.

Also attending the press conference and offering various comments on the "Exodus" advance sale were U.A. v.p. Max E. Youngstein, pub-ad v.p. Roger Lewis, national pub-ad director Fred Goldberg, and Nat Rudich, Preminger's press chief.

Schwalberg also revealed company has acquired 10 post-1948 Paramount features and will reissue them theatrically with new advertising - publicity - exploitation campaigns. Titles of pix were not listed, though Schwalberg said some of stars involved are Charlton Heston, James Cagney, John Payne and Jane Wyman. All 10 pix, he added, will be withheld from television, explaining further that Omat currently is negotiating with other major studios for similar re-release rights. "We feel that with new campaigns and, in some instances, new and better titles, these features afford the exhibitors as well as ourselves added product and profit," Schwalberg pointed out.

Aim of the company, execs noted, is to increase supply of feature motion pictures available to U.S. hibs. "To accomplish this," he went on, "we will produce new pictures, purchase new and unreleased films, and acquire still others for re-release."

First new pic for Omat will be reactivated "Brotherhood of Evil," which is slated to roll in New York after Jan. 1. Beck will coproduce with Omat prexy Lester Braunstein. Ben Hecht adapted from Frederick Sondern Jr.' book. Pic was to have starred James Mason, who withdrew due to illness early this year. Subsequent problems shelved pic, costing Omat reported $100,000.

Jules Verne as His Own Hero—

Add two more entries in the Jules Verne boxoffice derby cited in the Sept. 28 VARIETY lead story. Producer Charles Schneer is now at work in London putting finishing touches on Columbia's "Mysterious Island," based on the Verne novel which was written as a sequal to "20,000 Leagues Under The Sea." Out in Hollywood, producer-director Irwin Allen is busy prepping Verne's "Five Weeks in a Balloon" for a production start next July.

Meanwhile, American International is winding up production of Verne's "Master of The World" and planning "In The Year 2889." Point of the earlier VARIETY piece was that three Verne properties ("Around The World in 80 Days," "20,000 Leagues," "Journey to The Center of The Earth") have grossed approximately $70,000,000 worldwide since 1954, and the lesson is not being lost on filmmakers.

State-Owned Video Rejects Theatres' Anti-Sabbath Trailer

Toronto, Nov. 15.

Despite the turndown of a tv trailer by the State-owned Canadian Broadcasting Cor on th showing of Sunday films in Ontario, representatives of the chains and independent theatre-owners bombarded (14) the 13 cities and towns where plebiscite will be voted on Dec. 12. These include Toronto, Windsor, Oshawa, Brantford, St. Catherines, North Bay, Kitchener etc., and other Ontario communities holding th Sunday movies referendum.

These are flooded with an allout campaign which ludes theatre trailers, three-sheets, lobby display and wicket cards, plus radio announcements now in preparation for immediate release to be carried by local commercial stations. Campaign is backed by Famous Players (Canadian), the Odeon Theatres (Canada) Ltd., the Taylor interests, the indies—and th projectionists union.

Film Posters' Display

Richard Griffith, curator of the film division of New York's Museum of Modern Art, disclosed plans for an exhibit of motion picture poster art to take place at the museum next month. Further, the museum will publish a book reproducing outstanding pic posters over the years.

Griffith outlined the plans before a meeting in N. Y. last week of the ad-pub directors committee of the Motion Picture Assn. of America. Promotion execs said they were high on the idea and promised full cooperation.

Studied Widely, Then Set North Star Ozoner; Curved Screen for 70m

Denver, Nov. 15.

Construction has started on the largest drive-in theatre in the Rocky Mountain area. To be called the North Star, it will be number seven in the Compass group operated by Wolfberg Theatres who also operate the 2,100-seat Paramount in downtown Denver.

Tom Smiley, Wolfberg general manager, says the theatre, which is expected to cost in excess of $400,000 will be constructed in the new amphitheatre style for perfect viewing of the 134 by 60 foot curved screen and equipped to take of 70m projection.

Before final plans were approved, Smiley and L. J. Albertini, the firm's drive-in district manager, toured the entire country to obtain latest ideas of construction and operation to incorporate in the new project, spending most of last summer inspecting drive-in theatres and operation techniques.

ABC VENDING ADDS TRI-STATE AUTOMATIC

ABC Vending Corp., one of America's largest consessionaires and operators of automatic vending machines, and a prominent part of the theatrical sideline business, has acquired full ownership of Tri-State Automatic Candy Corp. Latter, which had been owned 50% by ABC, operates principally in New York, Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

ABC last year had sales of $66,094,057. Tri-State's gross was $3,000,000. These figures are official and obviously demonstrate the fiscal potency of the concession enterprise.

Melvyn Berman, general manager of Tri-State, will continue in this capacity as well as a director of ABC, according to ABC board chairman Benjamin Shorman.

cent MGM vidpix series, "Northwest Passage" and "Thin Ma ."

Jaffe is now in Italy setting up studio facilities for spring kick-off of pic.

Although the "Damon & Pythias" tale is in public domain, of course, Marx said last night his firm and MGM have a clear shot at subject, as he quietly registered that title with MPAA last July and sewed up priority on it.

SMELL IS MISSING; 'WALL' GOES STRAIGHT

The sweet smell of success may not lie in Aromarama as far as Continental Distributing's "Behind The Great Wall" is concerned. Picture, an Italian-made travelog on Red China, played three dates early this year in the theatre-scent process, to returns which obviously did not warrant further dates.

Picture opened Thursday (10), sans smells, at the Apex theatre in Washington and broke the house record. Continental execs already have set two more scentless engagements, in Philadelphia and Baltimore, and plan to bring the pic back to a New York art house.

Two Classed-Up Nabes For Des Moines Roadies

Des Moines, Nov. 15.

The motion picture business has gone plush here. Tri-States Theatre Corp. is reopening its remodeled and redecorated Ingersoll (neighborhood) house with 20th's "Can-Can" on a two shows a day basis at $1.50 matinee and $2 night top. With a new front, wall-to-wall screen, new seats, carpeting, lighting, draperies, etc., going to the movies will now be in orbit with the snazzy shopping centers.

The Capri is also new. This is the former Uptown nabe that had been shuttered for so long. Robert L. Fridley as coowner and manager (also of the Varsity theatre) declares redecorating of the Capri cost approximately $110,000. This is the first and only theatre in the state to be equipped for 70m and Todd-AO productions. Opening with Metro's "Ben-Hur," the Capri will do a mail-order "all seats reserved" business at a $2 top. In addition to night performances there will be matinees on Wednesdays, Saturdays and Sundays.

TV'S 'SUDDEN DEATH' LAMENT

ABC Goes Through the Rating Roof In Latest Nielsen 24-City Report

ABC-TV has gone through the roof on the latest Nielsen 24-city ratings, covering the week ended Nov. 6. Web jumped up to a 20.4 average audience mark with a 38.8% share for the periods between 6:30-11 p.m. on Sunday and 7:30-11 Monday through Saturday.

That constitutes a better than three-point rating spread over its nearest rival, CBS-TV, which has a 17.3 average and 32.4% share. NBC is far behind in the sweepstakes, with 14.9 rating and 28.3% share. It's by far the best ABC showing ever in the competitive market results.

It may also translate itself into ABC's best National Nielsen ever when the Nov. 1 report is released. The current 24-city covers the second week of the upcoming national, and this, coupled with a strong ABC victory in the 24-city report the week before (ended Oct. 30) means a certain national upbeat for ABC.

Not only does ABC go through the roof on ratings in the Nov. 6 24-city report, it grabs off 22 of the top 40 shows and 32 of the 51 half-hour wins. Top 40 scorecard reads 22 for ABC, 13 for CBS and five for NBC. Half-hour wins finds ABC copping more than the combined total of the opposition, 32, vs. 11 for CBS and eight for NBC. Ditto nights of th week—ABC ins four, ties one (Sunday), while CBS gets one plus the Sunday tie and NBC keeps one. ABC wins Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, CBS Saturday and NBC Wednesday.

Week earlier, ABC copped a 19.8 average rating, with a 36.5% share; CBS had a 17.2 and 31.9% share; NBC a 17.1 and 31.5% share. This, of course, added to the wer report, will reflect the period for the next National Nielsen. While the previous National Nielsen results didn't come up to the expectancy of the 24-city reports for the same period, there was a good reason—the nationals didn't reflect delayed broadcasts, far more frequent on ABC than the other webs.

For example, the last National Nielsen report covered the period ended Sunday, Oct. 16. Where a show preemed, say, on Friday, the 14th, only those delayed broadcasts through Sunday were counted in the rating. Those after Sunday were carried over into the rating in the next report. Consequently, even if the 24-city results were the same, the next National would show increased strength for ABC on the basis of the first delays of the new shows.

Another factor not directly indicated by the National Nielsens is the matter of costs as they are reflected in station lineups. Though ABC is penalized in the new National Nielsen setup by the use of a national base in terms of rating points, fact remains that it is delivering those ratings on shorter lineups.

CBS-TV Sports Coin

CBS-TV posted the SRO sign on its 13-week "Sunday Sports Spectacular" series which kicks off Jan. 8 in the 2:30-4 p.m. slot. Web sold out the last quarter-sponsorship to Carter Products and Bristol-Myers, which are picking up an eighth each.

Earlier, CBS had sold one-half to Schlitz and one-quarter to L&M Filters. Carter deal set via SSC&B, B-M via Young & Rubicam.

NBC Yens 'House' Telepix, Starts 2 Series for '61-'62

NBC-TV is again moving in the direction of internal production. It's termed the biggest buildup "from within" since Pat Weaver's days at the head of the network.

Program veep David Levy's department has in the past year or hired several new production people, principal among them Gene Burr in New York and Frank Telford in Hollywood. (The department has a manpower budget reputedly in the $500,000 a year category.) At the beginning of this year, it seemed the buildup was to ride closer herd on outside production, but as it is evolving the department is doing its own work.

Web is making its own replacement for the cancelled Screen Gems' hour, "Dan Raven." Taking the Friday night 7:30 slot in January this season will be a retitled version of the web's pilot, "The Blue & The Gray," Telford is producing the series of Civil War action-adventure yarns under the new monicker of "The Americans."

Besides this, Levy has decided to

EARLY LOPOFFS INVITE ULCERS

By GEORGE ROSEN

When a network decides to cancel out shows within a month after the premiere of a new season (in fact after only three exposures) as NBC has done with "Dan Raven" and "Riverboat," (although latter is a carryover from last season) it might well spark a trend that could revolutionize the whole pattern of tv.

Such action in serving notice on shows after three weeks is without precedent in networking; as, too, was the NBC decision, similarly after a three-time exposure, to go ahead with a second 13-week go-round on the 60-minute Shirley Temple series and the hour "Thriller" mysteries. The point is that NBC might just as well have gone the other way, as in the case of "Riverboat" and "Raven," and to determine the fate of programs within a three-week span (as opposed to the theory that it takes from 13 to 26 weeks for a show to prove its mettle and hit a proper momentum) has already sent a cold shudder through the Hollywood tv production studios.

Such action, it's conceded, could invite a 52-week selling and programming season, with a continuing turnover in shows—a frightening prospect for the industry, and particularly the studios involved in turning out the entries.

The distress it has occasioned around Four Star, Screen Gems, Revue (to name but three of the major packagers) is understandable, ince a "Riverboat" and a "Raven," both hour entries, tote up cumulatively, to an $8,000,000 seasonal budget. And had NBC gone the other way and lopped off Shirley Temple and "Thriller," it would have meant another $8,000,000. That's tall coin—even at today's going production prices. On the basis that "it might have happened to us" (and in the case of Revue, which produces "Riverboat," it did), the alarms have already been translated into emer-

NBC's Affils Converge on N.Y. For Annual Meet; Few Gripes on Tap In Wake of Ratings, 'News Story'

NBC-TV couldn't have picked a better time than this week to spring its annual sell for station affiliates. Network today (Wed.) starts its two-day annual meeting in New York's Hotel Plaza for station officials.

Event comes hard by NBC News' critical and rating victory in last week's election night coverage, through and for which it won 51% of the total national audience and the acclaim of most of the major tv critics. Affil conclave also convenes at a time when the new Nielsens show that last year's backrunner NBC is now breathing down leader CBS's tv neck in the initial nightly rundowns.

But the network didn't plan it this way. November is the traditional month for the NBC tv and radio networks to hold the affiliate meetings, because NBC started in business in 1926 during November. The current situation proves perhaps that tradition is not always bad.

Yet as background to this year's conclave is the general knowledge that NBC-TV is not sold out for the first six months of 1961. If the gaps in the prime time sales picture remain, it will naturally hurt the earnings of NBC-TV affiliated stations, each of which gets roughly a third of the dollar a network advertiser is supposed to spend in its market. Since the network figures it'll pick up billings steam for the Jan.-June period within the next couple of weeks, the belief — if expressed to affiliates — might, in tandem with the upbeat ratings and news stories, suppress or eliminate any major affiliate griping.

On the radio side (the radio network opens the show this morning), there appears to be a consistently upbeat story to tell. Web, having trimmed its operation markedly in the last year, has not only turned what it claims is a minor profit for itself for the first time in nearly a decade, but it had

Hunt Stromberg Jr. has been handed his stripes at CBS-TV and becomes v.p. in charge of program development, Hollywood. He's been director of program development for the past year and with CBS since '57.

Son of the late filmmaker, Stromberg was earlier program director at KABC-TV, Hollywood and general manager of ABC's Pacific regional network.

Disney May Stay At ABC After All As NBC Talks Bog

Hollywood, Nov. 15.

Despite their past differences, legal and otherwise, the possibility is strengthened by recent negotiations that Walt Disney may renew with ABC when the current seven-year contract expires next September. After weeks of discussions in N.Y. between Disney and the top echelon of NBC, little progress has been made and nothing of a definite nature arrived at, according to sources close to the negotiators.

Disney's affinity for color is said to have advantaged NBC in the dealings but it is known that Leonard Goldenson, AB-PT prexy, has the greenlight from the network board to prepare for color if in his judgment, the time is ripe. He has not made known his decision.

It has been said at the network that the web can convert to color within six months and that

Metrecal Buying Churchill Series

A brand new network tv sponsor is on the verge of closing with ABC-TV for the network's Winston Churchill telefilm series. Mead & Johnson, makers of Metrecal, the reducing formula, are reportedly coming in for the entire tab on the Sunday (10:30-11 p.m.) program.

This would mean that Mead & Johnson, represented by the Kenyon & Eckhardt agency, is buying between 18 and 20 full half-hours.

Bell & Howell originally contracted for eight of the 26 Churchills, which are being prepared by the network's regular program department. But, in order to supply cash for "Close Up," a more out and out pubaffairs effort, Bell & Howell will only continue its sponsorship until the end of December. Slack will be more than picked up by Mead & Johnson.

L&M Cuts Back On ABC 'Islanders'

Liggett & Myers is withdrawing from ABC-TV's "Islanders" the amount of $1,000,000 in net business for the remainder of the season. After the first of 1961, the ciggie bankroller has decided to cut back its alternate week hour to a half-hour alternate week buy.

"Islanders" is a new stanza and holds the 9:30-10:30 p.m. time Sundays over ABC-TV. McCann-Erickson, the L&M agency, has not decided where, if anyplace, it's going to put the coin for the remainder of the '60-'61 season.

With all its discounts, L&M has been paying approximately $150,000 a show in time and talent for its alternate week hour of "Islanders." Consequently the withdrawal of 13 half-hour sponsorships translates into the near $1,000,000 loss to ABC-TV for the Jan.-Sept. period of '61.

Culver Wants Relief On 'Dante,' Stanwyck

Alberto Culver is reportedly seeking relief from its back-to-back Monday buys, "Dante" and "Barbara Stanwyck Theatre," on NBC-TV. Since the sponsor of the two half-hours is unhappy about the ratings and since Culver happens to have firm contract for another several weeks, it apparently would like to shift some or all its coin into another of the net's stanzas.

Culver, handled via Compton agency, owns half of each of the stanzas. "Dante" is at 9:30 p.m., Miss Stanwyck at 10 p.m.

BPA's 'Shirtsleeves' Convention All Meat With No 'Abstractions'; Sarnoff Pitches Pubaffairs Push

By GEORGE ROSEN

New Orleans, Nov. 15.

The Broadcasters' Promotion Assn. annual Powwow, more so this year than ever before, has taken on the character of a "Little NAB convention." In some respects, it is serving an even more useful and meaningful purpose in its "shirtsleeves format." Unlike the parent organization's "talking in the abstract," the delegates here from all parts of the country (and this is a record turnout for the group) are a dedicated lot, with a sensible, down-to-earth approach to the day-to-day problems of achieving the maximum mileage from their respective promotional forays.

In some respects, too, this is the most significant of all BPA conventions, with a classic stroke of timing as an industry afterpiece to the national elections. Thus NBC Board Chairman Robert W. Sarnoff's keynote remarks were of the essence, "cueing i " the future strategy for a more enlightened industry with a keener awareness of its responsibilities, and for the promotion standard-bearers particular.

In effect Sarnoff told the promotion men of the vital role they are now in a position to play in the new era of broadcasting when, along with the tv debates, informational and cultural shows are projecting the industry into a newfound status of preeminence and prestige. "I realize," he said, "that you do not have the responsibility of programming your stations. But to the extent to which you may be able to make your voice heard, you have a professional axe to grind for these programs. If you are doing your job properly, you are not only concerned with audience promotion for your station but with promoting your station with your audience."

Sarnoff asked them bluntly what are they doing to develop attention toward their public affairs shows. "In your eagerness to beat the drums for high-powered entertainment attractions, are you giving short shrift to information shows?

"And when you do promote public affairs shows, are you applying your maximum skill and ingenuity?"

The techniques of audience promotion, Sarnoff explained, "have been matured into a persuasive art, but until now have been concentrated upon entertainment. In most instances, he added, these techniques can't effectively apply to informational shows, but such programs often can benefit from special, imaginative treatment by promotion personnel. "Our promotion people at NBC," he said, "have been studying the specialty of building audiences for these programs, and I have asked them to sit down with you in your shirtsleeves sessions and give you the ideas and techniques they have developed."

Triggered by the comment that "there is a new awareness of broadcasting power not only to amuse, relax and engross us, but to enlighten us and help us govern

'American Forum' Not News Program Under Sec. 315, FCC Rules

Federal Communications Commission has ruled that "American Forum of the Air" does not qualify as a news program exempt from the equal time requirement of section 315.

FCC backed the demand of Herbert W. Hill, New Hampshire Democratic Senatorial contender, for time over WBZ-TV, Boston, equal to that given his opponent, Sen. Styles Bridges, on "American Forum." WBZ-TV had denied Hill's request on grounds the program was a news show exempt from Sec. 315 by the 1958 equal time amendments. In a wire to WBZ-TV the FCC gave no explanation of its stand.

Nix Vt. 315 Beef

Burlington, Vt., Nov. 15.

The Federal Communications Commission has turned down a request by Vermont Democrats for a formal hearing on complaints that radio station WCAX in this city refused equal services, facilities and cooperation for the Democrats during the election campaign.

A Democratic spokesman announced, however, that his party had filed "additional evidence" with the FCC and had renewed the request for a hearing.

The Democrats charged originally that WCAX failed to give equal facilities and cooperation for the Burlington visit of the Democratic standard bearer, Sen. John F. Kennedy, that were accorded his Republican opponent, Vice President Richard M. Nixon, when he came here late in September.

Nickel-Laden Celebs Flock to Automat As Benny Throws a Party

All it takes to win friends and influence the press is a little imagination, an appeal to the intriguing. Which sums up the sock Jack Benny party at the Automat on 5th Ave. & 45th St. in N.Y. last Thursday night (10).

Turnout of several hundred stars, celebs, CBS execs and newsmen, each with their wives supplied with $2 worth of nickels (with Benny at the change counter, handing the rolled coins to the gents and bussing the prettier ladies), testified to the appeal to the incongruous. And the battery of wire service and magazine photogs to the publicity values inherent in the idea.

Adding to the incongruity was the mixture of business wear and formal black-tie turnout. Invites read black tie, but word was out this was a gag and not meant to be taken seriously. But most of the guests did just that, figuring a party at the Automat just wouldn't be a party unless it were black tie too.

Another of the more incongruous sights was the presence of Toots Shor at the Automat. Natch, the photogs posed him against the "crumbum"—the bread & buns—dispensers. And Shor's crack was the best of the evening—"Kennedy is in only one day and already the rich people are eating at the Automat."

Celeb roster included Rosalind Russell, Bennett Cerf, Tony Franciosa, Helen Hayes, Polly Bergen, Dina Merrill, Joey Adams, Red Buttons, Audrey Meadows, Arthur Hornblow, Ed Sullivan, John Crosby, to name a few. CBS included program veeps Oscar Katz and Mike Dann, biz affairs v.p. Spence Harrison, and ex-CBS program v.p. Harry Ommerle (now a veep at SSC&B). Rogers & Cowan and CBS-TV press info handled the arrangements for Benny and Irving Fein, his chief factotum.

Setup included a dance band, with floor space cleared for the event, and high point in the comedies dept. was Benny's posing for the photogs with a chimp, Kokomo Jr., in a series of gag pix, including the chimp wielding a violin. CBS brought along its 485 Madison Ave. doorman, Mike Donovan, to give the Horn & Hardart chain another "first."

Election Nite: The Scoop & Scope

For an allnight stand in the news format, television webs could hardly have expected the Alfred Hitchcock touch. But they got it while chronicling the 1960 Presidential election results, the closest of the century and one of the most fascinating news shows tv is likely ever to present.

It was a now-he's-got-it followed by a maybe-he-doesn't situation which held audiences through the bedtime hours to the apparent delight of the sponsors in their open end arrangements.

Actual presentation of the news was solidly first class by both NBC and CBS. Regrettably, ABC did a less polished job which seemed to have less effort behind it.

Ed Murrow, who was ill and missed the big night, might have made a difference for CBS which missed his analysis of the meaning of the running developments. As it was, NBC seemed to pace its rivals in both the scoop and scope departments. The NBC newsmen who handled different areas of the nation did commendable jobs of explaining the returns in an easily understandable manner, and seemed to be ahead of CBS more than behind with the latest figures.

The electronic brains used by the three nets again raised serious question as to their value. The fact that the patterns of this election (by far the closest since such electronic wonders were devised) didn't follow normal courses confused the machines, of course. This is to give an excuse as to why they erred so often, but is no excuse for why they should have been used in the first place. At best, they confused televiewers, and made the webs look a little silly. They should, in fact, be good source material for comedians.

All in all, tv journalism distinguished itself again with a superior delivery of news as it happened. There probably weren't many—if any—newsrooms of daily newspapers that night without a tv set on. Tv was doing too good a job to be ignored by anyone interested in election news.

TV's Election Role Should Earn It Fewer D.C. Headaches: McCollough

By JAY LEWIS

Washington, Nov. 15.

Broadcasting's big role in the Presidential race should armor the industry against any efforts this year to shackle it with governmental controls.

This was the optimistic note sounded by Policy Committee Chairman Clair R. McCollough, of National Assn. of Broadcasters at the sixth of NAB's regional Fall Conferences opening at the Statler-Hilton here Monday (14).

Addressing the first major conclave of broadcasters since the election, McCollough, acting head of NAB, declared that the industry now shed its apologetic, defensive attitudes and take the offensive.

The "attentiveness of the American people" to the campaign coverage and the fair way it was handled, said McCollough, should "implant firmly in the minds of most reluctant observers that broadcasting is a preponderant power in our society; that it requires sensitive administration by fair-minded men and women; and that tampering with its traditional freedom of action is a form of social sabotage against the people themselves."

Broadcasters showed they be "fair and want to be fair without being told to do so" under the freedom from equal time restrictions Congress gave them for the Presidential and Vice Presidential campaigns this year, McCollough said. He added:

"If one can be fair at the national level, does it not follow that he is able to apply the same yardsticks of impartiality at the local and state levels?"

McCollough said there already are signs broadcasting may be entering a period of "new freedom"

WMCA 'Pirates' a Nixon Feed on Election, But Management Is 'Sorry'

Like most of N. Y.'s other big radio indies on Election night, WMCA had monitors of the CBS-TV, ABC-TV and NBC-TV coverage near or in the studio, just to make sure they didn't miss any important news. But, according to the station's management, one

Did TV Spell the Difference?

By ART WOODSTONE

There's a growing conviction that without television, Sen. John F. Kennedy would probably have lost the election that he won by so fractional a margin. It certainly accounted for more than the fourtenths of a point he won by.

He himself feels he would have lost were there no "debates."

Astute political writers still consider his televised meetings with Richard M. Nixon the most important single instrument the Democrat had for projecting his previously little known personality and for "closing the maturity gap." Television also helped the Republican, but it is now believed that Nixon had less to gain than his rival from the four "debates."

How important television was to be for both of the leading candidates is shown by their postures prior to Election Day. In the early days of April, when the President-elect was preparing his primary campaigns, he and his father, Joseph Kennedy, told a high-ranking NBC official that video was to be the "not-so secret weapon"; Kennedy, the son, was depending on it.

The value Nixon placed on television is clear from his decision to perform in a four-hour "Dial Dick Nixon" telethon during the 11th hour over ABC-TV and from his earlier decision to avoid a fifth meeting in network time with Kennedy, because the "debates" seemed already to have offered more to Kennedy.

Personality, Not Issues

The use of television by the two candidates offers for the industry and for politicians the basis for ample reflection on its further use in campaigns.

Five years ago Nixon told an audience of radio and television executives at the Hotel Roosevelt that "the great number of voters vote only names not platforms," thus acknowledging that personality, not issues, is the deciding factor in politicking.

Then, as it is now, the Vice President's statement was interpreted as a warning that television had no more strength than the business of politics itself: It could not make voters dwell on issues, but it could sway audiences by personality, and, obviously, sway them millions at a time.

The political writers of 1960 ascribe to television the power to project an image. But they seem to have said in the last few weeks that neither television nor personal appearances has the strength to dispel long bred political biases. The four video meetings of Kennedy and Nixon, according to the writers, did not change the minds of voters prone to Nixon or Republicanism, nor did they weaken the resolve the faction predisposed toward Kennedy or the Democrats. Television does not yet seem able to overcome prejudice.

The issues on television by the now new President and the old Vice President were inconclusive, sometimes vague. Talk of Quemoy and Matsu, Cuba, gross national product, farm policy revision and the prestige (up or down) of the United States didn't singly or collectively seem to have altered the original biases of two-thirds of the electorate. Polls cannot be decisive when there are so many imponderables, but the polls suggest that this majority appreciably held the same positions after the tv meetings as before.

The remaining third of the country, according to the pollsters, was undecided before the first tv "debate." It would be unfair to assume that they got any more profound knowledge out of the fragmentized televised meetings of Nixon and Kennedy than the two thirds that had made up its mind beforehand.

However, many of the undecided voters (the main exception being the ones misleadingly grouped in this catchall category, who decided not to vote at all) seem to have been influenced by the personality

GOP Outspent Dems on Webs

The Republicans outspent the Democrats more than three-to-two for network television time during the recent campaign. Gross billings to the GOP by the webs amounted to about $1,640,000 compared with $1,050,000 for the Democrats.

CBS-TV got the lion's share of the political coin—$1,201,400, with the Democrats buying $429,200 and the Republicans $772,200. NBC's total was $937,991 of which $486,460 was Democratic and $451,531 was Republican. ABC-TV billed the Democrats for $137,650 and the Republicans for $420,650.

The figures were preliminary estimates and may be revised later.

TV 'Exceptional' In Election: Ford

Washington, Nov. 15.

Federal Communications Commission Chairman Frederick W. Ford said today that FCC's political broadcasts questionnaires will show that the industry did "quite an exceptional" job during the recent campaign.

"I believe that even the industry will be surprised," Ford told a luncheon, winding up the sixth regional fall conference of the National Assn. of Broadcasters.

The questionnaires dispatched to all radio and tv licensees will result in the most comprehensive survey of broadcasters' performance during a political campaign. If the results are as forecast by Ford, industry's arguments for complete freedom from equal time onus will even be more strongly bulwarked.

'APPELLATE STATUS' FOR FCC?

'TV-Tailor Campaigns': Sarnoff

New Orleans, Nov. 15.

In an age when television has become the major instrument in waging a Presidential campaign and when the whole mechanism of informing has been drastically altered, the political timetable in the U. S. is as much a relic as the buggy whip and the time has come for a thorough streamlining of the calendar of the quadrennial campaign, NBC board chairman Robert W. Sarnoff told the annual convention here of the Broadcasters' Promotion Assn.

Thus, said Sarnoff, there is need to shed the archaic routines and the century-old timetable, toward achieving a much needed modernizing. In the opinion of the NBC board chairman, the political conventions could become far more effective if, keyed to a tv-tempered era, they were rescheduled not only to occupy fewer days and fewer hours each day, but to make more fruitful use of the hours when Americans are willing and able to watch. Why not, he suggested, hold the national political conventions late in August and thereby shorten future campaigns by at least six weeks? It would, he maintained, reduce enormous costs: cut down extraordinary strain and drain on the candidates, and invite closer concentration of public attention on the essential issues. "We hav lagged too long," he added.

In Sarnoff's opinion "the most striking single achievement of broadcasting in reversing the fortunes of a year ago" (quiz scandals, etc.) is the expanded role of tv and radio in the vital national task of choosing a President. "We have almost overnight gained general recognition that broadcasting is the major instrument in waging a Presidential campaign."

Chamberlain the perpetuation of the debates, Sarnoff revealed that he wired the two candidates on Oct. 11 to get some assurances as to '64, but neither candidate replied.

Time Marches On—Right Into ABC's Bell & Howell Pubaffairs Production

Time Inc. exec Robert Drew has been hired to produce three to six "Close-Up" public affairs programs on ABC-TV for sponsor Bell & Howell. At present Drew, who has already done a one-hour show on Cuba for the network series, is still a Time Inc. executive, which appears to mean that ABC will end a traditional web policy of never hiring outside help to produce pubaffairs programming.

Time was "introduced" to the network by sponsor reps.

Drew's new assignment, going to start Dec. 7 with the Cuba show replacing an ABC-made study on African Communism called "Red & Black," is tied to Time Inc.'s desire to get back into the film production picture, this time vi public affairs programming. Time owns four tv stations but has not been engaged in film production since the old days of "March of Time."

December date for Drew's Cuba show comes from high sources, but ABC added yesterday (Tues.) afternoon that the deal is not absolutely set. Earlier in the day, ABC News denied all knowledge of " y man named Drew." Then, late in the afternoon, after VARIETY had checked several times and had received several ABC evasions, the web changed its mind and decided the story was true, releasing it for general consumption.

It's possible that Drew's unit may more less become an ABC contract group, that is it would hold a quasi-staff status. But this will not negate Time's active participation, it is reported.

Bell & Howell initially contracted with ABC-TV to sponsor 20 "Close-Up" specials this season, but it will probably end up with 25 before the season is over. Many of the new ones, including the present Cuba study, come under Drew's aegis. Deal was negotiated by ABC programming, not ABC News.

NLRB Upholds AFTRA Charges Vs. Corinthian

Sacramento, Nov. 15.

National Labor Relations Board has issued complaint against Corinthian Broadcasting's KXTV, upholding AFTRA charges of unfair labor practices and setting a Dec. 6 hearing before an NLRB trial examiner.

Ten AFTRA employees and 36 NABET workers struck the CBS affiliate Sept. 26.

NLRB regional examiner Robert Yates, who issued the complaint, supported AFTRA five main charges, including:

(1) KXTV withdrew authority of designated bargaining reps; (2) KXTV shifted bargaining position; (3) KXTV "bargained directly and individually with employees"; (4) KXTV "unilaterally" changed existing wage rates and conditions; (5) KXTV used "dilatory and evasive tactics" in refusing to give economic data to union.

With AFTRA charges headed for formal hearing, NABET withdrew its NLRB charges against KXTV pending AFTRA case's outcome.

Atlass Critically Ill

Les Atlass, 66, vet broadcaster and ex-CBS viceprez here, was reported critical today (Tues.) in Miami Beach with a heart ailment. He has a long history of cardiac trouble, having weathered several attacks in recent years.

Atlass stepped out as WBBM radio-tv topper last Dec. 31, having reached the web's compulsory retirement age.

It Cost Too Much To 'See America'

Ed Sullivan is cancelling his projected one-a-month "See America" tape-remote outings after two shows, San Francisco and Chicago. Reason that they're both too time-consuming and too costly.

Chi show a week ago Sunday (6), for example, required better than two weeks of taping, and Sullivan felt that this hurt the quality of his regular New York-based shows in the interval. As to the expense, each remote involved hiring of extra crews and directors, apart from added costs of the remote facilities setups and the heavy star payments.

MAGNUSON WANTS 'ADMINISTRATOR'

Washington, Nov. 15.

Look for an important effort to be made by Senate Commerce Committee Chairman Warren Magnuson (D-Wash.) early in 1961 to enact a reorganization of the Federal Communications Commission providing for an administrator to handle all the day-to-day work, with Commissioners acting only to resolve rulemaking and appeals of decisions made by the administrator.

Some of the details involved in such shakeup of Commission functions are yet to be worked out, but Magnuson is sold on the basic idea of relieving Commissioners of much of the timetaking work they have had since FCC was created.

The idea of the "administrator" setup, with the Commission transformed into an appellate board, was first advanced to Magnuson by Leonard H. Marks, broadcasting attorney in Washington, when Marks was president of the Federal Communications Bar Assn. more than a year ago.

Magnuson has announced that his committee, which acts first on all broadcasting bills in the Senate, will undertake a study of the Federal regulatory agencies early in 1961. While the attitude of other committee members remains unknown, Magnuson believes more efficiency would result from the authoriation of an administrator with extensive powers to make decisions (a setup like the Federal Aviation Agency, for example) for several of the commissions and boards, including FCC.

Complicating the legislative outcome of any reorganization of FCC or other regulatory agencies is President-Elect John F. Kennedy's action in naming James Landis to study those agencies for him and tell him what should be done about them. Landis is a former Harvard law school dean and chairman at different times of the Civil Aeronautics Board and the Securities and Exchange Commission. He also more recently has been counsel for Skiatron during the SEC probe of the pay-tv firm. Landis has served on Skiatron's board of directors.

Considerable guesswork is underway on Landis' philosophy concerning the regulatory agencies. It is widely assumed he will want to increase the "judicial" tone, possibly buying the old idea of making commissioners federal judges. But that is only speculation asto Landis' idea as things now stand.

It is obvious that Landis has some preconceived notions about the regulatory agencies, which he has sold, in part at least, to Kennedy in advance. Otherwise, it is odd that Kennedy would assign Landis such a job as one of his first actions after being elected President. There are many other matters of considerable more urgency for the President-Elect — such as settling on his Budget Bureau director—which would normally precede the launching of a study of regulatory agencies.

Whenever the Landis report comes, it may well go to Congress with the endorsement of the White House. And this could upset Sen Magnuson's plan, assuming, of course, that the Landis and Magnuson proposals differ.

FLETCHER MARKLE IN 20TH TV PACT

Hollywood, Nov. 15.

Fletcher Markle, longtime associated with Hubbell Robinson at CBS-TV and the current "Thriller" series, has been signed to a producer contract with 20th-Fox-TV by Roy Huggins, veepee in charge of production.

His first assignment is to alternate with Herbert Hirschman on the production of "Hong Kong" until he draws a permanent post as producer of one of the new series in preparation. While with CBS-TV he was producer of "Life With Father" and "Studio One."

CBS-TV Runs Into $13,000,000 Worth of Sponsor Cancellations In Early-Season Disillusionment

VARIETY

Some hefty chinks are beginning to show in CBS-TV's pre-season 99% primetime SRO now that the season is in high gear. In fact, computed on an annual basis, about $13,000,000 worth of time and program chinks.

That's the tally on 13-week cancellations received by Columbia on some of the weaker segments of its program schedule. Big losers are "Witness," "Aquanauts" and "Person to Person." Earlier, the "Father Knows Best" reruns also got a key sponsor cancellation.

"Witness" takes the biggest beating, losing three-quarters of its sponsors by Jan. 1. Defectors are Helene Curtis, Esquire Boot Polish and Schick Razors. The Esquire and Schick cancellations had been expected, but not Curtis. Latter keeps its skip-week on "To Tell the Truth" Monday nights.

"Aquanauts" loses half its weekly sponsors, with Kellogg dropping its two weekly minutes and General Foods its one. That's three out of a weekly six. "Aquanauts" has been making a small dent in "Wagon Train," but apparently—at least from the Kellogg and GF standpoint—not enough to justify a program charge hike by CBS that takes effect the first of the year.

"P to P" loses its one steady sponsor, Polaroid, come mid-December. Polaroid had bought one-third of the show on a comparatively longterm basis, with short one-minute buys filling in the rest. CBS had hoped to hold Polaroid as the basis for year-round retention of the show, with shorttermers filling in the other two-thirds. But now, show's books are blank after the first of the year, when the balance of the shortterm stuff runs out and Polaroid checks off. "Father Knows Best" lost a third of its sponsorship last week when Bristol-Myers gave its cancellation notice.

All the situations reflect trouble spots in the web's program sked, particularly Thursday, where "Witness" and "P to P" hold forth. "Aqua" is primarily a cost-per-to husband problem, and "Father" has been generally disappointing as the leadoff show on Tuesdays. These aren't the only trouble spots —"Mr. Garlund" (renamed "The Garlund Touch" this week) is in plenty of hot water, but Plymouth and L&M are tied to a 26-week deal and though unhappy haven't yet made an effort to get out of their deals.

WGN's Half-Hour Newscasts Spark Chi Rating Race

Chicago, Nov. 15.

WGN-TV's rating gains with its "Tenth Hour News," a half-hour nightly roundup incepted last May, may put some competitive vita- back into the 10 p.m. timeslot in this market. Once the scrappiest local period here, the quarter hour beginning at 10 has been dominated by WBBM-TV news for the past four years. WNBQ has been running a fair second with its newscast, and the feature films on the other stations (until WGN-TV got into the news league) were poor thirds and fourths.

American Research Bureau reports show WGN-TV's newscast advancing gradually in the timeslot over the past six months, and, while it's still running third, it has already doubled the audience size it used to get at 10 with features. Furthermore, the half-hour news show has been making slight inroads into the competing quarter hour newscasts, according to ARB, and if the trend continues a three-way battle for the news audience is sure to develop next year.

Apart from the upward graph of its ratings, "Tenth Hour News" has gratified WGN-TV with the SRO sign.

ABC Drops Ruth Hagy's 'College News Conference'; Student Unit in Protest

Decision to cancel Ruth Hagy's "College News Conference" after eight years on the air has brought protests to ABC-TV. Next Sunday (20) is the last week for the panel stanza and a week later ABC-TV is moving in a different half-hour interview called "First Person."

National Students Assn., for which producer-moderator Hagy is senior advisor, sent a protest to ABC, which stated, in effect, that it would ask 375 member colleges and their 1,000,000 member students to write, wire or phone their own individual protests to ABC-TV. A further protest is expected from the General Federation of Women's Clubs, which also works closely with "News Conference."

Miss Hagy's stanza went on the air in October, 1952 and has been on continually since, except for a break the summer of '54, according to the producer.

CBS Billings Up But Net Is Down

CBS Inc. net income for the first nine months dropped to $15,496,000 from $17,497,000 in the comparable 1959 period, despite an increase of $18,000,000 in sales for the nine month stanza. Sales were up to $336,582,000, compared with $318,291,000 for the same 39 weeks in 1959.

Earnings drop was attributed to increased administrative expenses. On the CBS statement "cost of selling" increased more than $11,000,000 over the comparable period last year, while "selling, general and administrative expenses likewise increased by some $10,500,000. Earnings per share for the 39 weeks equaled $1.85, compared with $2.09 last year.

CBS board last week declared a 35c per share divvy payable Dec. 9 to stockholders of record on Nov. 25, and a stock dividend of 3%, payable Dec. 19 to stockholders of record Nov. 25. Board also elected Clarence Hopper, newly appointed proxy of CBS Electronics, to the board.

Syndication a 'Miserable' Business, So Sterling's Turell Branches Out

"Syndication is a miserable business and I'll tell you why," says Saul Turell, prexy of Sterling Television, which has sprouted several subsidiaries since a public stock issue a year and a half ago.

In the first place, says Turell, "anybody can get in syndication by having a hat. Put a name like Misbegotten Films on the door, and you're in business."

In the second place, he says, "Most of the people in it are hungry. Syndication is the only show business industry that refuses to take the product off the market without milking it to the bone."

Companies that are big today are gone tomorrow, says Turell, and that's why in May of '59 he went after financing via an over-the-counter issue of 200,000 shares of common stock at a $1 a share (putting 30% of the company up for public ownership). Stock is now worth 1½ to 1¾ a share, and Sterling has steadily branched into new film fields.

They include Wolper-Sterling Productions, Waverly Productions, Screen News Digest, Farm News Digest (in the works now) and feature film projects with Paul Killiam.

Turell and Killiam are just now winding up their first feature project, "The Great Chase," an amalgam of all the climactic closes out of the vast library of Sterling silents. It has an original score by harmonica man Larry Adler, who won an Academy award for his scoring of the feature "Genevieve."

The pair also has sold another batch of "Silents Please." to ABC-TV for possible web slotting in January. In preparation are 39 new stanzas of the half-hour versions of vintage pix that hit the top 10 during the summer.

First of six proposed projects for Wolper-Turell Productions is a two-hour tele special, "Hollywood and the Movies," compiled from historic and recent footage from most of the majors and other sources, much of it never before viewed by the public. Three more specials are already in the works, including "Life and Loves of Rudolf Valentino."

Waverly Productions is in association with Jay Julian, Broadway prdoucer who scored a few years back with "Hat Full of Rain." Turell is not disclosing details until early next year, but says the subsid has properties that could conceivably include publishing, Broadway and films. The subsidiaries formed with outside producers Wolpert, Julian and Killiam are all owned on a 50-50 basis.

Screen News Digest distributes monthly films to some 400 junior highs and high schools. Films background current issues with historic footage from the Hearst newsreel vaults and are sponsored (with a title credit only) by news-

Home Builders Embrace Vidpix

Coming into prominence as a significant sponsor category in syndication is home building firms, according to Ziv-UA research. That industrial group represents more than $500,000 in show purchases from Ziv-UA.

Regional builders among the group sponsoring Ziv-UA episodes in some 30 markets this year include Bilt-Well Homes with headquarters in Macon, Ga.; Wise Homes, Roanoke, Raleigh, and markets in North Carolina and South Carolina; and P. A. T. Homes, Tucson, Ariz. Ziv-UA series corralled by home builders include "Case of the Dangerous Robin," "Tombstone Territory," with home building interest being cued by "Miami Undercover."

According to Ziv-UA, home building clients join the ranks of significant sponsor categories such as automotives and public utilities. Top ranking categories in syndication now envelopes national tobacco accounts, as well as the old time leaders such as food products, brewers and banks.

ZIV-UA 'NEW FRONTIER' SOLD IN 52 MARKETS

Ziv-UA's off-network entries "Space" and "Challange," sold under a "New Frontier" banner, have been bought by 52 stations.

New stations signing for the two skeins include KRON, San Francisco; WJW, Cleveland; WHDH, Boston; CKLW, Windsor-Detroit; WAGA, Atlanta; WAVY, Norfolk-Portsmouth; WNDU, South Bend; and WGAN, Portland.

On another show, a lecture tour by Herbert Philbrick, title character in "I Led Three Lives," has triggered fresh interest in the anti-Communist series. Skein currently is seen on 103 U.S. stations and in foreign countries.

Recent sales on "Three Lives" include WCBS, N.Y.; WNBQ, Chicago; WHBQ, Memphis; WISN, Milwaukee; KBTV, Denver; WMAL, Washington; KSL, Salt Lake City; WOI, Ames Des Moines; and WCTV, Talahassee.

European Market Onward, Upward, Says SG's Burns

The European market for vidfilms can only grow, in the opinion of Lloyd Burns, foreign topper of Screen Gems, who recently returned from a trip to Britain and the Continent.

France and Italy are due for a second channel, with a third channel set for Germany, a development which can only add up to greater programming needs, Burns stated. Problems of nationalism, sex and violence in American vidfilms persist as stumbling blocks, he added.

SG has made the following recent deals, as reported by Burns. In England, Associated Rediffusion has bought the "Flintstones" and Granada has renewed "Just Dennis," (Dennis the Menace) and bought more episodes of "Father Knows Best."

In France, "Huckleberry Hound" and "Father Knows Best" are now sold; in Germany, deals were consummated for "Dennis the Menace" "Donna Reed," "Seven League Boots" and "Huckleberry Hound." From four to six series have been sold in Portugal, and deals for "Hound," "Rin Tin Tin" and "Bengal Lancers" were made in Spain.

Granada's Whirlybirds

Manchester, Eng., Nov. 15.

Now it's the helicopter age in British tv. Granada-tv is trying out helicopters for flying executives and artists to and from their Manchester tv center.

Previously the company had used Manchester Airport as a landing ground. But it takes 40 minutes to get there from the TV Center at peak traffic-jam time. It may be possible, in the future, to land artists on the flat roof of a new studio and office block in the city center.

M&A's 'Hush' Rush

Hollywood, Nov. 15.

First 100 episodes of "Q. T. Hush, Private Eye" will be completed early in January.

Distrib M & A Alexander reports that more than 50 stations in major U.S. markets now are telecasting detective series, available in black and white and in color. Recent markets include XETV, San Diego; KSWO, Lawton, Okla.; KSD, St. Louis; KSTP, St. Paul and WIIC, Pittsburgh.

Each "Hush" episode is three-and-a-ahalf minutes, with 10 episodes comprising a complete story.

'Adults Only' Tag On NTA's 'Iceman' 'Play of Week' Ads

One of the few instances in which television has posted "For Adults Only" signs on a program is suplied by the newspaper ad displays for the current "The Iceman Cometh," the present "Play of The Week" entry on WNTA-TV, Newark-N.Y. indie.

The ads which broke at the weekend 6) carried a "Please Note" tagline which said "This play, vivid in its realism and direct in its language, is for adult, mature audiences only." The ads also carried some of the on-screen introductory remarks of Brooks Atkinson, former drama critic of the N.Y. Times now writing a column for the paper. Atkinson's closing words in the ad were that a "sensitive and mature audience deserves to see (the play)."

The ads capped a promo campaign for the two-part rendition of Eugene O'Neil's play, highlights of which were:

1. A Sunday (13) ight half-hour round-table discussion on WNTA-TV, conducted by the Saturday Review magazi

2. A contest conducted among college students on the best review of the O'Neill play, with $500 awarded to the winner.

3. An O'Neil three-volume library sent to agency time-buyers, radio-tv newsmen and other interested parties.

Additionally, the on-the-air promotion on Channel 13 was heavy. Station for the two weeks of "The Iceman Cometh" has moved the time period of the "Play of The Week" up to 10:30 p.m., instead of the usual 8:30 p.m., with a Sunday performance at 10 p.m. The second part of the four-hour drama begins Monday (21).

All This & Ballpoints Too

Underwater sea sagas have kicked up some interesting rating data in the N. Y. market.

Latest syndie entry, NTA's "Assignment Underwater," puts indie WNEW-TV in second place for the time period. According to Arbitron's report for the week ended Nov. 5, "Assignment Underwater" drew an 11.2 for the Wednesday at 7 p.m. slot, topped only by CBS News with a 12.8.

"Assignment Underwater," incidentally, outrates Ziv-UA's network entry in the N. Y. market on CBS-TV. "Aquanauts," according to Arbitron, has a 7.6 N. Y. rating, for its Wednesday, 7:30 to 8:30 p.m., slot. Rating King Neptune of the underwater dramas, though, remains the long-running "Sea Hunt," on WCBS-TV. For the same November week, "Sea Hunt" drew a 24.1 Arbitron rating, for its 10:30 Saturday night slot. The Ziv-UA syndie entry remains one of the most consistent, high-rated shows in the market.

It's 'Un-American' But Is It Legal?

Washington, Nov. 15.

A local documentary producer is doing a lively trade in a film consisting largely of news clips furnished by House Un-American Activities Committee which subpoenaed them from two San Francisco television stations. The firm has already sold about 500 prints at $500 apiece, a gross of $50,000.

The Capitol Hill weekly, "Roll Call," reported that no okay was obtained from the stations for the commercial exploitation of the footage. The stations are KRON-TV and KPIX (Westinghouse).

The news clips, showing demonstrations against committee sessions in San Francisco last May, were turned over to Washington Video Productions which pieced together a 40-minute film entitled "Operation Abolition." Contacted by VARIETY, the firm's president, George F. Johnston, said that at the request of the committee he agreed to make the film at no charge provided he could distribute prints on his own.

"Roll Call" quoted committee counsel Frank Tavenner as saying the footage was in public domain and could be used by anyone. He reportedly said the news clips were part of the committee's public record.

Johnston, who said he had no way of telling to whom the news clips belonged, said business firms, police departments, and school system have been among the purchasers of the film. The committee, he said, wanted it to show to members of Congress.

According to "Roll Call," Westinghouse made an informal protest to the committee, but plans no further action.

Feature Films Sales in Slowdown As Stations Tighten Money Belts

CBS O&O's BUY POST-'48 BUNDLE

CBS o&o's in Chicago and Los Angeles have bought a post-'48 bundle of feature pix from National Telefilm Associates, marking one of the few station group pix buys in a long while.

WBBM, Chicago, and KNXT, Los Angeles, inked for most of the pix in NTA's "61 for '61" bundle. each o&o, though, selecting different pix. Two deals put the market count on the 20th-Fox post-'48 feature package at 35, with the major markets of N.Y., Los Angeles, and Chicago accounted for.

Despite Renoir Nix, French TV Preps 2 New Features

Paris, Nov. 15.

Though Jean Renoir's feature length pic, "The Testament of Dr. Cordelicr," based on the Jekyll and Hyde tale, has yet to get tv airing here though it was made for this purpose, the governmental Radiodiffusion-Television Francaise has made two more pix, one 50 minutes long and one 70 minutes, and intends to give them one-shot tv showing. They will not be made available for theatres here but could possibly be sold abroad.

Renoir's film ran into trouble with French film people who felt it was new competition and the film was boycotted by theatres and held up for tv showing.

First was Robert Iglesis' "Thread in the Needle" made from a Rene Clair story with Gerard Sety and detailing a little man's troubles. Second was Claude Barma's modern day updating of Balzac's "The Big Tower" with Jean-Claude Brialy, Francoise Christophe and Andre Versini. Both were made in 16m with magnetic sound. Though some observers feel the latter is worthy of theatre showing it will definitely not be attempted due to the troubles with the Renoir pic.

Filmites feel they have enough problems without undue extra tv competish via films made with funds that come partly from film taxes.

Nix Crawford Switch

Hollywood, Nov. 15.

Revue Productions is casting around for replacement of the late Ward Bond as costar of "Wagon Trai ," but hit snag on the first cast. Overture to Broderick Crawford brought fast refusal by Ziv which has new series in work for him. His four years of "Highway Patrol" is now nearing an end and no new episodes will be shot for next season.

Another high-rated Ziv syndie, "Sea Hunt," is also in its fourth year, but no decision yet as to next season.

Feature film sales in general are being racked up at a slow pace. The overall situation pertains to post-'48's, dubbed foreign films, and pre-'48 pix.

On the post-'48's coming from Warner Bros., via Seven Arts Associated, the 20th-Fox's via National Telefilm Associates, et al., there are many things other than the hiked price factor holding up sales. The biggest problem, according to distrib execs, with new packages i the field is that many stations are in hock up to their ears on previous buys of libraries. Stations are reluctant to commit to fresh obligations when the payments are still heavy on previously bought pix.

Seven Arts Associated, out in the field with a group of 40 fresh post-'50's, has racked up sales in eight markets, with the big cities such as N.Y., Los Angeles, and Chicago not accounted for as yet. NTA, out in the field much longer with a group of post-'48's from 20th-Fox, has tallied about 35 markets. In the heyday of feature selling, NTA readily acknowledges the market list would have been doubled by this time.

For its post-'48's, NTA has been securing prices near 50% higher than the old vaultees. If it were price alone, according to an NTA exec, "we wouldn't be making the deals in the roster of markets sold." Seven Arts Associated has bumped into price resistance. Price tag for the pix, $30,000 per feature in N.Y. for example, is the highest sought in the market. The $30,000 per pic, though, is subject

G-T, Warners In Race for 'Vegas'

A race is on between Warner Bros. and Goodson-Todman to develop a vidfilm series with Las Vegas as the backdrop.

Goodson-Todman has project, titled "Las Vegas Beat," now being considered by NBC-TV. Project, to be produced by Andy Fenady, producer of Goodson-Todman's "The Rebel," is an hourlong series. Web, under the deal, would finance the pilot. Fenady, who wrote the initial script, might turn the project into a feature if the web deal does not materialize. Fenady's feature credits include "Stakeout on Dope Street," a low-budgeter which attracted a good deal of attention.

Warner Bros. and ABC-TV recently announced plans to do a "Las Vegas" 90-minute feature which would serve as the basis for a vidfilm series. It was recalled at the time of the announcement that WB's highly successful "77 Sunset Strip" was developed from the feature "Girl on the Run."

Unrelated to the Las Vegas race, ABC-TV still is sitting on a Goodson-Todman pilot, "The Yank," which didn't make it on the network this season. Pilot, financed by ABC-TV, reverts back to Goodson-Todman if by December the web fails to exercise its option for the series.

CRYSTAL-BALLING 1961-1962

NTA's Negro Switch

An interesting experiment in drama went unnoticed when WNTA-TV, Newark-N. Y. indie, telecast "Seven Times Monday" during the first week of November on "The Play of The Week." The experiment—kept quiet from the press—was to substitute a Negro family for a white family in a drama dealing with present-day life.

As initially rendered in summer stock at Westport, Conn., the drama by Ernest Pendrell, titled "Seven Times Monday," dealt with a Jewish family. It was the idea of National Telefilm Associates prexy Ely Landau to make the focal characters Negro without changing a line in the script. The transformation, as noted in Horo's VARIETY review, caused some mystification in terms of drama, as well as rendering some arresting moments.

Landau didn't want to advertise the transformation, feeling that the experiment would be ruined if the public would be apprised. He wanted the play to highlight people's lives, irrespective of their color.

It's long been a contention of Negro performers, in tv, legit, and other mediums that their roles need not be confined to playing Negroes, per se, that audiences would accept them in a multiplicity of ways, and that they could essay roles initially penned for white characters.

Huggins' 'Let's Keep It In The Family' Policy On 20th Properties

Hollywood, Nov. 15.

Twentieth-Fox-TV henceforth will develop ideas for series suggested by its staff and accept no more series ideas from outside producers, writers, etc., according to Roy Huggins, new v.p. in charge of production.

New policy, however, will not affect genuine packages which contain an "absolutely unique" series idea plus the people to execute it. And he said, the studio will continue to hire freelance writers, producers, etc., to develop studio's own story ideas.

Submissions of properties with supposed series potential—from presentation form to completed scripts—are, however, being returned unread to agents and others by 20th-Fox story department with a brief form letter.

Reasons are simple, Huggins points out: (1) ideas are not so difficult to come by, it's the effective execution of them that's hard, and (2) ideas are frequently developed simultaneously by several people and the mere presence in the story department of an idea which happens to resemble one the staff is considering (or would soon consider) opens the door to litigation.

Besides, said Huggins, it had gotten to a point where the 20th-Fox story department was spending most of its time sifting series ideas.

"There are no ideas," lamented Huggins, "which a major studio either hasn't seen before or will see again soon. There are very few exceptions to that, unfortunately."

Florida Boom

They should all be like this. WTVI-TV, new station opening shortly in Ft. Pierce, Fla., made a deal last week for some film with CBS Films. Station bought 21 of the company's 30 series.

Heritage to ITC, Steloff and All

Assets of Heritage Productions, outfit specializing in capsule and sports programming, have been acquired by Independent Television Corp.

As part of the deal, Arthur (Skip) Steloff, Heritage prexy, joins ITC as general manager of the new division which will produce and distribute the current Heritage programs. Heritage series include "Campy's Corner" (for both radio and tv) "Golf Tip of The Day," and "Magic Moments in Sports."

Complicated deal involves employment contract with Steloff, take-over of production commitments on "Golf Tip" and the Leo Durocher "Magic Moments" show. Other distribution rights included in the deal involve "Willie Wonderful," "Pulse of the City," "Call the Play," and "Animal World."

Herman Rush, a sometime Steloff partner, also figures indirectly in the deal. Steloff bought out Rush's interest in Heritage a few months back, but Rush has been partnered in individual shows such as "Golf Tip" since then. He keeps his ownership or participation in the shows, but he's now partners with ITC.

ITC Pattern For Taped Specials: Jo Stafford's 13

A new concept in the marketing of big budgeted specials, with wide ramifications for internationally known talent, is being launched by vocalist Jo Stafford and Independent Television Corp.

Miss Stafford this summer will vidtape in England a series of one-hour musical-variety shows, budgeted at about $100,000 per show. The series of 13 shows will be booked on Associated TeleVision, the commercial contractors in England. ATV, which now is the sole owner of ITC in America, will pitch the Stafford shows to the networks in the U. S. If a network deal doesn't materialize, the series will be offered to regional sponsors via the syndie route.

That the alternative syndie route in the U. S. is feasible and profitable recently was proven by the one hour Nat King Cole show, titled "A Cool Evening with Nat King Cole." Show, which had been vidtaped in England, was sold to Rheingold, which sponsored it in N. Y., and to Hamms Brewing, which took 50 odd-markets in the midwest. Cole show to date has grossed about $125,000 with another $75,000 seen before foreign distribution is completed. ATV telecast the show in England.

Deal with Cole gave the artist 50% ownership in the one-shot special. Deal with Miss Stafford has the same 50% partnership ar-

CNP's 2-Feature Sales

With only two feature films to sell, in contrast to the big bundle selling of most tv distributors, California National Productions seems to be doing fairly well. CNP's two Bob Hope films, "Road to Rio" and "My Favorite Brunette" are now over the 50-station marker, distrib reports.

Bing Crosby and Dorothy Lamour co-star in the two features, most lately sold in Portland, Ore., Cleveland, Indianapolis, Kansas City, San Francisco, Seattle and Phoenix. When CNP, especially a half-hour telefilm syndicator, first picked up the two full-lengthers, CBS-TV's five owned & operated stations made a combined deal for them.

MORE 60-MINUTE SHOWS ON TAP

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

With the list of coproductions for the new network '61-'62 season growing, vidfilm execs at this early date see some discernable patterns. Few execs at this pre-Christmas period will talk in terms of show content, but the crystal ball shines clearer in regards to trade practices and forms.

These are some of the major developments seen for the new '61-'62 season:

1. The hourlong vidfilm form seems as popular as ever, with a few execs seeing more of the 60-minuters next season. Twentieth-Fox, at this stage, has no less than six hour-long projects underwritten by the three networks. The 20th-Fox deals, as per usual, call for financing by the respective webs, in return for a web ownership stake.

2. Key to network airing, as last season, appears to be coralling early network and/or advertising interest in a project, and the granting of proprietary interest, either to the network or sponsor.

3. Climate appears more favorable for sponsor underwritten vidfilm entries to find a network berth. Last selling season, with the networks exercising more stringent program controls in the wake of the quiz scandals, many a show sought by the advertiser received the brush in favor of a network favored entry. Some of the network choices haven't been too popular in the rating meter or from a qualitative point of view.

Those are some of the crystal ball highlights.

Other indices are offered by such major houses as Screen Gems, pacing the field for next season with eight projects already copping either newtork or sponsor coin for pilot development. SG also will come into the market next season with pilots of its own, minus either network or advertiser commitments. The scatter shot approach also appears to hold true for Four Star Films and MCA TV. There's no indication at this stage that the working "exclusive marriage" between Warner Bros. and ABC-TV might splinter.

The importance of the successful "brand name" in copping a network deal isn't likely to diminish. Many a fine idea goes begging because the production outfit either isn't known or has had bad luck with previous entries. Quite a number of indie producers have joined forces with "brand name" production outfits to beat this development.

Continued popularity of the 60-minuter as week-in, week-out network fare deserves some exploration. Many of the disadvantages are readily acknowledged. With so many hourlong entries on the webs, the look-alike qualities can't be lightly dismissed. The webs have been forced to discount the program costs on some 60-minuters. Keeping full sponsorship within the 60-minute participation format is a year-round selling job for the respective webs.

But overriding these considerations are these factors: Most of the 60-minuters have evidenced a staying power, even those that opened on the rating meter pretty weak. On a cost-per-thousand basis, the hour vidfilm entries on the whole have proven an efficient buy. Sponsor practices on the webs in recent years has gone more and more in the direction of "run of schedule" placements — sponsors spreading their risks in participations in a number of shows rather than buying one entry in these days of expensive television. Because hour properties represent tall production coin, network risk capital and financial interest is welcomed by the producer. Network, in turn, retains program control.

Syndies Toying With States-Rights Setups Again; Cut the Overhead?

In a tough syndie period, more and more talk is heard of streamlining distribution and thereby cutting heavy sales expenses. In the midst of this talk, a good deal of interest is displayed in growing indie distribution outlets, regional firms acting as sales agents for properties in their territory on a commission basis.

Programs for Television is understood to be examining possible liaisons with indie distribution outlets in certain territories. Same holds true for the newly-organized firm of Hardie Frieberg's Major Television ,soon to be in the market with "Ripley's Believe It Or Not."

Function of regional indie distrib outlets resembles the state righters in the motion picture biz. State righters have exclusive distribution arrangements on pix in certain territories, eliminating the need for producers or major distributors to station salesmen in particular regions. Theatrical bookings are handled by the state righters.

Essentially the same pattern holds true for what might be a growing development in syndication. The local indie syndie distrib (state righter) acts as sales agent for properties in his territory, working on a commission basis reportedly ranging from 10 to 15%. It's understood that the local distrib in some cases would not handle competitive product, i.e. more than one cartoon show, more than one private eye, et al. However, he can handle a whole range of product, offering stations a basic catalog from which to choose.

Big disadvantage of the regional indie distrib setup is the lack of concentrated sales effort on the properties of a single house. Weighed against that, however, is the lower sales distribution costs via the regional indie route. In a tough syndie period, sales costs in the field has put more than one syndie house in the red.

Indie regional distribs are known to be functioning in the midwest, Florida, California and the Pacific Northwest. Two syndie vets, Casper Chouinard and Charles M. Richter, have formed Tele-Talent, headquartering in Minneapolis. Tele-Talent firm will act as sales agents for properties in an 11-state midwestern area. Merriman Holtz, formerly with Guild Films, operates as sales agent in the Pacific Northwest. Guy Zwahlen is known to be operating in a similar capacity out of Florida.

One of the oldest and most successful such distribs is Tom Corradine, who's headquartered on the Coast since the early days of vidpix. Another, also on the Coast, is John Ettlinger, who operates Medallion TV Enterprises.

States rights idea in telepix isn't entirely new. In fact, when Ely Landau first organized National Telefilm Associates back in 1953 with Marty Ross as his partner, the concept of the company was as a national spread of states-righters.

That Churchill Charm

Fifteen years after World War II, Winston Churchill is looked upon with favor in Germany and Japan. That became evident in the foreign sales push for the upcoming "Churchill" series on ABC-TV. Screen Gems, which initially packaged the series, is handling foreign sales.

SG has "definitive interest" for the half-hour "Churchill" series in Germany and Japan, with chances good that the series will debut in those ex-enemy countries not long after the American debut. All the Commonwealth nations already have signed for series about Britain's wartime Prime Minister. Deals have been consummated with the British Broadcasting Commission, Australian Broadcasting Commission and Canadian Broadcasting Commission. In Canada, the series will be seen on both the English and French networks.

CBS Films' Aussie Deal Boomerangs In 'Bells' Pullout

Classic case of the one hand not knowing what the other's doing came about last week at CBS. While the CBS Television Network was deciding to postpone "Oh Those Bells" for at least a couple of months and more likely till next fall, CBS Films was wrapping up a sale on the series to the Australian Broadcasting Commission for networking Down Under.

Trouble was, the CBS-TV decision to postpone the show meant a cutoff on production, while the CBS Films Aussie commitment was for a fullfledged production slate. CBS Films had written a contract for 13 shows plus options, for a December start.

The vidpix subsid is now prepared to tear up the Aussie deal, with apologies of course. But it is waiting until it's absolutely certain of the production status, since at the network itself there seems to be some conflicts about just where the cutoff comes. Program department had indicated production on the series would be continued until 13 shows were completed; business affairs dept., however, advised that production was being called off on "Bells" immediately and that only four shows were in the can. But best word from the web is that CBS Films was ill-advised and that production will continue.

If the network goes ahead with 13, then CBS Films may be able to salvage the deal if it can get an Aussie agreement on a later starting date. Otherwise, deal is kaput.

CBS Films got into the act because it reps all CBS-TV network stanzas for foreign sales. An exec of the vidpix subsid blamed the entire mixup on the fact that "our sales boys are just too good."

Serling, Cummings Team

Hollywood, Nov. 15.

Bob Cummings and Rod Serling are so pleased with each other after Cummings starred on "Twilight Zone" in "King Nine Will Not Return" that Serling is "rewarding" him with an original hour western pilot, "The Loner."

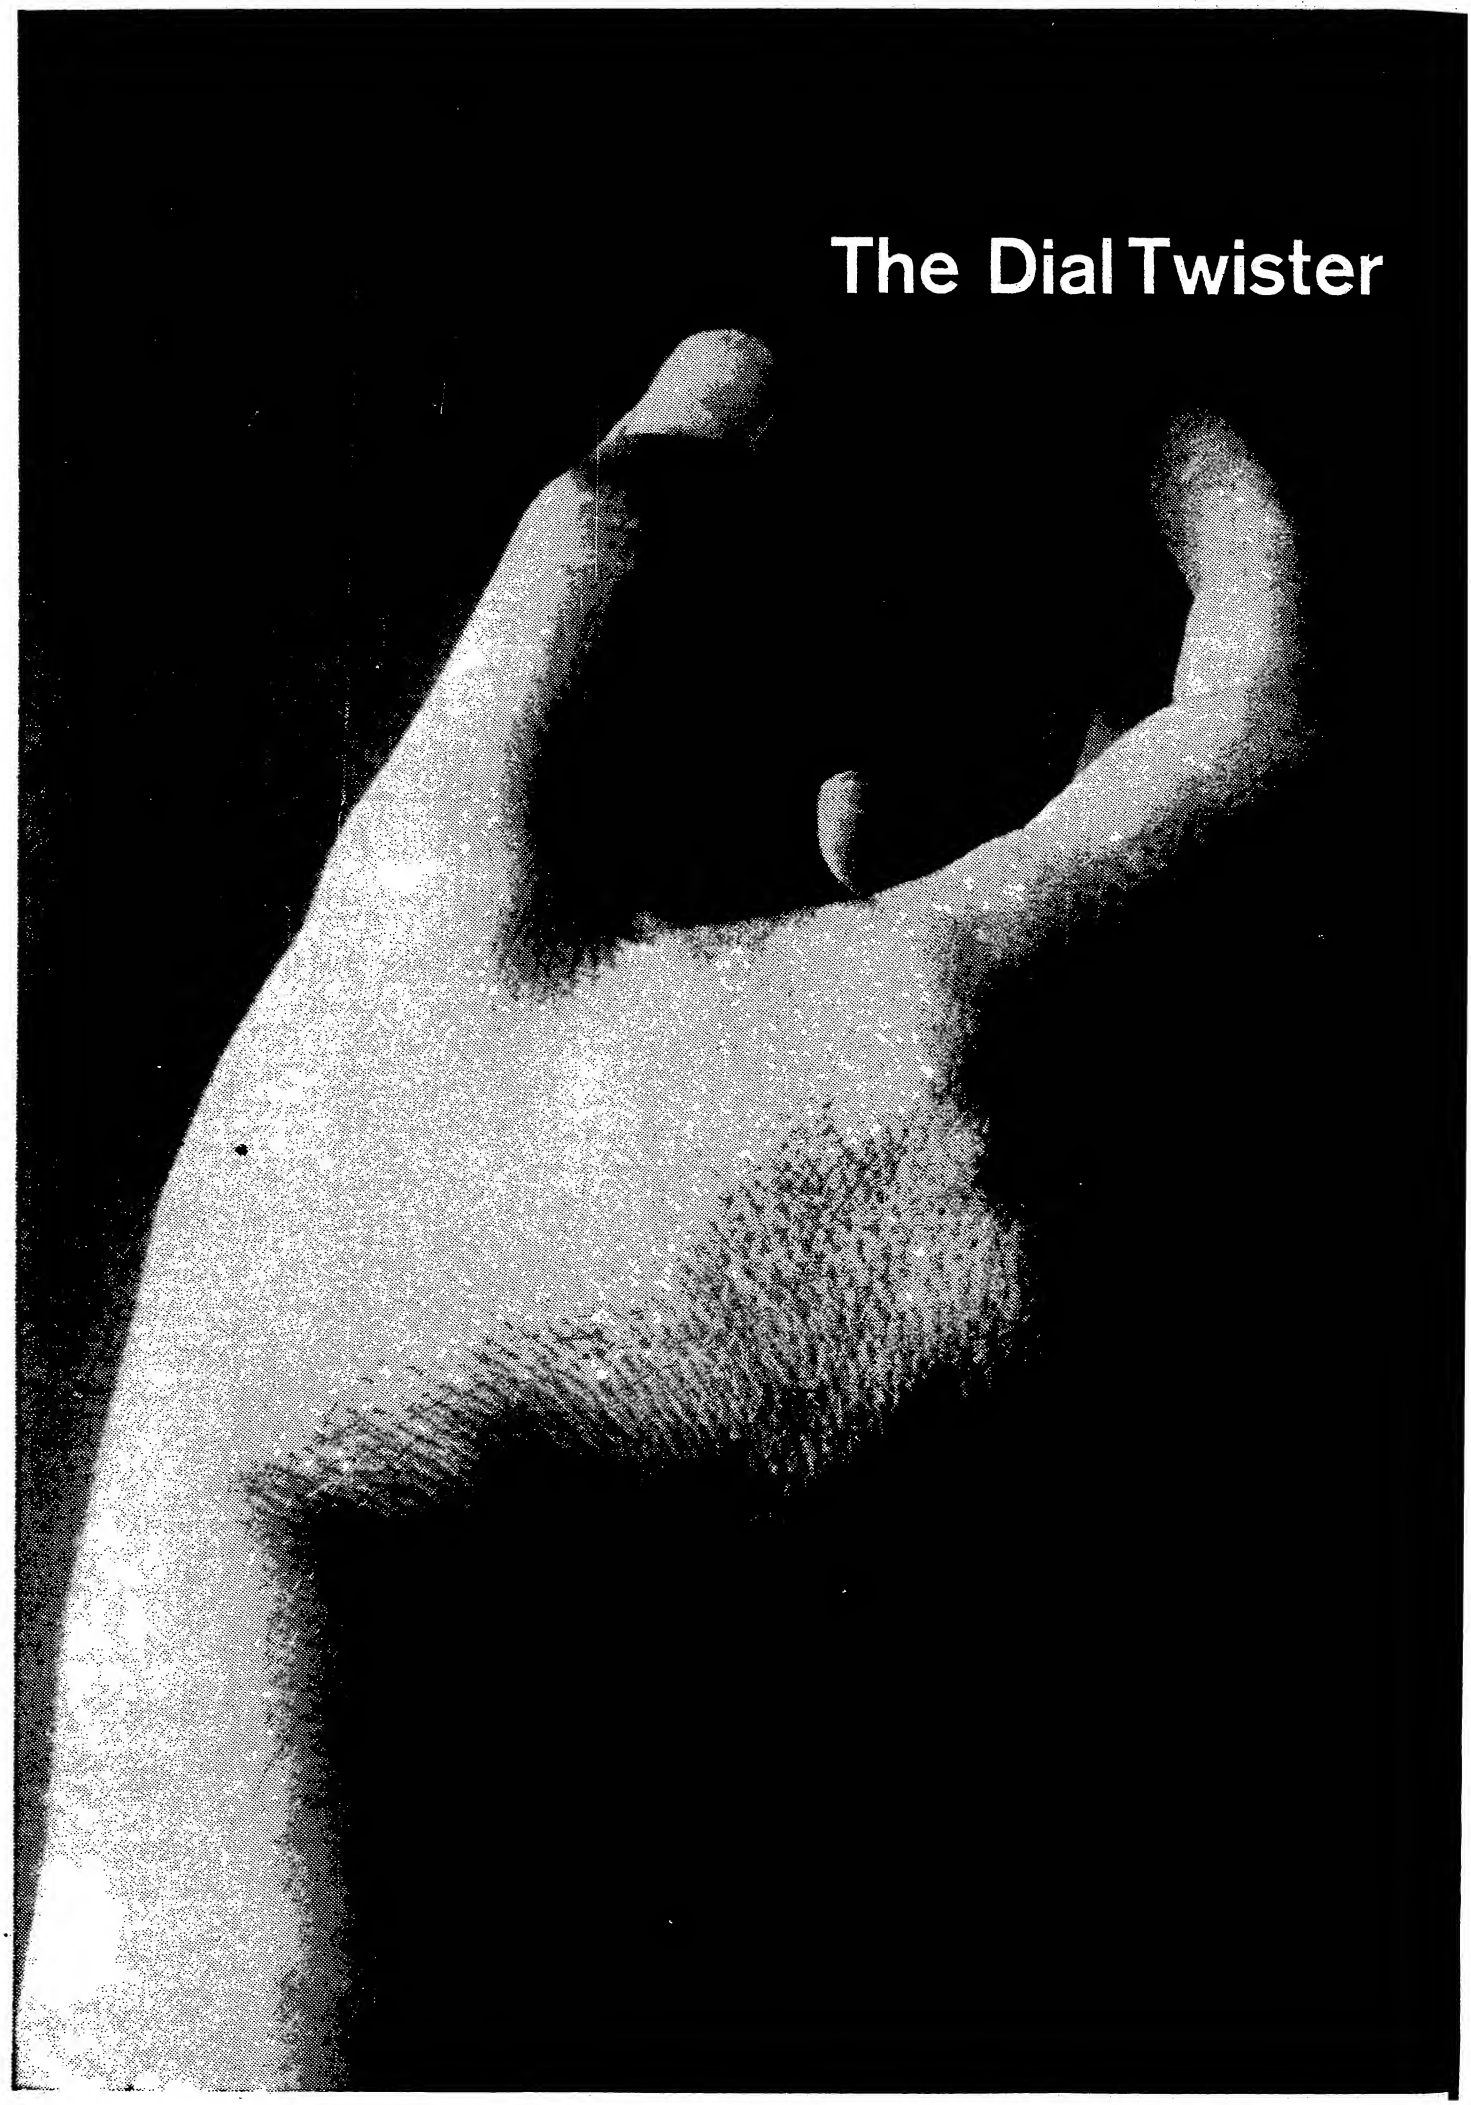
Present plans are to shoot it in Mexico or South America. It will be offered first to NBC as a special. Serling's deal on "Twilight" permits him any outside deals providing there is no conflict.

Melvyn Douglas Vidpix Series Set

Jack Goldstein, exec producer for Tri Video Corp., has negotiated a deal with Melvyn Douglas, star of the current "Best Man" legiter, as the lead in a new half-hour telefilm series "The Hidden Key," which goes into production in N.Y. next month. "Hidden Key" is based on real-life psychiatric cases and several eminent analysts are acting as technical advisers for the program.

Coincident with the pacting of Douglas, Goldstein also announced the inking of Morton Wishengrad as writer and script editor. Wishengrad, vet tv-radio scripter, is also known for his "The Rope Dancers" legiter.

Mitchell Grayson, former production exec at NTA, is producer-director. Pilot film is "The Third Son."



The Dial Twister

—TV's Most Dependable Computer

(or, how you've changed your viewing preferences over the last 8 years)

Any computer, no matter how marathon the range of its "intellect," subsists on the facts fed into it by human choice. Many computers strut their electronic stuff in what is familiarly known as "Video Land." But only one computer really counts—that's the one that starts the count rolling. The one who starts the count rolling.

Who?

You.

The Dial Twister.

You are the only computer that ever really created anything. You created another network (see our signature below). You created a network second to none (see the chart to the right). You kept twisting and twisting that little dial on your living-room set and you twisted us right up there... where we now have 7 of the 10 most popular shows and are first 4 nights and tied for a fifth.

You (along with millions of other Dial Twisters) have made ABC the network most people watch most of the time.

That pleasing result came from your computing of certain facts fed into you. Take such bold new facts as The Untouchables, 77 Sunset Strip, The Real McCoys, The Flintstones, My 3 Sons, SurfSide 6, The Roaring 20's. You digested them, computed them and reported those so highly pleasing (to us) Top Ratings.

When you were in a mood (other computers are incapable of being in or out of moods) for even more substantial fare, ABC fed you such responsible Public Service documentaries as those in the Bell & Howell Close-Up! series and Expedition. Etc. We confidently expect many more dials to be twisted our way as you start (next week) computing the intense significance and inspiring excitement of the forthcoming 26-part series, Winston Churchill: The Valiant Years. (Music background by Richard Rodgers.)

When you were in a mood to compute Sports facts, we fed (and will continue to feed) you the most Sports hours of any network: NCAA Football, American League Football, Fight of the Week, All Star Golf.

And in Specials: Remember how quickly you computed such extra-special Specials as The Bing Crosby Show, Maurice Chevalier's Invitation to Paris, Elvis Presley's return to our Frank Sinatra shores, Debbie Reynolds' TV début.

Source: Nielsen 24 Market TV report week ending November 6, 1960, multi-network area reports for similar periods previous years. 6:30-11 PM Sun., 7:30-11 PM Mon.-Sat.*

Sample Special coming up: David the Outlaw, two-part Biblical epic starring Jeff Chandler and Israel.

Obviously, no human computer can be told what to watch and compute in this land of 180 million human computers. There is no arm-twisting in this land.

There is, however, dial-twisting a-plenty.

We owe our existence as a network to it. We owe our phenomenal growth in Client Acceptance to it. Against last year, ABC's billings are up 30% and give every evidence of continuing to out-pace the growth of any other element in the TV industry.

So, whether you are an advertiser dialing-in the public... or whether you are a Dial Twister dialing in for Television's best... ABC-TV is now your first choice.

Only Booz, Allen Stands Between Tom McAvity and Top JWT TV Job —On Other Madison Ave. Fronts

By BILL GREELEY

Thomas A. McAvity, itinerate vet of 30-years on the broadcast programming circuit, is close to landing (and or accepting) the top tv job at J. Walter Thompson opened recently when Dan Seymour was upped to an exec vee post.

Shaken by the loss of two major accounts this year (Shell and American Home Products), and restiveness among major tv billers still with the agency, Thomps in has been probing Madison Ave.'s select tv exec ranks for a new programming chief.

That the quest is now focused on McCann-Erickson's McAvity is indicated by the fact that a gumshoe from the Booz, Allen & Hamilton consultant firm is working up a "McAvity Report" for JWT management. And herein lies one of the ironies of Video Wonderland, because it was the same Booz, etc., whose checkout of NBC a few years ago preceded the ouster of the Pat Weaver regime in which McAvity was a veepee and tv web programming chief. He was made head of NBC-TV programming in 1954 (later became exec veepee in charge of tv programs and sales and was shuffled out of the net when Bob Kintner moved over from ABC early in '57.

McAvity left NBC for McCann-Erickson when there were reports that the agency's tv chief, Fern Clyne, would be relinquishing a good part of his overall tv duties to concentrate on "his own account," Chesterfield. The shift never developed, and McAvity, while strongly positioned in the McCann tv hiarchy, is a long way from the top. Clyne's No. 2 man is Jack Vonvolkenberg, former CBS-TV chief who came out of semi-retirement this year to join the agency; and exec veepee Thomas Losee is No. 3.

McAvity's McCann rank, however secure, is seen by observers as one of the major reasons why a switch to the top job at JWT is likely, if the price and contract terms are satisfactory. That's despite the mother lode of problems anent tv at the world's biggest agency.

Anyhow, the Booz, Allen report should be optimistic this time. For the record, McAvity started at NBC in 1929 as a producer and rose to eastern program manager before moving to Lord & Thomas agency as head of the former agency's radio department. He later pulled a hitch with CBS and for some time was an independent program packager. In his long career, he's been responsible for such shows as "Your Hit Parade," the first Bob Hope Show, "Corliss Archer," "The Hardy Family," the Joan Davis show, the Academy Awards broadcasts and many others.

Adsville: Charlie Chan 3d (ex. for Roland Winters) is back, this time solving the mystery of the unironed shirt for Arrow on a tv blurb (via Lennen & Newell) . . . Kenyon & Eckhardt's 200 "staff-level" employees heard a presentation last week from new prexy David C. Stewart at a breakfast in the Waldorf Astoria . . . Nat Kameny, prez of Kameny Assoc., is on a business trip to the Far East. Agency introed a number of Japanese optical lines to the U.S. . . . New digs for Los Angeles branch of the Katz Agency on Wilshire Blvd. Mogul, Williams & Saylor has set up a five-year $3,000 scholarship at New York U. in the name of Myron A. Mahler . . . New Shell Oil account team at Ogilvy, Benson & Mather now numbers 40 in the New York office.

Up and down: Danny Sargent, for 14 years with Young & Rubicam, most recently as an associate copy director, joins McCann-Erickson as a veepee and associate creative director.

John B. Lyman, with the agency since 1956, has been named director of Hollywood broadcast services for Foote, Cone & Belding.

Phenyl-Drane, nasal antibiotic decongestant, to Kenyon & Eckhardt. Product, made by Thomas J. Mahon Co., Englewood, N.J., is just out of clinical research and expected to be in national distribution by early '61.

Chicago Agencies

Chicago, Nov. 15.

Leo Burnett agency, beefing up its public relations section, transferred Harold W. Gully from New York to the Chi home office as manager of the p.r. unit. Ned R. McDavid, previously with McCall's Magazine, succeeds Gully as manager of the section in Gotham; and Donald Vogt joined the Chi office from Needham, Louis & Brorby as a p.r. account exec under Gully.

Stern, Walters & Simmons, clocking its sixth year as a Chicago agency, has formed a separate public relations division under Arnold Siegel. Kenneth W. Wittleder, a veepee of the agency, has acquired an interest in the firm and is named to the board of directors.

North Advertising signed on Dennis Altman, ex-McCann-Erickson (Chi), and Martin Cohen, formerly with Montgomery Ward, as writers in its creative dept.

Maurice H. Bronner has been elected prexy of Olian & Bronner, succeeding the late I. A. Olian. Bronner had previously held the title of executive vicepres. Agency has added Robert C. Bullen, formerly a v.p. of the Don Kemper Co., who will be active in account supervision, planning and creative work as a veepee of O&B. Sheldon Riskin also joined the agency as an account exec in the pharmaceutical field.

With the Station Reps

H-R reppery which has seen rapid growth since the principals broke off from Headly-Reed, has named Raymond C. Simms (senior account exec for the last four years) director of sales promotion.

Simms will head up a staff of five, part of a total of 15 in the sales development division under veepee Avery Gibson. Division includes sales promotion, research and sales development.

Before joining H-R, Simms was with NBC for three years as an account exec for the radio web, and was one of the sales staff that helped launch "Monitor." He started on the broadcast big ride in the time buying department of Kenyon & Eckhardt, and then spent six years with Erwin, Wasey & Co., most of the time as media director. Before coming to N. Y., he spent six years as an announcer, program director and assistant manager of several eastern radio stations.

In his new post at H-R, Simms succeeds Joe Cook, who has signed to write and produce for tv. Cook was on the production staff of "Monitor" for several years.

Briefs: Adam Young Inc. has released its second annual radio spot market study. It's a 100-market survey . . . Wilmot Losee, general manager of AM Radio Sales, addressed the annual meeting of the Cleveland Sales Executives Club Monday (14) . . . Edward P. Harvell, formerly broadcast media supervisor for Shell Oil, has joined the tv sales staff of Avery-Knodel . . . Carleton Fredericks' syndie strip, "Living Should be Fun," is now in a total of 29 markets with five CBS radio affils among the latest to buy . . . Radio Advertising Bureau added 31 stations to membership during October, including three groups, the Star Stations, the Stanley Hubbard group and the Buckley-Jaeger Corp. Three groups boost the Bureau's annual income by $29,000.

WAGNER ON OWN

San Francisco, Nov. 15.

Morton J. Wagner, exec vicepresident of Bartell Broadcasting, quit Bartell last week to form his own syndicate aimed at entering broadcasting ownership.

Wagner will headquarter in Frisco.

Not-So-Instant History For CBS-TV 'Eyewitness' In a Change of Pace

Some execs at CBS-TV are beginning to wonder what happened to that "instant history" concept for "Eyewitness to History," which as a weekly series was to have done the major story of each week as a Friday night wrapup.

With the election squeaker as the logical choice for last week, "Eyewitness" instead did a story that broke the week before, the entrance onto French soil for the first time of peaceful German army units. In its few weeks on the air, "Eyewitness" has pulled some other switches. On Oct. 7, with the election campaign, Khrushchev's stomping in the UN, the neutralist pressures on the U.S., the Congo crisis in the UN and several other major stories breaking, the "Eyewitness" stanza chose the two-day-old World Series as its subject.

Reason apparently is a change in the mechanics of the "Eyewitness" operation from the concept of a freewheeling unit flexible until virtually the last minute to a more rigid planned-in-advance setup. Nobody, of course, could have predicted that the elections would have as much drama as they did; meanwhile "Eyewitness" had decided on the German army story and decided not to change.

Similarly, the World Series show had been decided well in advance, with a good deal of historical footage compiled and edited, and decision was made to stick with that as per schedule. Opening show, on the Cong was prepared starting some two months in advance. On the other hand, the "Eyewitness" specials of last season constituted same-day coverage of major events, much of it live remotes.

25 Years Ago This Week

(From Va 13, 1935)

FCC shelved a plan to change wavelengths into a regional pattern instead of nationwide, after CBS boss William S. Paley visited D.C. to make a personal beef.

Ted Husing's "10 Years Before the Mike" published by Farrar, Rinehart after serialization by Cosmopolitan and appraised in VARIETY as "perhaps the most comprehensive history of popular broadcasting yet."

U. S. Dept. of Commerce reported 25,551,000 radio sets in the U. S., nearly half of the world's radio circulation.

William Gillette, 80, came out of retirement to appear as Sherlock Holmes on the Nov. 18 "Lux Radio Theatre," celebrating the 60th anni of his first stage appearance and his 36th essayal of the Holmes role.

Theatres and niteries were reported chiseling on the 10% Federal amusement tax, and a Treasury Dept. 10-week drive recovered $237,000 in delinquent taxes in 20 areas alone.

Actors' salaries for small parts were going down again. One "second-string" thesp, working for a "third-string agency," got some work and expected his customary $25 fee. But after four hours of rehearsal, a 15-minute broadcast in which he did two parts, and a requirement for black-tie attire, he was paid $7.50.

Broadway and the road turned the corner, with things reflecting the better U. S. economic picture generally. Broadway gross for the previous week totaled $311,500, some $70,000 over the me week in '34.

Crossley Reports decided to begin sampling of political trends as evidenced in radio broadcasts. Research outfit decided to emphasize rankings of major broadcast speeches by President Roosevelt, Herbert Hoover, Father Coughlin, and others, as some barometer of political trends for next year's Presidential election.

RCA refused comment on a report it was selling its holdings in England's Electric & Musical Industries Ltd., active in television development.

Candid camera nuts were invading theatres nd radio studios. Vaude and legit and pix houses were charging special prices for the camera-toters, assigning them special blocks of seats, but radio continued the free admish policy and encouraged the amateurs for the publicity value.

"The Influential Americans" are those teachers with the specialized knowledge and the time and enthusiasm to move students to learn. This special edition of "CBS Reports," prepared especially for General Electric as a pubaffairs special preempting its own "GE Theatre," was devoted to the scattered instances where such teachers are being given their heads and where educational technology is being advanced and encouraged.

As such, it was an encouraging report—th emphasis was clear that the experimentation demonstrated is extremely limited, but it also indicated that at the same time there are forces within education at least attempting to update the movement to the point where the students can get the best out of their teachers and schools.

The CBS crews visited Lexington, Mass., where "group teaching" utilizing specialists in each subject, with an accompanying flexibility of the student body as to levels of learning, is being practiced at the Franklin School. It was a revealing and hopeful experiment, but the program failed to make clear whether the students were average or selected cream-of-the-crop group—they looked like brighter than average.

Another segment dealt with th midwest's new Airborne Television Instruction program, and showed some audition tapes already being tried in the schools. An elementary school-level program in French instruction, played on the class tv set, was excellent, and the kids seemed to enjoy it. Still another experiment, also in the foreign-language field, showed a Russian language course in a Jefferson County, Col., highschool equipped with a "language lab," a series of booths equipped with tape recorders where the students could record and play back their tapes for comparison with expert linguists on tape.

Still another area was a pickup of a highschool lecture on poetry by Ned Hoopes, a voluble and enthusiastic Evanston, Ind., instructor who made his subject come alive. And a Harvard educational group-planning project was fairly impressive. Whether all the experiments can be adapted to general use, or whether they will work out well at all, a matter for the future. But the sleepy character of American education is beginning to get some pinpricks, and as the program so ably demonstrated, that's to the good.

The Fred Friendly production team did its usual excellent job; Howard K. Smith was a fine reporter-narrator. And GE, which is very education-minded, may be encouraged by the results to devote more time to pubaffairs programming through this venture.

It's a commendable approach to sociological subject matter to dramatize it through a case history, but as with any fictional play, there are pitfalls in the way the material is handled. "The Trapped Woman," for instance, emerged as a public affairs soap opera with its weepy, travailing heroine, its "can a housewife find happiness?" theme, and its treacly musical backgrounds played on a harp. It promised to give the suffering hausfrau an insight into her lot but came up instead with a cupful of satistics and some shallow philosophy.

Unless he intended the second Purex special block programming with the NBC-TV soaps, "Young Dr. Malone" and "From These Roots," producer-writer George Lefferts should have strained to play down the melodramatics inherent in his situation. If, however, he deliberately chose the detergent idiom for the pre-

THE NATION'S FUTURE
With John K. M. McCaffrey, Dr. Leo Szilard, Dr. Edward Teller, others Producer: Robert Allison
Director: Charles N. Hill
60 Mins.; Sat., 9:30 p.m.
Sustaining
NBC-TV from N.Y., Chicago, H'wood

"The Nation's Future" which follows a succession of actioners on NBC, can be an absorbing and worthwhile hour. There are lotsa bugs in th debate format to be ironed out inasmuch as the participants are the prisoners of the formulas set up for them. Again, there is the probability that the program attempts too much by projecting itself on a national scale with questions coming in from studio audiences in New York, Chicago and Hollywood. The spread is too great. The program sets out to do more than it can possibly accomplish and still throw some light on the issues involved.

The distinguishing feature of Saturday's (12) semester was the discussion between two top atomic scientists, Dr. Leo Szillard, a cancer patient at th Memorial Hospital, N.Y. who aided the development of the atomic bomb, and Dr. Edward Teller, commonly known as father of the hydrogen bomb. These men are both endowed with tremendous knowledge of the subject and both have intense feelings on the social and political aspects of the ato question.

The discussion was moderated by John K. M. McCaffrey, who lent m re than a little confusion to the already complicated issues and formats. McCaffrey was dogmatic in his attempts to retain the strict confines of the time limits setup by the rules and was perhaps overzealous in his interpretations and statements. He assumed for example, that Dr. Teller had already stated his attitude in favor of resum tion of atomic testing, when he hadn't. His immediate misstatements caused Dr. Teller to dub him an "immoderate moderator."

The question involved was much too important to be confined to format, although it is conceded that operations should be under specified procedures. However, there are times when it is more important to throw light on the subject than to maintain the rules. Teller and Szillard, who have been antagonists, made common cause in their attitude against McCaffrey. There were indications, also, that they weren't far apart on some aspects of the question. However, the haziness of the discussion leadership hid the benefits of the show.

As to audience participation, there were too many complications in trying to get questions nationally. Perhaps had the queries been lined up in advance, the feature might have been more orderly.

The importance of the question as well as the stature of the discussionists, plus the prominent people who participated in the show, gave the necessary aura of importance. But the bugs in the show militated against its informative values.

FRANK GIFFORD SHOW
With Chris Schenkel
Producer: Richard Kirchner
Director: Anthony Farrar
15 Mins., Sun., 1:30 p.m.
VAN HEUSEN
WCBS-TV (tape)

(Grey)

WCBS-TV has studiously removed all the cliches of sportcasting in this pregame warmer for New York Giants pro football games.

To begin with, musical theme for the show is a cool jazz bit titled "Club Cool," recorded by the Greenwich Group in England under the Synchro label. With a cool and relaxed mood thus set, Giants' player Frank Gifford and play-by-player Chris Schenkel casually discuss the standings, upcoming game and so on.

On show caught Sunday (6), Schenkel and Gifford were joined by Giant's defensive lineman Andy Robestelli. Working with a model girdiron and figurine players, the trio discussed a prime pitchout play of the Cleveland Browns with Robestelli explaining how defensive players "key" their action to anticipate the offensive. It was an inside and interesting session, and the easy-going projection of all hands made for pleasant changeup from the contrived excitement that's usual with pregame telecasts.

THE SPIRIT OF THE ALAMO
With John Wayne, Richard Widmark, Laurence Harvey, Richard Boone, Frankie Avalon, Patrick Wayne, Linda Cristal, Joan O'Brien, Chill Wills, Ken Curtis, Carlos Arruza, and, special guests, John Nance Garner, J. Frank Doble, Lon Tinkle
Writer: L. I. Salaman
Producer: Perry Cross
Director-coproducer: Seymour Robbie
60 Mins.: Mon., Nov. 14, 9:30 p.m.
ABC-TV (film)

(MacManus, John & Adams)

Largely because Dimitri Tiomkin wrote very attractive music for John Wayne's multi-million dollar theatrical release, "Alamo," this unique 60 minute tv trailer sponsored by Pontiac for the film wasn't completely lacking in genuine entertainment values. Highpoints of the show were all musical—gritty old Chill Wills and young Frankie Avalon swinging out with the lively "Here's to The Ladies," Ken Curtis crooning the film's "Lullaby," and a mixed chorus, conducted by Tiomkin, singing the rousing title song and the affecting "Green Leaves of Summer."

Otherwise, thi "Spirit of The Alamo" was all drumbeat, publicity-style. Touted as "an exploration into the significance of the battle of the Alamo, and its meaning for the men who fought there for Texas independence," it was rather an exploration of the $13,000,000 investment in exposed film and its meaning to anticipated distribution revenues.

Wayne emceed with his usual nonchalance, the format being tour of the giant Brackettville (Tex.) film set and a gala post-production party which offered appropriate cues for the musical numbers. Stars of the film also turned up during the course of things to give brief personal plugs for the pic, all of which were climaxed by a three-minute clip from the film's climatic battle scene.

An attempt to give the show a more general reason for being was an interview with former U. S. veep John Nance Garner, filmed outside his home at Uvalde. Though Garner touched briefly on the historical interest in the 1836 battle, the most important question put to him seemed to be what he thought Wayne had wrought with this film. Said the veep, before being led off screen: Wayne is doing "a grand job," firstly for the United States, secondly for Texas, and thirdly for southwest Texas. In his own modest way, and from the dispassionate vantage point which only 92 years of living can give a man, Garner did a grand job for Wayne by consenting to appear on th show.

FACE THE NATION
With Howard K. Smith, moderator; Sen. Mike Mansfield; David Niven, Roscoe Drummond, Philip Potter
Producer: Michael J. Marlow
Director: Bill Linden
30 Mins., Mon., 10:30 p.m.
ESQUIRE, SCHICK
CBS-TV, from Washington

(Mogul, Williams & Saylor; B&B)

Though "Face the Nation" is a sturdy old workhouse of the CBS public affairs stable, the network might have been a little mor imaginative in its choice of a show for primetime exposure. "Nation," with its inherent limitations as a q&a format and its total dependence for excitement on the guest of the moment, is better suited for its old Sunday afternoon spot than the new Monday 10:30-11 post, particularly when that time offered the opportunity to showcase some newer and more dynamic type of pubaffairs entry.

For all it rigidities, though, "Nation" serves its purpose as a newsmaker of sorts, though it will undoubtedly find it harder hitting Page Ones across the country in Tuesday editions than in the traditionally news-hungry Monday papers. Three-out-of-four-week format, with the fourth turned over to local stations for pubaffairs, presumably will give "Nation" crack at lining up better guests, via the greater flexibility.

With "Nation" going commercial and primetime, CBS News elected to replace Stuart Novins with Howard K. Smith as moderator nd to make a few minor changes, including a news-story-type resume by Smith at the close. His wrapup wasn't a particularly good one, either as to emphasis on the importance of the statements made by guester Sen. Mike Mansfield (D.-Mont.) or completely as to accuracy.

Mansfield provided little news. He said he hadn't decided yet to publicly announce whether he would accept the majority leadership of the Senate if asked; he said he favors multilateral aid to African nations through the UN; he indicated he believes the debates will continue in the next Presidential election but didn't think Kennedy should take on an "unknown." Otherwise, he covered ground he's already discussed in the press.

Panel of newsmen, CBS' Paul Niven, N.Y. Herald Tribune's Roscoe Drummond and the Balto Sunpapers' Philip Potter, gave it the old college try but couldn't nudge much new information out of the Senator. This might have been anticipated, and producer Michael J. Marlow should have tried for a different guest at this early date.

Esquire Boot Polish and Schick are the bankrollers, and CBS might have tried for a better calibre. The opening Esquire commercial was downright amateurish as well as inane.

OMNIBUS
(He Shall Have Power)
With Larry Blyden, Philip Abbott, Larry Gates, Michael Tolan, Harry Townes, J. D. Cannon, Tom Clancy, Roland Winters, Richard Shephard, Dana Elcar, Edgar Stehli, Leon B. Stevens, John Colicos, Chris Gampel, Milton Selzer, Edmond Ryan, Mercer McLeod, Eric Berry, Ludwig Donath, Glwilym Williams, McGeorge Bundy, Alistair Cooke, others
Producer: Robert Saudek Associates
Director: Fielder Cook
Writer: James Lee
60 Mins.; Sun. (13), 5 p.m.
ALUMINIUM LTD.
NBC-TV, from N. Y. (tape)

(J. Walter Thompson)

"Omnibus" returned to television after a year's absence to do an hour on the power of the Presidency that was intelligent instruction but ineffective drama. Exective producer Robert Saudek hired James Lee to write about great moments of decision in the lives of Washington, Jackson, Lincoln, the two Roosevelts and Wilson, and rolled out about two dozen N. Y. actors under Fielder Cook's direction to present "He Shall Have Power."

Cook made the great error of stressing imitation rather than acting. His performers, dressed and made up to resemble these men of the past and their contemporaries, always spoke as though they were on a public platform, although it seemed as if writer Lee meant them to be speaking dialog, even if many of the words were from speeches. Such "authentic" recreations are of dubious value on television, where intimacy invariably serves the viewer to better advantage, but Cook was obviously more impressed by the brilliant mechanics of mimicry.

Larry Blyden's Teddy Roosevelt, for instance, was so energetic that it was impossible to believe anyone could take his trust-busting decision seriously. Larry Gates' George Washington had the earmarks of a dollar bill or a statue, and Harry Townes' Woodrow Wilson was effete. J. D. Cannon's Andrew Jackson was bombastic and Michael Tolin's Abraham Lincoln was like Raymond Massey's, only more sotto voce. ("Omnibus" used clips of FDR, instead of recreations.) It's true that these men of history actually did possess the charactertistics attributed to them on "Omnibus" last weekend, but they were human, too, and it ought to look that way on television.

Harvard Dean McGeorge Bund's commentary was generously interspersed with the action. However, the educator's style had more of the lecturer's pedantry than the narrator's ease and conviction.

"Omnibus" tried something difficult and profound, and, in doing so, was informative. With a little effort, it could also have been entertaining.

DIRECTIONS '61
With John Alcorn, Theodore Bikel, George Hicks, Helen Hayes, John Daly, Father John LaFarge
Producer: Wiley Hance
Director: William Ayers
Writer: Robert Crean
30 Mins.; Sun., 1 p.m.

An interesting religioso program preemed on ABC-TV Sunday (13). It had an imaginative spark, both in concept and execution, which set it apart from outings of similar intentions.

Opening episode dealt with the Catholics, showing in pictures and words that faith's celebration of the birth of a child. The arresting still shots of the birth was done by photographer Jacques Lowe. The mother's inner narration could have been more effective if it had been less wordy and flowery. The message would have come off just as well.

Helen Hayes came in for an interlude, reading excerpts with wit, style and humor from Phyllis McGinley's "Reformers, Saints and Preachers," a collection of poems. John Alcorn acted as host-narrator for the Catholic episode. Subsequent weeks the Protestant and Jewish faiths will be featured, with George Hicks acting as Protestant host, and Theodore Bikel as the Jewish host.

Windup found Father John LaFarge commenting briefly on the election. Web's news and pub-affairs topper John Daly introd the program.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Play of the Week

Television drama soared to triumphant, poetic dimensions in the four-hour rendition of Eugene O'Neill's "The Iceman Cometh" Monday (14) ight on WNTA-TV, Newark-N.Y. indie. The home screen, usually so filled with formula trivia, seldom has had so many glorious moments. Th O'Neill outing on "The Play of the Week" was a landmark for the video medium, a reference point for greatness in tv drama.

There surely will be squawks about some of the forthright language, quite acceptable in legit, but never before heard on tv. "The Iceman Cometh" is not a pretty parlor piece, but a bleak, relentless, harrowing search in the dark corners of man's being. In that perspective, the gutter references are understandable and pardonable. WNTA-TV, to its credit, posted a "for adults" notice in its ads heralding the O'Neill drama, and slotted the series for a 10:30 p.m. start, when adults should have control over the knobs.

The power of the dark drama appeared to gain momentum in the video version. The camera seemed to edit for the eye. Many of the elements that seemed diffuse in the Broadway version in 1946 crackled with electricity under the focus of the cameras. Moments which seemed remote on stage became intimate on the home screen. O'Neill captured an agonized world in his barroom, and National Television Associates vidversion sang O'Neill's agony.

The sure, talented, creative hands of director Sidney Lumet seemed everywhere in evidence. Jason Robards Jr., as Hickey, delivered a compelling performance, full of artistry and communicative gifts. Myron McCormick, as the dour, philosophical ex-anarchist, Larry Slade, was forceful and terribly alone in his inner paralysis.

One by one, each of the cast lent their talents to this modern-day Greek chorus. There was a large cast, each having his or her moments in the limelight. No one struck a false note. On the contrary, each member of the cast made O'Neill's poetry sing with heartbreaking warmth, even while displaying all the ugliness and violence within themselves. They played out their awful lives, touched by an inspired poet's pity.

The cast included Marrell Polley as Harry Hope, James Broderick as Willie Oban, Roland Winters as the Boer general, Ronald Radd as the English captain, Harri-

The contest that wasn't close

IF last week's Presidential race had been any tighter, this coming January might have found the Kennedys and Nixons sharing White House kitchen privileges.

There was no such tightness, of course, about the contest among TV networks for supremacy in election-night reporting. It was NBC all the way — still another demonstration that a working credo of responsibility-plus-vitality is terribly tough to top.

NBC's SUPERIORITY in the domain of news and public affairs may easily be one of the worst-kept secrets of our times, for (as National Arbitron figures showed) we attracted more than 50 per cent of the election-return viewing on all three networks. These people must have known something.

What they must have known was that NBC would be furnishing them with the fastest and most accurate voting returns; that our analyses would be sharp and reasonable; and that we would never maltreat a computer to blurt out some half-baked projection on the outcome simply for the sake of scoring a "beat."

We're sure they weren't disappointed on any of these counts. Our interpretations were sound. Our balloting totals were consistently ahead of the other networks' all night long (and in big, clear numbers that were easier to read). We even had a phone call from a press-association man asking us to keep our figures on the screen a bit longer so he'd have time to copy them. We obliged.

No occult formula accounted for the speed with which the returns were funneled into our 8-H election headquarters. But the long months of planning didn't hurt. It wasn't generally known, for example, that one of our Washington news editors traveled some 75,000 miles in 22 weeks to interview and hire 1,252 correspondents who'd be phoning up-to-the-minute returns on the big day. It was our most ambitious recruiting job since Toscanini put together the NBC Symphony Orchestra (for a program that originated in the same studio).

As a result, on the night of November 8 we had our own reporters in each and every county of a dozen key States (in addition to our direct coverage from capitals and major cities in other States) and each man had been chosen with great care.

Many of the tabulations destined for our studio 8-H originated in the strangest places. One of our correspondents stationed himself in a Honolulu bank building (where you'd expect to find all sorts of helpful tabulating machines), while another worked out of the Albuquerque High School cafeteria, where he was presumably handed the results on a tray.

AS FOR OUR VICTORY in the so-called "battle of the computers," it was never our intention to use the RCA 501 as anything but one more valuable tool in our election-reporting equipment. Thus, we announced its "feeling" about the Presidential race only when we felt it had absorbed enough data to make a meaningful forecast. It was, therefore, no accident that we were the only network to forecast a Kennedy victory with the very first announced projection.

The respect the average viewer feels for this sort of skilled professionalism — the same kind of quality we try to impart to the entertainment side of our programming as well as the more serious shows — was strikingly apparent during last summer's political conventions.

When the audience figures for those telecasts were toted up, NBC's public was 43 per cent larger than that of our closest rival and 183 per cent ahead of the other network.

More than a few of those percentage points could be attributed, of course, to a couple of fellows named Chet Huntley and David Brinkley. Working together with the closeness of a Damon and Runyon, these two knowledgeable, personable newsmen brought a bright new dimension to convention coverage.

But their supporting cast — meaning hundreds of newsmen, planners, directors, cameramen and technicians — wasn't fooling around, either. And the over-all impression created by all this splendid teamwork is certainly one of the reasons NBC has continued to dominate the news field ever since.

Even in "The Great Debate," where viewers knew they'd be seeing and hearing exactly the same thing—no matter which of the three networks they watched—NBC attracted by far the largest total audience.

Which means that for many millions of Americans, depending on NBC for news and public affairs programs has become a kind of conditioned reflex. This, we must confess, does not make us angry.

Today, just a bit more than a week after election night, the giant tally-boards already seem part of a fairly distant past. Studio 8-H shows no vestige of its November 8 trappings.

The only numbers on the premises now are of the musical variety; the commentators and tabulators, the messengers and typists have given way to teen-aged dancing couples; and the urgent rhythms of TV journalism have been succeeded by the sounds of music. For "Election Central" is now the scene of a cheerful, wholesome, teen-ager show called "Saturday Prom." Did we mention that versatility is one of our strong points, too?

WALDSTRASSE 20
With Friedrich Domin, Helmut Lange, Antje Weissgerber, Heinrich Gretler, Robert Freytag, Kurt Waitzmann, Kate Kuehl, Richard Muench, Friedrich Joloff, Friedl Schuster, others.
Producer: NRV-Harburg
Director: John Olden
Writers: Maria Matray, Answald Krueger
105 Mins.; Sun. 8:05 p.m.
W.-German TV, from Hamburg (film)

"Waldstrasse" rates as one of the more ambitious German vidpix. It has the length (105 mins.) of a normal feature film, cost 350,000 D-Marks (about $85,000), quite some money for domestic vidpic standards, employed a comparatively cast and a noted British cameraman and even moved to Stockholm for exteriors.

The plot, partly based on actual happenings during WW II, is interesting. It dates to Berlin 1944. Centrepoint of action is the exterritorial Swedish parsonage in the Reich capital, located at Waldstrasse 20. The Swedish priest here grants people persecuted by the Gestapo illegal shelter and manages to smuggle them out via false passports to neutral Sweden. When he becomes the victim of a "plane accident," for which high-rank SS officer is responsible, his successor continues his dangerous operation. The last bunch of political refugees (Jews, deserters, foreigners, etc.) is brought out by a Swedish Red Cross truck to the German coast where a Swedish steamer picks up the refugees.

Due to various improbabilities furnished by the otherwise also occasionally confusing script, this and that ring untrue in this offering. However, cannot deny that this is a very suspenseful show which even has spellbound character. This is mainly due to John Olden's experienced direction. He tends to exaggerate the thrilling situations but this isn't exactly a drawback here. Show is fast moving along and never dull. He even added some interesting documentary flavor via utilizing old newsreel footage (Allied air raids, an anti-Jewish speech by Goebbels in Berlin's Sportpalast.)

Cast includes a considerable number of locally w.k. players. The acting is not too exciting and often cliche as to the principal players yet there are several impressive supporting performances. Very good is the lensing by British Eric Cross. The score emphasizes the dramatic action.

In all, a common thriller but, within its category, a very good one. It has foreign possibilities.
